Mr. Simon Hughes: Of course I shall be brief.

The hon. Member for Bow and Poplar specifically raised matters which were not do with the technicality of the drafting, but real matters of substance and concern. I hope that it is not betraying any confidence—I am sure that it is not, because she has said it many times outside the House as well as inside it—to tell the House that the matter that she had at the top of her list was that she believed that her constituents were effectively promised that the extension to the docklands light railway would include a station at Island Gardens. She made it clear that they were effectively told that that was guaranteed. When the Bill was last before the House, that had not been delivered.

The hon. Member for Bow and Poplar raised a few other issues of equal importance, such as the lack of affordable housing on the Isle of Dogs, the lack of jobs for locals in the activities of the LDDC—a matter which I raise regularly on behalf of my constituents and which I am sure that my two colleagues do on behalf of theirs—delays in starting the Jubilee line extension and the specific local matter of the lack of access by the Docklands sailing club to a slipway.

I do not seek to persuade the hon. Lady of the unmitigated merits of the LDDC. She knows that that is not my view of it. I shall tell her the facts and leave her to decide whether what could have been achieved has been achieved. As she knows, on the key issue of Island Gardens station, outside forces have intervened—we hope, to help us all.

I am told that the corporation has contributed to the provision of 315 social housing units—homes, better called—in the hon. Lady's constituency at Timber wharves and 187 at Masthouse terrace. The corporation has also facilitated—I do not know quite what that means—65 self-build units at Maconachies wharf.

Ms Gordon: It is only fair to point out that the 300-odd houses that were provided at Timber wharf were built to replace 500 houses that were destroyed to make way for the Limehouse link. So that is not a fair way of putting it.

Mr. Hughes: The hon. Lady is right. I was not seeking to pretend otherwise. I remember that debate. It was extremely controversial.

Schemes have apparently been set up that would produce another 68 homes on another three sites on the Isle of Dogs. I should add from a personal point of view that there is a huge remaining need for affordable homes in Tower Hamlets, as there certainly is in Southwark and Newham. Affordable homes are needed to rent, for shared ownership and to own. We need many more of them. If we were led by need rather than demand, we would do better.

I will tell the House what the brief says about jobs. It says:

"It is not possible to quantify among the jobs created on the Isle of Dogs those which have gone to pre 1981 residents."

To be fair, I do not think that the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar was asking about pre-1981 residents. She was asking about residents whether pre-or post-1981. All that the corporation is clear about is that before 1981 there were 9,000 jobs on the island and now there are 20,000. Unemployment in Tower Hamlets is almost as bad, if not as bad, as unemployment in Southwark and Bermondsey. I know that many of the jobs that have been created in Southwark have not gone to people who live in Southwark, let alone to people who live in Newham or Tower Hamlets. Many people have been brought in and continue to be brought in. The hon. Member for Bow and Poplar and other colleagues must keep pressing within the law for much more commitment to delivering local employment possibilities for the remaining life of the LDDC.

Mercifully, the Jubilee line extension has now begun and work is well advanced. I welcome that, as I am sure the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar does. I am told that the Docklands sailing and watersports centre has permanent rights to the slipway. It is not a matter for the corporation. The sailing club is entitled to make arrangements with the watersports centre. I understand that Lord Cocks has written to the hon. Lady on that matter. I hope that she will be able now to facilitate the conclusion of that for the purpose that she wanted. That is perfectly reasonable.

The Chairman of Committees in the other place determined only last week in private business that the docklands light railway had given an undertaking to Parliament to build a new underground station at Island Gardens when the docklands light railway extension to Lewisham was built to replace the existing terminus station there. Docklands light railway and the corporation had proposed that Island Gardens station and Cutty Sark station on the other side of the Thames in the constituency of the hon. Member for Greenwich should be omitted from the scheme to reduce the capital costs of the project and ensure its financial viability.

The new station must now be built as part of the project. If it is not, docklands light railway will be in breach of an undertaking given to Parliament in 1992 when the enabling legislation was before the House. That means that £3.5 million of capital costs cannot be cut from the project as originally proposed. The conclusion is that if the docklands light railway extension goes ahead—we await an announcement—it will do so only with Island Gardens station as part of it. I know that the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar welcomes that confirmation of the undertaking and what the law says. All that we must do now is press the Government to make the DLR extension go ahead.

It would be wrong of me to take up further time to put my views about what is needed in docklands. I put them fairly succinctly on Second Reading. As long as there is a London Docklands development corporation—I did not support its creation—it is important that it responds to the needs of its community. The Bill seeks to give it the power to regulate safety within its area.

I hope that, on that basis, the House will support the Bill on Third Reading and allow it to go on its way towards the statute book soon. I have no doubt that we shall continue having debates about the merits of development of the docklands in London and about the best way forward, long after tonight. That is justifiable. I hope that that will not prevent our saying tonight that the Bill is a good thing which the House can support.

Mr. Raynsford: On the face of it, the Bill, which empowers the London Docklands development corporation to make byelaws to regulate the former docks area, should not be a complicated or controversial measure. There is wide agreement that new byelaws should be made that reflect the dramatic change in the character and use of the docks in the past 25 years.

In his speech on the Second Reading on 14 March, my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) described the transformation of the docks from a heavily policed working area surrounded by high walls, dock gates and high security to an area predominantly given over to leisure, public access and recreation. Other hon. Members who represent the docklands area, including my hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms Gordon) and the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), who has sponsored the Bill, echoed that view.

The new role of the docks calls for a different system of regulation or byelaws. On that point there is unanimity, but that is about as far as the unanimity reaches. The progress of the Bill through the House and the other place has been marked by controversy. It has raised many more questions than answers. It has unlocked an extraordinary number of skeletons, which have taxed the ingenuity of the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey when he tried to give us answers not only tonight but on Second Reading and in the intervening period.

[Mr. Raynsford]

The first question is whether it is appropriate to give the powers to regulate the docks to the LDDC. It has specific and special powers for the whole docklands area, but it is an unelected and unaccountable quango. Perhaps even more to the point, it is due to go out of existence within the next four years. Why we should go to such lengths—the Bill has taken an extraordinary time grinding its way through the parliamentary process—to give byelaw-making powers to a body which is about to be wound up is a cause for some astonishment.

Mr. Spearing: May I suggest to my hon. Friend that there is a simple answer to that. The Bill is not about giving byelaw-making powers to the LDDC. It is about giving such powers to its unnamed successors, albeit by affirmative order of the House, not the promoters of the Bill.

Mr. Raynsford: My hon. Friend makes a valid point. Indeed, I was about to say that the whole question leads immediately to the issue which has rightly exercised many hon. Members. It is the curiously worded—indeed, some might say injudiciously worded—clause 33 as it now is, previously clause 32, relating to the transfer of functions from the LDDC to its successors.

As previously drafted, the clause gave sweeping powers to the Minister to assign the functions of the LDDC with regard to the management of the former dock areas, and possibly much wider powers—not only management powers—to anyone chosen by the Minister, without any reference to Parliament.

On Second Reading, the Minister put forward an interesting and fascinating defence. He said that we should not get worked up about these draconian powers, because he already had them under existing legislation, and the clause was unnecessary. If that is the case, the question arises why the Government allowed their creature, the LDDC, to waste parliamentary time promoting an unnecessary clause. We never had an explanation for that one.

Clause 33, as it now is, is indicative of the whole sad, sleazy approach which the Government take to issues of public interest and accountability. It is born of the Government's enmity to democratically elected and accountable local authorities, which would naturally be the appropriate bodies to make byelaws and manage these areas for public recreational use. That would ensure not only consistency with the byelaws applicable in other local parks and recreation areas but continuity of management because, unlike the LDDC, the local authorities—the London boroughs of Tower Hamlets, Southwark and Newham—will continue to be there after 1998.

If the Minister contributes to this debate, he will undoubtedly argue that local authorities have not opposed the provisions giving those powers to the LDDC. The truth of the matter is that the local authorities would undoubtedly have been more than happy to assume responsibility for the management of the former dock areas if they had been given the resources to meet the potentially high costs of maintaining the docks, the dock walls and the dock gates.

The Government have given them no option. They squeezed their budgets year on year while lavishing £1.6 billion on the LDDC. If the three dockland boroughs had received a fraction of the sums paid to the LDDC, they would gladly and willingly have taken on responsibility for managing the docks—and I am sure that that is the case today.

What will happen when the LDDC is wound up? On Second Reading, the point was expressed most forcibly both by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) and the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey—I quote my right hon. Friend:

"the logic points to the return of not merely the land in docklands to the boroughs of which they are part, but to the management of the water and of the docks in whatever local authority boundary they fall."—[Official Report, 14 March 1994; Vol. 239, c. 678.]

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey made clear his preference—he has echoed it tonight—for the democratically elected local authorities to be the successor bodies. At the same time, he confirmed his inability to assure us that that would happen. He reported to the House that the Bill does not stipulate who should be the successor, because no decision has yet been taken. He expressed the hope that that might be clarified during the later stages of the Bill's passage. Those stages are now being completed, and we are no wiser.

Clause 33 makes it clear that the Secretary of State may, on an application from the LDDC, transfer these powers to any person. I am sure that the Minister will find the freedom to hand over these powers to whoever he wishes very convenient and agreeable. Indeed, who knows who he will propose? Those of us who have watched the lamentable way in which the Government sold out the public interest to Tory placemen and a few Tory placewomen, as well as rewarding contributors to Tory party funds, will rightly feel concerned that this could be yet another example of the confusion of public and private interest which has become such a hallmark of the Government.

The nub of the matter is that the management of the former docks area should be undertaken not by bodies which are not publicly accountable and do not have a responsible position, unlike democratically elected local authorities. The management of these areas and the byelaw-making powers should be given to bodies which can recognise the distinction between public and private interest, and which will be acting in the public interest.

The Minister, from a sedentary position, frequently quoted Lord Cocks, who is a member of the London Docklands development corporation. He will recall that I was not talking about the LDDC; I was talking about the successor bodies. If the Minister will give us an indication who the successor bodies will be, and whether they will be publicly accountable—whether they will be democratically elected—I will willingly give way to give him an opportunity of doing so.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Tony Baldry): I do not intend to engage in this debate, for the simple reason that this is the second time that we have debated the issue. As the hon. Gentleman acknowledged, this is a Bill within a narrow compass. It has taken up a considerable amount of time not because of any of the complexities in the Bill but simply because Opposition Members have dreamed up a number of fantasies with which they have wished to detain the House.

The Bill is more about Labour Members wishing to vent their spleen on the London Docklands development corporation. If the hon. Gentleman reads Hansard tomorrow, he will see that his points seem to suggest that LDDC could not distinguish between public and private interest. I challenge the hon. Gentleman to give any instance when the LDDC has not acted in the public interest.

Mr. Raynsford: The first instance that I shall give is the extraordinary way in which it has lavished large sums of public money on bankers, property developers and people who have contributed considerably to the personal profits of individual shareholders, many of whom are contributors to the Conservative party, but who have failed to meet their responsibility to meet the needs of the people of the Isle of Dogs.

If the Minister had gone to the Isle of Dogs in the local elections earlier this year, he would be only too well aware of the dangerous consequences of the neglect by the LDDC and his Government of the legitimate concerns and grievances of local people who have seen little benefit for all the sums of money which have been lavished on the LDDC.

I note that the Minister, in his response, sought immediately to change the subject of the debate. He did not want to answer my specific question whether there would be an undertaking that the successor body, which is what we are talking about, which would assume these byelaw-making powers, would be a democratically elected and accountable body. I note, and the House will note, the Minister's silence on that point.

The Minister claims that the delay in the Bill going through the House is because of Opposition Members. That is an absurd suggestion. The delay has been entirely to do with trying to sort out some of the technicalities which even now—even tonight on Third Reading—still have not been sorted out. How the Government can allow their creature, the LDDC, to bring forward legislation which includes a map identifying the Cody road balancing lagoon as one of the areas but cannot get a mention of it in the Bill is simply one more indication of the problems.

The issues of jurisdiction and areas of responsibility under the Bill are technicalities which rightly and properly should be identified by the House as part of parliamentary scrutiny. It is far from satisfactory, as we have recognised tonight, to have to allow a Bill to go through which is in some ways defective—some of the language is dubious, and there are discrepancies between the maps and the schedules—purely because there is no further opportunity to do anything about it if the LDDC is to have its powers in time for the summer.

As I have said, the nub of the matter is that management of the former dock areas should have been undertaken by democratically elected public authorities. At the very least, the three local authorities concerned—the London boroughs of Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Newham—should be given the first option of taking over these responsibilities from the LDDC.

I understand that the London borough of Tower Hamlets recently made representations to that effect, and I hope that the Minister will give a commitment to the House that the three local authorities will have the right of first refusal when the LDDC comes to transfer those powers. I look forward to hearing the Minister's response to that point.

While that issue has remained unclarified during the Bill's passage, other changes have been made which suggest that the Government's thinking points in a very different direction. I am referring to clauses 18 to 27, all of which have been inserted at the promoter's instigation in the last stage of the process under the heading "protective provisions". The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey was somewhat coy about those provisions and said that he had sought a briefing at the last minute on the reason for their insertion. In his usual elegant and carefully argued fashion, he gave us some sort of defence of those provisions. It was entirely unconvincing. Other than clarifying the position of certain other public authorities—the Port of London Authority, the City corporation and the Crown—the provisions merely grant extremely wide-ranging exemptions to certain commercial interests, in particular, Canary Wharf Investments Ltd. and its associated companies.

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey said that there was no distinction between the benefits offered to the various companies identified in the clauses. Clause 19, which is for the protection of Canary Wharf Investments Ltd., Canary Wharf Ltd., or Heron Quays Developments Ltd., has three subsections. Subsection (2) states:

> "The provisions of this Act and of any byelaw under this Act shall not apply to any land in which the company has . . . interest, or an entitlement to such an interest, without the consent in writing of the company."

Subsection (3) states:

> "Subject to any consent given under subsection (2) above, nothing in this Act or any order or byelaw made under this Act shall affect any rights, powers or privileges which are vested in, or enjoyed by, the company", and so forth.

Clauses 20 and 21, which deal with the protection of the Telegraph plc, West Ferry Printers Ltd., Mercury Communications Ltd., and Clippers Quay (Milwall) Management Company Ltd., contain much more restricted provisions. They apply only to byelaws, not to the provisions of the Bill, and there is no third subsection, as there is in the case of Canary Wharf Investments Ltd. Those people responsible for briefing the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey were economical, at the very least, in their briefing if they implied that the clauses contained similar treatment for similar organisations.

Mr. Simon Hughes: I hope that I have not misrepresented the views of those who briefed me. The negotiated position is certainly different for each of the landlords, and each clause deals with them differently. None the less, I hope that the hon. Gentleman will accept that the general rule still applies. It was hoped that all those organisations will sign up to the byelaws. They clearly did not, and the clauses in the Bill contain what they did not sign up to. It is certainly true that that is different for the different organisations.

Mr. Raynsford: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for confirming that. It shows that whatever Canary wharf wants the LDDC will bend over backwards to offer.

As we know only too well, the Canary wharf venture has been the great totem of the LDDC's activity. It proved only too clearly that throwing large sums of public money at private developers is not a guarantee of success. The Government frequently say that throwing public money at a problem is no solution. Heaven knows, they have thrown enough money at Canary wharf, and the building is still half-empty. It also proves that, because of the status and prestige associated with Canary Wharf Ltd., the LDDC will accept just about anything it requests to try to keep it happy. The Bill contains a clear sign of that.

Clause 19 provides that any byelaws made under the Bill shall not affect any land in which Canary Wharf Ltd. and its associated companies have a freehold or leasehold interest or an option without their agreement. The company has an absolute veto over any byelaws proposed by the LDDC, or its successors, which affect any of the land that the company controls.

As we know, that represents a substantial area, as it includes not merely the base of the huge 50-storey tower, but also the surrounding area and the Heron Quays site. The democratically elected local authority is not given any such power of veto. We already know the measures that Canary Wharf Ltd. has taken to restrict public access to the areas it controls. Roads are closed, and private security patrols abound. What hope is there for any rights of public access to those parts of the docks and the adjoining land surrounding Canary wharf owned by Canary Wharf Ltd. and its associated companies?

How can that position be reconciled with clause 7, which sets out a principle with which almost all hon. Members would agree? It specifies:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, it shall be the duty of the Corporation, in formulating or considering any proposals relating to its functions under this Act, to have regard to the desirability of securing and maintaining public access to the waterside."

That is a fine principle, but will it extend to Heron Quays and Canary wharf?

What guarantee can the Minister give that the private businesses that have received huge public subsidies to construct the half-empty offices that stand on their sites will not be allowed to put up the barriers and the "No entry" signs, thus entirely flouting the principle of "securing . . . public access to the waterside"?

The Canary wharf opt-out—that is what clause 19 allows—sets a very bad precedent indeed. As the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey said, there are similar, but not identical, opt-outs for other commercial interests—the Telegraph plc, West Ferry Printers Ltd., Mercury Communications Ltd. and Clippers Quay (Milwall) Management Company. If that is a blueprint for the future of docklands, it is a blueprint with which we are becoming all too familiar—a blueprint in which the public interest is always subordinated to the interests of the property developers, bankers and other private financial interests.

That is why, despite the £1.6 billion in public money that has been pumped in by the Government, docklands remains a tragically divided community, which is badly hit by poverty, unemployment and bad housing. It is an area in which the conspicuous consumption and glittering office blocks of those who have done well out of the LDDC stand in marked contrast to the unmodernised, bleak housing in which too many of the Isle of Dogs residents still have to live.

Sadly, that is why the evil of racism has been able to raise its ugly head in recent years, feeding off the justified resentment of long-standing local residents, who have received little or nothing from the huge cornucopia of riches lavished on the LDDC.

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey referred to the limited number of social homes provided by the LDDC in recent years. Those homes are obviously welcome, but in an area with such an enormous need for housing, where housing has become an important catalyst for social and racial conflict, any responsible organisation, exercising the sort of powers that the LDDC exercises, should study all the sites it controls to find out how many could be made available for local people in need of rented housing.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I recognise the hon. Gentleman's sincerity, but we are discussing the Third Reading of the Bill. He seems to be going well beyond the purposes of the Bill.

Mr. Raynsford: I shall return immediately to the provisions in the Bill. I was simply putting it in context and describing the LDDC and its failure to meet local needs, which gives rise to the suspicion that measures such as the Bill essentially provide yet further advantage for certain private interests, rather than serving the public interest or providing proper protection for the needs of local people. That is why, despite the fact that the monuments of the work of the LDDC have so markedly changed the landscape in east London, the body responsible remains profoundly unloved by local people and will be, when it is wound up, unlamented.

The Minister ought to ponder those points. After all the public money and the dramatic transformation of the physical appearance of the area, why is the responsible body treated with such suspicion and hostility by local people?

The tragedy is that opportunities have been wasted to secure the regeneration of the docklands, which was urgently required in the interests of the whole community, not just of one section. The Bill is in every respect typical of the whole process. There was an opportunity to create a new framework for the management and use of the former dock areas in the interests of the whole community, but sadly the opportunity has been squandered through the failure of the Government and the LDDC properly to distinguish between public and private interest, and by their unforgivable bias in favour of the latter.

We will not vote against Third Reading of the Bill, because we want to see the byelaw-making powers in place. We see, as everyone does, the advantage in having byelaws which will provide protection for public safety and will hopefully ensure better use of the water areas. It is not our intention in any way to delay that process. I am somewhat sceptical of the claim that the byelaws will be in place by this summer, and we will all look to see whether that pledge is honoured.

We will not oppose the Bill tonight, but we will look on it with sadness. Yet another opportunity has been missed by a body which has received so much public money and so much opportunity to change the landscape of east London for the good, but which, in practice, will disappear in two, three or four years' time, unloved and unlamented by the local residents.

Ms Gordon: The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) referred to many of the points which I made on Second Reading. I do not want to reiterate those points or to answer many of the questions which the hon. Gentleman raised regarding my Second Reading speech, except on the question of Island Gardens. My constituents were very glad that the hearing which took place before the Lord Chairman of Committees decided in their favour. We hope that the docklands light railway and the London Docklands development corporation will not try to find a way of wriggling out of their commitment again, and that the DLR extension will go ahead with an underground station at Island Gardens.

I wish to emphasise some of the points which were made by my hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford). The Bill has too many vague clauses. It concerns the management of a very large area—400 acres of water and 25 miles of paths. The Bill gives the LDDC powers to make byelaws, and to control dockside paths, the movement of vessels, pollution, parking and the landing and taking off of helicopters. In other words, it will have the same powers to make byelaws as local authorities.

The important difference, which has already been pointed out, is that local authorities are democratically elected and are subject to public pressure. The LDDC—as we know from our bitter experience—is not. It ignores public pressure and ignores the needs of the community. Clause 33 originally empowered the Secretary of State to transfer the "assets" of the LDDC, but the wording has now been altered to "functions". That is still too vague.

It is clear to me that the best body to ensure public enjoyment of the docks area and the best use of that great area of water which is now available for the benefit of the community is the local authority. The local authority has changed hands. The Liberal Democrat-controlled authority which existed before last May did object to the Bill but, after certain assurances, withdrew the objection.

The new administration feels that it has the best people to ensure the public enjoyment and the development of the area for the community, but it is wary of the cost of maintaining the docks. It does not want to take on the liabilities without any of the assets. It has been told that the dock walls, which are deep under the water and 100 years old, will cost a great deal of money to repair if they start to crumble. A study should have been done well before the presentation of the Bill to find out how much money would be needed to put the docks in good repair and what funding would be needed to maintain the walls.

I feel very much that, in two years' time when the LDDC ceases to exist, the local authority should have, as my hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich said, the first chance to take over the control of the designated area and of the byelaws. But it must be assured that the designated area will be endowed, so that it will have the money for maintenance. The question of funding is the only thing that would stop the local authority from wanting to take democratic control, as the area should be controlled. It must have the money to do the maintenance and development.

The Bill says that reasonable endeavours to secure local representation on a successor body must be undertaken, but that is not clear enough. Tonight we have not been told who the successor body should be. My constituents and those of other docklands areas will certainly want the powers to be handed over to the local authority, together with the money to carry out the development needed to maintain the docks and create a good environment for the enjoyment of local people and also to develop tourism, which would create jobs and benefit the area.

I am particularly worried about how the LDDC will manage the area. The answer on Shadwell park was not good enough. Nothing will stop the successor authority from swallowing Shadwell park for commercial development. The position is quite different for rich and powerful companies like Canary Wharf Investments Ltd. As I entered the Chamber tonight I saw that decisions were being made on the hoof under pressure from those rich and powerful companies. I was handed a document explaining why there should be protective provisions for those with private land ownership interests. It says:

"there would have been a substantial risk of compensation being forced to be paid against those whose private rights were adversely affected by the provisions of the Bill."

Mr. Spearing: I have not read the document, although I believe that it is publicly available. If those people thought that their private rights were affected by the terms of the Bill, it was open to them, if they thought fit, to petition. While I do not blame them for not doing so, that would have been the right procedure. Were not they informed of what was involved?

Ms Gordon: I do not know what went on behind the scenes. I was simply handed a document, which I assume comes hot off the press from the promoters. Those who are rich and powerful can request last minute changes to the Bill without going through the relevant procedures, but members of ordinary working communities can get no such guarantee about a park that is precious to them.

Mr. Simon Hughes: May I deal with the point raised by the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing)? Had the Bill not been amended, those in the protected provisions place, being fully aware of what was going on, would have had to petition. Had they petitioned, there would have been the mother and father of all battles because their private rights would have been affected and massive amounts of money would have had to be paid out. So the LDDC, thinking discretion the better part of valour, pulled back from making provisions in the Bill and decided that its original intention would be better avoided and thus a quieter life would be achieved for all.

Ms Gordon: I shall return later to the exemption of private companies, particularly relating to pollution. In the meantime, I am concerned about what charges will be made under the byelaws. After my speech on Second Reading, I received a letter from National Car Parks Ltd informing me that the LDDC wanted to charge it £1,175 per annum simply for putting up a sign directing motorists to its multi-storey car park at City harbour. After some discussion, the charge was reduced to £940 but NCP decided that it was not worth while. Consequently, many motorists do not know where the car park is.

If National Car Parks has been asked to pay such a large licence fee—in no other area has a local authority ever asked the company to pay a fee to put up a sign to direct motorists to its car park—what other charges will be made? What assurances have we that charges for water sports, for fishing rights, possibly for bringing one's chair —as the LDDC has refused to put down benches around the dock so that people can sit and enjoy the water, although I have asked many times—for use of a vessel, for use of the steps and for use of the jetties for landing, will not be made prohibitively great by the market-minded LDDC? If such large charges are made, only those people with a lot of money in their pocket will be able to use those facilities, whereas poorer people, pensioners, and youth —to whom the enjoyment and the development of water sports is especially important—will be forced out of the picture because they cannot afford them.

We have no assurance that access to the water and access to facilities will be affordable, and that the LDDC will develop facilities on the water and along the dockside. It has, in the past, given money for capital programmes —for building the docklands sailing centre, for instance —but the revenue to run them is never forthcoming. We want assurances that market forces will not lead whatever happens on the dockside.

The LDDC also has control of the landing and taking off of helicopters. If that will be profitable, will there be some type of floating landing pad on the docks, which will create more noise and more pollution for people in the area? I should like assurances that that will not happen.

To return to the subject of the private companies, one of the private companies is Westferry Printers, and I remind the House that it is stated that the powers of the LDDC over that area will include pollution. My constituents are so worried about pollution of water and air from printing works that they have formed an organisation called Londoners Against Media Pollution. The council, in the Wapping area, is conducting a very large study, carried out by the South East Thames health authority, on volatile organic pollution. I have met Westferry Printers staff. They assure me that they are doing their best to ensure that pollutants do not go into the water and that everything possible will be done, but I do not know how much is possible and how much is being done, and I do not think that a printing works, or any other company, should be exempted from any byelaws that seek to prevent pollution.

All in all, there are far too many question marks about the Bill. Far too many questions have not been answered. After years and years of the docks being industrial centres, we have a chance to make that area a wonderful place, where people can enjoy the water and water sports, which tourists can visit, and where developments that will benefit the whole community can take place.

We are putting those powers in the hands of an organisation that has already shown that it will not do that. It has shown that it does not develop things in the interests of ordinary people. The succession of those powers when the LDDC winds up is very much in the air. We have been given no assurance, and we do not know whether there is any chance of the local authorities obtaining the endowment and the powers to control the docks and paths, as I believe should be the case.

9.13 pm

Mr. Stephen Timms (Newham, North-East): On its foundation, the LDDC embarked on its regeneration remit with an approach that, in its early days at least, largely ignored the local communities where it was based. There were several instances of brick walls being built to keep apart the existing community and the new development and its incoming occupiers, who were the intended beneficiaries of it. That created enormous resentment, and two of the three local authorities withdrew their limited representation on the board of the LDDC in response.

In those early days it was a model of regeneration that excluded and ignored the local community and was not effective. In the middle of the 1980s, in Newham and elsewhere, there was a sea change in the approach. My predecessor as hon. Member for Newham, North-East was chairman of the Select Committee on Employment, which produced a report pinpointing the need for regeneration to provide demonstrable benefits for existing local communities. Others also made that point at the time, which led to changes in Newham.

In 1987 the council, with the corporation, drew up a memorandum of agreement about the benefits that would accrue to the existing communities as a result of what were at that time expected to be major developments. They included a commitment to secure 1,500 homes for rent as part of the development in the Royal docks, a target of 25 per cent. of all jobs created to be taken by local residents, towards which the local authority with the corporation and others would work.

The recession intervened and the developments have not yet materialised, but I believe that they will ultimately. It is essential that the commitments entered into and the targets set then are honoured. Occasionally we receive signs from the corporation that it may wish to renege on some of them, but I hope that that will not happen. The commitments were given and accepted on the basis that existing residents must benefit from the regeneration process. The position remains unchanged and it is important that those obligations are met.

From 1987 until a couple of months ago I chaired the negotiating team that worked with the corporation on behalf of the borough. There has been a change in the way that the corporation has approached its task—a change for the better. There is a good and constructive working relationship between the borough and the corporation. The borough has not objected to the Bill, despite some of its regrettable features, which have been drawn to our attention this evening. I shall not object to it, but I want to make a couple of observations.

Earlier this week I was delighted to read in the Evening Standard some comments by the chairman of the London Docklands development corporation which I endorse. He drew attention to two key Government decisions that are awaited and that will determine how quickly the corporation is able to get on with its task of completing the work in docklands. He said that the two decisions were "whether Stratford is chosen as the intermediate station for the Channel Tunnel rail link and which of the two proposed sites for a river crossing, Blackwall or the East London river crossing at Beckton"—

"are built."

I agree with him on both those points, but I particularly want to draw attention to the importance of the decision on the location of the channel tunnel station. The verdict is not yet in—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the hon. Gentleman continues, I should say that, while a certain amount of background is acceptable, the hon. Gentleman's remarks must home in more closely on the Bill's Third Reading.

Mr. Timms: I shall gladly do that, but I was glad to put on record my agreement with the chairman of the LDDC.

I was surprised to read in the Bill the long list of organisations and private owners who have opted out of the byelaws. The local authorities have accepted the pressing need for the byelaws to be drawn up in order to safeguard the public interest around the dock areas. My hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms Gordon) mentioned that one of the major polluters has been able to avoid the byelaws. That is alarming, and a great worry and disappointment.

Ms Gordon: I did not say that it was one of the greatest polluters. I said that constituents were concerned that the print works in Wapping were sending out pollutants and effluence, and that a study was being done to find out whether that was true. There are also print works in the designated area that are exempt from the byelaws.

Mr. Timms: I am grateful for that clarification. Certainly, exemptions undermine the Bill.

My point is that I believe that there is growing anxiety among Conservative Members about the damage being done to our social fabric by the fact that the market has been allowed to rip in a number of areas, including the development of docklands. The hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) concluded, in an interesting pamphlet on civic conservatism which he wrote recently:

"The crucial Tory insight is that a community has to be embodied in real institutions which are essential to sustain traditions, values and patterns of behaviour. A concern with the strength of Britain's institutions, both national and local, is at the heart of the Tory tradition. Addressing that concern is essential to representing the values of the quiet majority of the British people."

The London Docklands development corporation started out from a strain of thinking in the Conservative party that was firmly opposed to this outlook, but it is now gaining favour—

Mr. Oliver Heald (Hertfordshire, North): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the special measure, in the form of the LDDC, had to be taken because the councils surrounding the area, which had run it since the war, had neglected it and huge areas of docklands were lying waste? Going down Salter road in Bermondsey is a revelation these days compared with what it was like in 1978. Surely the hon. Gentleman will allow some credit for that.

Mr. Timms: I do not for a moment suggest that little has been achieved: a great deal has been achieved, although we might debate the mechanisms that may have led to those achievements. I repeat my point—increasingly recognised by Conservative Members—that it is extremely important that democratic institutions, locally acknowledged, play their proper role.

This Bill will give byelaw powers to the LDDC, but the crucial question that has been asked concerns what will happen once the LDDC goes—what will happen to the powers? Will local authorities continue to be sidelined, or will, as I hope, the powers be passed on to local authorities so that the vital role that local institutions play in our community of east London can be sustained?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Tony Baldry): I congratulate the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on his promotion of this private Bill and on the manner in which he has dealt with the points raised this evening. I also congratulate the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Timms) on what I think the whole House would consider to be a balanced and reasonable speech —standing in stark contrast to some other Opposition contributions on other occasions. One of the difficulties has been the seeming impossibility of Opposition Members ever giving credit for the many achievements that the LDDC has brought about in its part of London.

The Bill turns on a very narrow compass. It is generally agreed that it is a worthy Bill, worthy of a speedy passage. It has taken quite a long time to pass through its stages in the House, for a number of reasons. It should be delayed no longer, and I hope that the House will give it a speedy Third Reading.

9.23 pm

Mr. Spearing: The Minister has referred several times to how long this Bill has taken to proceed. In an exchange with my hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford), he even suggested that the motivation behind the speeches made by Opposition Members on these technicalities and amendments was "political". I remind the Minister of the technicalities that we dealt with tonight and the procedural matters dealt with largely on Second Reading. Of course there was an element of politics. My hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich dealt with those, correctly, from the Front Bench whereas some of us—notably my hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms Gordon), and myself on procedural matters—eschewed those aspects and dealt with procedural and legal matters that would be dealt with by the Minister if they were being applied to Banbury or Oxfordshire. Why not? That is what Parliament is about.

Although the LDDC has been successful in certain respects, we had difficulties dealing with the right sort of byelaw, procedure and schedule because the measure cuts across the grain of our historic, civic control of public amenity. What could be a greater public amenity than the docks of London?

I remind the House that the docklands light railway was initially agreed in principle by everyone—from Ken Livingstone to Sir Horace Cutler, and by every borough councillor of every party. It still does not run on Sunday.

Mr. Simon Hughes: And it still breaks down.

Mr. Spearing: It does not run on Sunday even when it does not break down—and if one travels from Beckton to the Bank, one must change twice.

A Bill that is ostensibly for the future should not raise more questions than it answers. Of course there must be byelaw powers to fill the vacuum left by the Port of London Authority, for a totally different function for the docks— but speaker after speaker has shown, not on a party basis but purely on a legal basis, what will happen in two years. Who will make the byelaws then, and what will be the areas? The Bill does not say. It allows flexibility in delineation of the designated area and flexibility of the determining authority. I will not say that it is non-legislation, but it is almost delegislation.

If the LDDC were a permanent body, we would know the answers to the questions that I suggested—but it ain't and we don't. I could hear in that phrase the voice of my former hon. Friend, Ian Mikardo. What a wonderful speech he would have made on such an issue.

The Bill does not take us far—two years ahead at most, and then it will be left to the Secretary of State. It is not a very satisfactory Bill.

The Bill had a rocky passage in both Houses. Some hon Members—I do not see many of them in their places tonight—talk about Parliament's arcane procedures. We have spent five hours today debating in the Chamber—never mind in Committee—a Bill which should not need debate of that sort.

We are told that parliamentary procedure is able to deal with an elephant and to pick up a pin. It is much better than people think. Even this little Third Reading debate, which revealed the procedural and political vacuums that exist, would have been impossible had not one hon. Member entered the Chamber at 2.30 pm a few weeks ago and said "Object." Of course that power can be abused, but it shows that there is goodness in procedure. It has allowed Members of Parliament representing east London to express the genuine concerns of their constituents and try to bring vision to the civic administration that is temporarily—I hope very temporarily—taken away from properly elected representatives, whether for Greater London or the boroughs concerned.

We hope that the vacuum will be filled after two years and that the questions will be answered largely by civic accountability, civic enterprise and the return of democratic government in east London.

9.29 pm

Mr. Simon Hughes: With the leave of the House, Madam Deputy Speaker, I shall reply.

The hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) made a valid point about public access throughout docklands, and planning permission. I think I am correct in saying that, in granting planning permission, the corporation has required public access wherever possible: that has been its policy.

I checked to find out whether special treatment was given to the companies listed in part III of the Bill, and the answer is no. Anyone with a private interest who is in business has a right over the land along Waterside.

There is no public access there, but it has been granted in every other area owned by the corporation where such access is possible. So far, if the owners of land have not wanted public access to be granted, they have always been able to insist that it should not be granted. I agree that in some cases it should have been granted, but at least the arrangements have been consistent.

Local authorities have not been included in the list of protected organisations, because they do not now own any land in the designated areas: whether they liked it or not, it was all vested in the development corporation. Clause 9(4), however, states:

"Byelaws shall not be made under this section which relate to—

(a) land forming part of a highway maintainable at the public expense, without the consent of the highway authority"— which is the local authority—

(b) land which is a walkway" within the meaning of the current legislation,

"without the consent of the borough council".

In no circumstances can byelaws override the local authority's rights as highway authority or council.

I have dealt with the specifics of the argument advanced by the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms Gordon) about private companies, and also checked the point about private homes, as opposed to big developers. Apparently, no private, individually owned homes were given rights where a walkway existed. The hon. Lady rightly mentioned areas that management companies own where there is a walkway; the protected list in part III includes some management companies which go on to let individually owned homes with a freehold. Clippers Quay (Millwall) Management Company Ltd. is an example. However, I understand that no individually owned home has been given a walkway to which it has been able to withhold public access.

I also entirely share the hon. Lady's view about charges. The Bill goes as far as Bills normally do—we can only hope that it goes far enough—in saying:

"The Corporation may make, demand and recover" only such charges as are reasonable. We must ensure that it never imposes charges that are unreasonable for our constituents and other users—and that includes even nine-year-old kids. We would have the right to challenge any such charges.

I agree with the hon. Lady that we do not want a floating helipad, and I understand that the corporation does not want one either. The proposal does not seem to be floating very well itself! I am sure that we all hope that it will not come to anything. If it does, it will not be because the corporation wanted the helipad; to be fair, it has opposed them in the past, and my constituency, at least, has never had one.

I know that pollution is an important issue in the hon. Lady's constituency. In general terms, it is not intended that the byelaws should deal with pollution, and the exemptions for Canary wharf and, more importantly, the printing companies listed in the protective provisions will in no way be to the detriment to the hon. Lady's constituents. Those companies are not exempted from the general provisions governing pollution.

It has been brought to my attention—and I hope that the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar will be encouraged by this—that clause 14 states:

"Section 161 of the Water Resources Act 1991 (anti-pollution works and operations) shall have effect in relation to the designated areas as though references to the Authority included references to the Corporation."

The statute law, therefore, will still govern the area. The hon. Lady's constituents and mine, and those of our colleagues, have the right to turn to the law and instigate proceedings under different environment legislation; they do not have to get someone else to do it for them. There is no reduction in the right to control pollution. Whether that legislation is good enough is a different question and the corporation does not intend to introduce byelaws.

Mr. Raynsford: If I heard the hon. Gentleman correctly, he said that the byelaws were not intended to be made for the control of pollution. May I refer him to schedule 3, which lists the purposes for which byelaws may be made and which includes at least three paragraphs that seem to be directly related to pollution? Paragraph 5 deals with the prevention of nuisances, which have always been interpreted as pollution. Paragraph 13 deals with the control of noise, which again is a pollutant. Paragraph 24 relates to the removal of rubbish and sewage, which is certainly a pollutant. I had understood that the byelaws would at least be concerned with such pollutants. I was somewhat surprised that he indicated that they were not a matter for the byelaws.

Mr. Hughes: The hon. Gentleman is right. I hope that the record will show that I said that, in general terms, the byelaws are not intended to deal with pollution. He is right —noise, nuisance and specific forms of rubbish are in the schedule and so, for example, leaving rubbish bags out and industrial dumping of rubbish will be governed. It is not intended, however, that general anti-pollution legislation should be made under byelaws. Air pollution and water pollution are governed by the general law of the land.

I was trying earlier to assure the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar that the people have the right to challenge air and water pollution by a local firm. They do not need the National Rivers Authority or anyone else to take a local discharger of polluting materials to court. The hon. Lady, the hon. Member for Greenwich or I and anyone else could do that. The hon. Member for Greenwich is right—some express purposes are included in the Bill and, in a wide sense, noise and nuisance are a form of pollution.

The hon. Lady dealt with the endowment when power is handed over from the docklands corporation to successor authorities. I am told that surveys have been conducted into the condition of various parts of the dock estate in Tower Hamlets, as well as in Newham and Southwark. The local authority in Tower Hamlets has received all such surveys —I trust that the information that I have been given on that is correct—and negotiations are taking place in Tower Hamlets, Newham and Southwark on the succession. Those in Southwark are the most advanced.

It would be impossible to hand over control to an authority that was unwilling to receive such powers unless a deal were struck and another quango were set up, which the Government could tell to take over the body. This is an important matter and may deal with the points made by the hon. Member for Greenwich. I am instructed that there is no intention that another quango will be set up to replace the docklands corporation. The hon. Member for Greenwich says, "Thank God for that".

Mr. Spearing: Although we are on Third Reading, questions remain. Obviously, a residual authority is required to tie up the ends—one was required with the Greater London council. Some coherent, public authority will be needed to manage dock areas, whether they be the west or the south, the Greenland dock or the Royal docks. The Royal docks management authority has been mooted. Surely that will be an offshoot of the borough council and not a quango.

Mr. Hughes: The hon. Gentleman is right to raise that issue. I am not seeking to read the mind of Government or that of the corporation, but the prospective successor authorities include in some places the local authority—that is certainly the intention in Southwark and I know that the matter is being negotiated this year. It could be a private owner, something that I understand is being debated in some areas north of the river; or it could be a community trust; and there may well be other agencies such as that to which the hon. Gentleman alluded.

My point is that, unless the successor authorities are the creatures of Government and the Government can tell them what to do, they will not—unless they are mad—take on the responsibility of enforcing the quality-of-life requirements in Tower Hamlets, Newham and Southwark unless someone gives them the money to do so. Therefore, the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) and the hon. Members for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) and for Bow and Poplar need to ensure that the necessary deal is done. I am sure that the hon. Lady's local authority and Newham and Southwark local councils will also be active in ensuring that it is.

The hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Timms) asked what would happen to the byelaw-making powers after the corporation has gone. The answer is that they will remain—their life will be much longer than that of the corporation. If the Bill is passed, the corporation's successor authorities will be able to change byelaws, but those byelaws will last longer than the corporation.

In response to the Minister's points, I must point out that the Bill has not been before both Houses for an excessively long time. It was in another place from January to December 1993 and has been before this House since December, which is a relatively short time for a private Bill.

The hon. Member for Newham, South spent a few minutes talking about the nature of the Bill. I suppose that, after all these debates and all these words, it is only an enabling Bill after all. However, I hope that even so the House will give it a Third Reading.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read the Third time, and passed, with amendments.

M25 (Noise Pollution)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn—[Mr. Patnick.]

9.41 pm

Sir George Gardiner (Reigate): I have been a Member of Parliament long enough to remember when between junctions 8 and 10 there was no M25 at all. When its opening was delayed because the concrete surface cracked, there was considerable impatience among my constituents, so the partial opening in 1985 was greatly welcomed. It linked up with the further section to junction 7, and so took a great deal of heavy traffic from the A25, weaving its way —to the detriment of our environment—through the towns of Reigate and Redhill and the villages in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth).

However, no sooner was this section of the motorway in use than complaints rolled in about the noise generated by its brushed concrete surface. They came not only from those living within a 300 m band on either side, such as the populous Merstham estate and the relatively rural area of Mogador to the south and the nearer reaches of Walton-on-the-Hill to the north, but from whole communities beyond, which complained of the constant whine, or hum, from the motorway. Their case is well documented in letters to me from Tadworth's local councillor, John Chiles. As the volume of traffic using the motorway has increased over the years, so too has the constant background whine, day and night.

There were public demands for the concrete to be replaced by tarmac, which everyone judged to be quieter. At first, the Department of Transport claimed that there was no appreciable noise difference—brushed concrete just seemed louder to those driving over it, officials claimed. But that argument did not hold water for long, and it is now generally recognised that porous asphalt produces less noise than hot rolled asphalt, and far less noise than a brushed concrete surface.

At the risk of using technical language, I must get this point on record. The use of porous asphalt, as compared with brushed concrete, achieves a reduction of 6 decibels in dry road conditions and a reduction of 10 decibels in wet road conditions. In human subjective hearing terms, a 100 decibel reduction would be perceived as being half as loud. That is the penalty that those living nearby have to pay for the use of a brushed concrete surface. Small wonder that the call to switch to porous asphalt is growing all the time.

In this debate, I am concerned with noise pollution, but there are other advantages in using porous asphalt. For drivers using the motorway, it decreases spray production in wet weather, cuts down glare, and decreases the risk of aquaplaning. All these are road safety factors, which I know loom large in the mind of my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic. Porous asphalt is also increasingly being used in a wide range of climates in continental Europe. Yet in Britain its considerable advantages seem not yet to have been accepted.

So what is the argument against using porous asphalt? The principal argument over the years has been that it is much more expensive than brushed concrete. As recently as 10 June this year, the chief executive of the Highways Agency claimed to me in a letter that porous asphalt "is a more expensive type of road surfacing".

Yet that myth had already been exploded by my hon. Friend the Minister himself, in a written answer to a question from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 7 March 1994, which is recorded at column 1 of the Official Report.

Asked to compare the cost per mile of surfacing a four-lane motorway with porous asphalt with that of surfacing it with concrete, my hon. Friend replied that the approximate cost per mile of laying a typical concrete road was £1,750,000, and of laying porous asphalt only £345,000. In other words, porous asphalt is more than five times cheaper. I hope that by now that information has filtered down to the Highways Agency.

In fact, the case that porous asphalt is quieter has already been accepted by my hon. Friend's Department, yet, because of the mythical "high cost" factor, its use has been authorised only for sections of the motorway that pass through highly populated areas. Thus, the use of porous asphalt has been agreed near the more densely populated Ashtead in Mole Valley, and a short stretch alongside Merstham in my own constituency. Unless a change is announced by my hon. Friend tonight, those living within audible reach of the remaining sections will continue to suffer from the brushed concrete surface.

Yet all that section will shortly be expanded from three lanes in each direction to four. That will be with the blessing of Surrey county council, and indeed with my blessing, too. What a marvellous opportunity the widening presents to scrap the concrete surface altogether and replace it with quieter—and cheaper—porous asphalt.

The Highways Agency recently announced its proposal to widen the M25 between Sevenoaks—junction 5—and junction 7, with the M23. I understand that no concrete at all is to be used on that section. The Department has also decided to replace concrete with porous asphalt on a 12 km section of the M23 south of its interchange with the M25. I welcome that decision, but ask how it can be squared with a decision not to lay porous asphalt over the sections of the M25 with which I am concerned.

The total number of houses within the 300 m band over that 12 km section of the M23 is 271, which works out at a density of 23 houses per km. Let us compare that with the sections of the M25 between junctions 8 and 10, which under present plans are not to have porous asphalt. We find that the density of houses per kilometre is identical—23. Thus, the rationale for providing porous asphalt is the same for the M25 as it is for that section of the M23.

Even more telling is the fact that, when that density of houses along the section of the M23 which is to be given a porous asphalt surface is compared with the density of homes which are not benefiting, so far, from porous asphalt between junctions 7 and 8, we find that the density of homes in the 300 m band is 80 properties per kilometre as compared with 23. Thus, the case for giving the noise benefit deriving from porous asphalt to that stretch is overwhelming.

I can understand my hon. Friend setting his face against the logic of the case if there was no immediate question of rebuilding the highway, but that is not the case. The motorway must be reconstructed anyway to provide four lanes. So, in the interests of all those residents, not to mention the thousands who live just beyond the 300 m band, I urge my hon. Friend to seize this opportunity and to make a major contribution towards easing the level of noise pollution emanating from that section of the M25.

9.50 pm

Mr. Peter Ainsworth (Surrey, East): I congratulate my hon. Friend and constituency neighbour the Member for Reigate (Sir G. Gardiner) on securing this debate, and also thank him for enabling me to make a brief speech.

He has chosen to focus on the widening proposal for a section of the M25 between junctions 7 and 10. A small part of that stretch falls in my constituency. I have corresponded with my hon. Friend the Minister over the concerns raised by the White Hill residents association and others, who have already argued for the use of porous asphalt to protect their homes from the increased noise which will occur as a result of the widening scheme.

A much greater number of my constituents are concerned with the Highways Agency's proposals for the stretch between junctions 5 and 6. My hon. Friend will know that a number of local representatives are seeking a meeting with him to discuss their concerns. For these residents, and for those, of course, who live between junctions 7 and 10, there are many anxieties—air pollution, light pollution, the safety implications of narrower lanes, surface water contamination, and the effect on side roads of newly generated traffic. But by far the greatest concern is the prospect of even higher levels of noise intrusion.

When the M25 was first proposed, the Department of Transport said that, if the bunds and noise barriers were not good enough, they would be expanded and extended. Although traffic flows and noise are much higher than originally envisaged, with a daily traffic flow of 110,000 vehicles against a design capacity of 79,000, nothing has been done.

To make matters worse, although local people are already suffering from a level of noise which many find unacceptable, they can expect a further 50 per cent. increase in traffic, with seriously inadequate noise protection.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate: the widening of the motorway presents an excellent opportunity for noise levels to be restored to those which were expected when the road was built. Higher bunds and noise barriers, together with porous asphalt, would achieve that, and, in the process, they would restore the faith of my constituents in the Department.

I pay a sincere tribute to my hon. Friend the Minister, and to his officials, who worked so closely with local people when dealing with the widening of the M23. As my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate has said, it has been found possible to introduce porous asphalt throughout the length of the stretch of that motorway which is being widened.

The M25, of course, is a far busier, much noisier motorway. It affects a far larger number of homes, yet there are no plans at all to lay porous asphalt at present, as I understand it, on any of the stretch of the motorway which runs through my constituency. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to reflect on that and to consider the great concern and hostility among my constituents.

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Robert Key): I start by congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Sir G. Gardiner) on initiating the debate tonight. I am grateful that he has given me the opportunity to explain some of the finer points of porous asphalt and just how much my officials in the Department of Transport and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and I mind about the quality of life of people who have to live near roads. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth) for his kind remarks about the care with which my officials have worked with local people on the widening of the M23. I hope that, after my words tonight, he will feel a little more reassured about the M25. We shall see.

I fully understand the concern of my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate, who has spoken so powerfully on behalf of his constituents who are affected by noise from the M25. I recognise fully how distressing traffic noise can be, especially when a new road is built through an otherwise quiet area—the area which my hon. Friend represented when he was first elected to the House. Noise can be an abomination. I live in the depths of the Wiltshire countryside and, ironically, the noise from the trunk road that passes my bedroom window is considerably greater than the noise in central London. That is not a common perception.

We must, however, face up to the facts. The M25 is the busiest road in the country. It is essential for both the national and the local economy. It connects all the major radial routes to London, the southern ports, the airports and the channel tunnel. Congestion on parts of the motorway is encouraging traffic back into towns and villages around the motorway, bringing pollution and noise and making the roads more dangerous.

If nothing is done to improve the capacity of the motorway to take the increased traffic, those towns and villages will suffer even more from traffic trying to avoid motorway congestion. That would cause a return to the conditions which the motorway was built to relieve. Of course I understand that my hon. Friend's constituents do not see it that way, but when I travel the country I realise that, from a national perspective, the M25 is seen as the London bypass. It is therefore important for the economic well-being of the country that we ensure that the bypass is up to standard and able to support the wealth-creating sectors of our economy. Roads and villages that are quiet now will increasingly become rat runs—which can only be bad for residents, pedestrians, local motorists, businesses, and of course the environment and everyone's health and safety. It is to help to stop that happening that we propose improvements.

The section of the motorway between junctions 7 and 8 which runs through my hon. Friend's constituency is currently dual three lanes. It was designed to carry up to 79,000 vehicles per day. Peak-time flows are currently about 110,000 vehicles per day. The case for widening this very busy stretch speaks for itself.

The widening which started in March this year is to dual four lanes and is within the existing highway boundaries. Hard shoulders will be provided over most of the length. The cost of the works is about £45 million. The opportunity is also being taken to replace the existing yellow lighting through junction 7 with the glare-reducing lanterns which keep light spillage within the highway boundary. That type of lighting will also be used for the remainder of the stretch, for lighting is also a serious pollutant, particularly to those who live in the countryside. Fortunately, technology is helping us, and we shall take full advantage of it, by using a more friendly kind of light and a better-designed light fixture, which will allow those who prefer the darkness of the countryside to have a better chance of enjoying the peace and quiet of the countryside in the darkness if they so wish.

Where possible, the existing landscape is to be retained and improved. Large areas of additional planting are proposed. Planting will be with indigenous species and designed to blend the scheme visually, and ecologically, into its surroundings. As both my hon. Friends have vividly described, the main concerns of the residents following the public consultation centred on the existing noise from the motorway and the likelihood of it increasing with the addition of more traffic lanes. Extensive additional acoustic fences were included in the widening proposals, and the residents and the local councils considered that further measures were required, especially in the Merstham area. The proposed level of mitigation was reviewed and enhanced noise mitigation measures were announced in the decision letter issued in July last year. The enhancements include more than 2 kilometres of additional acoustic fences and raising the height of some of the existing ones.

Once upon a time, I was but an innocent motorist. I thought that a road was a road, and that the road surface was the road surface; now I know differently—it is the pavement. I now know that road surfaces matter a great deal. I shall address some of the technical arguments put by my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate.

I must point out that the costs quoted in the parliamentary answer which he mentioned—

It being Ten o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Patnick.]

Mr. Key: The costs quoted in the parliamentary answer to which my hon. Friend referred were right, but the costs for the concrete section related to total reconstruction of the road. The costs for porous asphalt were for resurfacing only. I have had to learn the hard way—by pounding the motorways of this country—about these things. I now understand that the cost per mile of laying different substances for the pavement varies enormously and, therefore, I am not at all surprised at the variations which my hon. Friend quoted.

There are many engineering and accountancy elephant traps in these matters because the cost of laying certain materials is not the same as the cost of the entire reconstruction work. Furthermore, the life of different surfaces varies. The life of porous asphalt is comparatively short—it may be as short as five to seven years—whereas a concrete surface can last more than 20 years. Those are some of the sums which I invite my hon. Friend to consider, perhaps in his bath tomorrow when he will undoubtedly have the benefit of Hansard to refresh his memory.

It is also important to recognise that my Department cannot simply lay new asphalt if there is still life in the existing concrete pavement. Often, it is true that the existing concrete pavement has been agreed as a noisy road surface, for which substantial payments have been made to those nearby in compensation already, and a double payment would not please the Public Accounts Committee.

My hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East said that some of his constituents wish to come and discuss these matters with me. I will be delighted to see him, with representatives of his constituents, at the earliest convenient moment, and perhaps we can discuss that tomorrow.

The scheme includes the reconstruction of the carriageway around junction 7, which is nearing the end of its life, and provides for the reconstruction of the existing asphalt surface in conventional hot-rolled asphalt. Following requests from residents and local authorities for the use of a quieter road surface, porous asphalt surfacing is being used on a trial basis in the densely populated Merstham area.

Commercial vehicle flows on that section are high. Porous asphalt surfacing has not been used extensively on heavily used roads in this country and evidence of its durability is limited. In addition, it is more expensive than other surfacing materials and has a shorter life, so all the noise and dust of resurfacing would come round sooner.

My officials leave no stone unturned in the search for improved technology of pavements. Recently, I visited Italy to discuss these matters with my opposite number in the new Italian Government, and to visit Autostrada headquarters in Florence—a great hardship it was, too, as the House will imagine. We also pounded the Italian motorways looking at road surfaces and how they do it. Undoubtedly, we will have learnt from them, and they from us.

The section that is to be surfaced with porous asphalt will extend from Gatton Bottom in the west, through the Merstham built-up area to Pendell wood, east of junction 7. Pendell wood was chosen as the eastern termination point because the recent carriageway reconstruction ended there.

We considered carefully the requests from the While Hill residents association to extend the use of porous asphalt by a further 300 m eastward from Pendell wood to the White Hill bridge. We could not justify that as an additional expense when weighed against the likely costs of compensation and noise insulation measures which we may incur.

Following the publication of the environmental statement for the widening scheme between junctions 8 and 10 earlier this year, Reigate and Banstead borough council drew attention to discrepancies in the predicted noise levels at the point where the two schemes abut at Mogador, just west of junction 8. The consultants involved have investigated the apparent discrepancies and it has been established that the predicted noise levels at Mogador, which were quoted in the junctions 7 to 8 statement, were too low.

In recognition of the predicted higher noise levels in the Mogador area, higher noise fences will now be incorporated into the current junctions 7 to 8 widening works to reduce noise further in the area. Residents affected in the Mogador area were informed of those changes last week.

As a precaution, noise levels were reassessed for the whole scheme, which has resulted in a slight upward movement in some of the figures. Because of the extensive mitigation measures already included in the scheme, including bunds and noise fences, with one exception—Dell house at Merstham—that does not trigger the offer of further insulation, over and above that already proposed.

In calculating the noise levels at Merstham, no account has been taken of the porous asphalt surfacing because it is being used on a trial basis only. That surface treatment will, however, reduce the existing and future noise levels by about 4 decibels, which is a substantial improvement; that is in addition to the benefits obtained from the bunds and fences.

Unfortunately, and perhaps inevitably, there have been some complaints about construction noise from the widening works near the main residential areas of Merstham. The contractor has now been told not to operate large plant at night. Strict noise limits are set on the works contractor's operations and agreed with the environmental health officer. Wherever possible, work is carried out behind existing noise fences and earth bunds. Lower speed limits through contraflow systems on the motorway during construction should also lead to a small reduction in traffic noise.

Proposals for widening the section between junctions 8 to 10, to dual four lanes within the existing highway boundary, were published in February. I am pleased to take the opportunity of this debate to announce the results of that public consultation. More than 200 people submitted written comments to the Department and all the opinions expressed were considered carefully. Many issues were raised but, as my hon. Friend pointed out, noise was the issue that caused most concern. We have decided to proceed with the widening of the M25 between junctions 8 and 10 generally, as described in the environmental statement. I am pleased to say that we have been able to increase the height of some of the barriers and provide extra barriers in certain areas.

I fully understand the concerns about traffic noise expressed by many of those who live close to that section of the M25. The published proposals accordingly included extensive noise fencing to reduce the noise impact of the scheme and the provision of porous asphalt through the Leatherhead area, where there would be benefits for a considerable number of people.

In addition to noise barriers, the effects of the widening works will be moderated by retaining as much as possible of the existing motorway landscape planting and earthbunding, and by new planting. To complement that planting, the scope for tree and shrub planting on land in private ownership outside the motorway boundary will also be considered. Many of the existing noise barriers will be replaced.

During the construction period, every effort will be made to minimise disruption and disturbance to local people and the local environment. The construction contract will include limits on noise levels and access routes. The length of time between the removal of existing noise fencing and the erection of replacement fencing will be kept to a minimum. Temporary fencing will be erected at the start of works, to protect the existing planting.

As has already been made clear to the House, the greatest concern expressed during public consultation was about the levels of traffic noise currently experienced by people living close to the motorway and the potential increase in noise from a widened motorway. Many people considered that the proposed provision of a porous asphalt carriageway in the Leatherhead and Ashtead gap should be extended elsewhere along that section of the motorway. I considered carefully all the representations made, but the existing surface is in good condition and, other than in the Leatherhead section, that part of the motorway passes through scattered and sparsely populated areas, with the notable exceptions of some small communities, including Downside and Walton-on-the-Hill. The proposed noise fences will help in those areas, but I am afraid that extending the provision of porous asphalt cannot be justified at this time.

However, when the carriageway is in need of major maintenance, the use of porous asphalt or other noise reducing surfaces will be considered. Porous asphalt is a well-known low-noise surfacing, but there are others. My hon. Friend the Member for Reigate referred to the noise of ridged concrete on our motorways. We are all familiar with that when driving a car and changing from surface to surface. It can be very noisy for the driver of the car, and it can be even worse for a person who has to sit near it all day and who sometimes has to endure it in the wet, which can be even noisier.

I had to learn about the different tones which emanate from the different kinds of surfaces. I am delighted to report that technology is again on our side, and it marches on. There is a new substance called "whisper concrete" which we are trialling on the M18 in Humberside. I visited the trial site, pounded up and down the M18, stood beside it, listened and looked at it from all angles. I listened to the advice of experts, and it is true—it is a very quiet surface. It has been used extensively elsewhere in Europe.

We hope very much that we will be able to use it more widely here. We have a second trial on the A564 in the east midlands under construction at present. Initial sings from the first trial are encouraging and we are carefully monitoring how it performs on noise, skidding and durability. The skidding point is very important. We can build an almost silent surface for a road, but if one then puts a car on it, it will skid all over the place, which is very dangerous. We have to get the balance right. We hope to take decisions on the wider use of "whisper concrete" very shortly.

It will be of enormous benefit if technology has triumphed, because that surface will have a much longer life than porous asphalt. If we get it right, the surface noise generated will be about as quiet as porous asphalt 2. Details of the additional mitigation measures are given in the decision letter, which will be published tomorrow. We will now invite tenders for the design and construction of the widening works which are expected to start next spring.

On the proposals for widening westwards between junctions 12 and 15, I would like to assure the House that I am fully aware of the strength of feeling about our proposals for adding three-lane link roads to each side of the motorway between those junctions. That is the busiest stretch of road in the country and additional capacity for this section is needed if the motorway is to continue to function effectively.

Many have said that they would experience considerable difficulty in preparing for the public inquiry before the end of the year, as is currently anticipated. I fully appreciate their concerns. It is a very complex scheme and these are important issues. Therefore, in the light of those representations, I have decided that the public inquiry will not now start this year. An announcement on an actual start date will be made as soon as practicably possible.

I have also received representations from my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Sir M. Grylls) on behalf of his constituents who are seeking an extension to the objection period for the draft compulsory purchase order which ends tomorrow. Since the public inquiry will not now start this year, I will of course be prepared to receive objections after tomorrow. I look forward to discussing those matters—no doubt at great length—with my hon. Friend.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at thirteen minutes past Ten o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 15 July 1994

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MADAM SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

Sorting Office (Abbey Wood)

9.34 am

Mr. John Austin-Walker (Woolwich): I have a petition which was signed over the past weekend by more than 1,800 residents of Abbey Wood who are concerned that cost cutting has been put before public service. The petition

Sheweth that the Royal Mail proposes to close the Abbey Wood Sorting Office and relocate in Thamesmead; that the present office is easily accessible to Abbey Wood residents and is served by both buses and British Rail; that the Thamesmead office is not served by public transport, is located on a dual carriageway without pavements and that its relocation would cause great hardship, particularly to elderly and disabled people and parents with young children.

Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your honourable House will urge the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to review the proposed closure in the hope that he will take into account the overwhelming local opinion against this proposal.

To lie upon the Table.

Toxocariasis

9.35 am

Mr. Paddy Ashdown (Yeovil): I have the privilege to present a petition on behalf of my constituent Mrs. Debbie March, whose son Eric was blinded as a result of toxocariasis. He is one of about 100 children who suffer from blindness or serious disease of the eye every year as a result of dog mess. She believes, as do I, that we could prevent the problem by introducing a system of dog registration. The petition says:

To the House of Commons

The petition of citizens of the United Kingdom who declare that there is a danger of dirty parks and greens, stray dogs being put to sleep and a disease called toxocariasis for which there is no cure.

The petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons think again about dog registration and the petitioners remain, and so on.

To lie upon the Table.

Orders of the Day

Merchant Shipping (Salvage and Pollution) Bill

Lords amendments considered.

Clause 1

SALVAGE CONVENTION, 1989 TO HAVE FORCE OF LAW

Lords amendment: No. 1, in page 2, line 5, at end insert—

("(7) A draft of an Order in Council proposed to be made by virtue of subsection (3) above shall not be submitted to Her Majesty in Council unless the draft has been approved by a resolution of each House of Parliament.")

9.36 am

Mr. David Harris (St. Ives): I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Before I deal with amendment No. 1, I should like to begin by paying a tribute, and giving my thanks, to Lord Donaldson—I see many of my colleagues clutching copies of his report "Safer Ships and Cleaner Seas" in their hands; undoubtedly, they will be referring to it—and Lord Mustill, who assumed stewardship of the Bill in another place. Both of them put the wealth of their knowledge of maritime law to the service of the Bill, and I am grateful for that. Two Ministers in another place, Lord Mackay, the Minister for Aviation and Shipping, and Baroness Trumpington for the Department of National Heritage—there is an amendment touching on national heritage matters which we shall come to later—also tabled useful amendments which I hope will commend themselves to the House.

None of the amendments affects the policy aims of the Bill earlier agreed by the House. Indeed, the amendments would ensure that those aims are met. Amendment No. 1 makes subordinate legislation made under clause 1 subject to parliamentary control. Clause 1 would permit the implementation and ratification of the 1989 international convention on salvage. As my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway) explained to the House on Third Reading, the aim of the salvage convention is to encourage salvors to get, and to stay, involved in salvage operations when there is a threat of marine pollution. The convention does that by assuring salvors that when there is a threat of pollution, they will at least recover their expenses. Of course, that will give them a great incentive to see a job through, or at least to attempt to salvage a vessel in difficult circumstances.

Clause 1 (3) allows any subsequent revision of the salvage convention to be given effect in the United Kingdom by means of an Order in Council amending schedule 1. Schedule 1 sets out the articles in the salvage convention and related provisions. Similar provision was made in earlier Acts of Parliament for the domestic implementation of internationally agreed amendments to international agreements. For example, section 14(5) of the Merchant Shipping Act 1979 allows revision of the 1974 convention relating to the carriage of passengers and their luggage by sea to be implemented by Order in Council. Section 15(2) of that Act, however, provides for parliamentary control, in that a draft of the Order in Council must first be approved by a resolution of each House of Parliament.

In its report dated 24 May 1994, the House of Lords Delegated Powers Scrutiny Committee noted the absence in clause 1 of provision for parliamentary control of the exercise of powers conferred by subsection (3). I accept that the implementation of amendments to the salvage convention should be subject to parliamentary control. Amendment No. 1 adds a new subsection (7) to clause 1, requiring that a draft of any order made under subsection (3) to give effect to the revision of the salvage convention be approved by a resolution of both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Gary Streeter (Plymouth, Sutton): I have reservations about Lords amendment No. 1. First, I must declare an interest as I am a partner in a firm of solicitors —which has a marine department, although I am not involved in it—in Plymouth. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) for introducing the Bill. He is known in the west country as a veritable champion of all matters maritime.

I have grave concerns about Lords amendment No. 1 because I believe that it will be increasingly necessary to amend our salvage legislation. I am concerned that, if we make those matters that are to be dealt with by Order in Council subject to scrutiny, we might introduce an element of delay, which would be unfortunate and undesirable.

The Law Commission recently expressed concern about the backlog of its reports published since 1969 but not brought into law. Those reports might involve legislation and that is an expression of how difficult it is to find sufficient parliamentary time to introduce desirable and necessary measures. By this year, 35 Law Commission reports were awaiting implementation by the House. The primary reason for the delay was not that anyone disagreed with their contents but the difficulty in finding sufficient parliamentary time. We must consider that problem.

While amending the international convention on salvage and United Kingdom law covering such matters is of primary concern to those who are actively involved in salvage operations and maritime issues, one can easily imagine how such matters might constantly fall to the back of the queue in our proceedings.

As is often the case, the amendment would have an unforeseen consequence. It was tabled by well-meaning people, but could be counter-productive. I cite as support for my arguments the fact that there have been many revisions during the past 30 years or so to the approach that the Lloyd's insurance market takes to salvage. Insurance is central to the whole issue.

There have been changes to the Lloyd's standard form of salvage since the turn of the century, but there have been three revisions in the past 20 years. We all know that the old maxim, "No cure, no pay" used to govern the approach to salvage. That position has gradually changed during the past 20 or 30 years.

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): My hon. Friend may have answered his own question. The salvage industry and the insurance market are often able to react much more quickly to circumstances than the House. That is why Lloyd's open form, which is used to dispose of about 74 per cent. of salvage cases, is changed from time to time. Does that not solve the very problem that my hon. Friend is bringing to the attention of the House?

Mr. Streeter: My hon. Friend makes my point for me. How absurd it would be if the Lloyd's provisions were out of step with United Kingdom law and the parliamentary procedures and convention that we are following. It is important for such matters to go forward step by step. If we make them the subject of parliamentary scrutiny, with all the in-built delays that that involves, it could make us out of step with the commercial realities of the marketplace.

9.45 am

Mr. James Clappison (Hertsmere): My hon Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) makes an important point, although one does not necessarily draw the same conclusion as he does. Is it not right that matters as important as salvage and the protection of the environment should be protected by the force of law, rather than left to the vicissitudes of the market and of freedom of contract? There will always be unscrupulous owners and ships' masters who feel that they are under pressure. Is it not right that such matters should have the force of law and that we should give the environment the best possible protection?

Mr. Streeter: I thank my hon. Friend for his invaluable contribution. He is entirely right. It is important for such matters to be protected by the full force of the law, but that must be done in a way that reflects the commercial realities and the pace of change in the marketplace.

The recent Donaldson report gives us further evidence that salvage law is changing rapidly. Recommendations 85 and 86 of that report suggest that ocean-going salvage tugs should be made readily available. If we incorporate the provisions of the international salvage convention into our law in the near future, the market will shortly afterwards ask us to change those principles because of commercial pressures. I urge the House to put in place a system that will enable us to respond rapidly to such commercial pressures.

Mr. Michael Bates (Langbaurgh): Was not one of the matters raised in the Donaldson report the establishment of high-risk areas, a point which relates to my hon. Friend's argument? Does he agree that, in the context of the insurance market, such high-risk areas may lead to an unnecessary burden being placed on the most sensitive parts of the market—the parts that are most in need of protection? That might dissuade people in the market, but surely the protection of the environment is far more important. Is that not another endorsement for what he is suggesting?

Mr. Streeter: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, who has also made a valuable contribution to the debate.

There is another reason why it would be a little foolhardy to accept the amendment. Our salvage law may need to be amended rapidly. A recent case that arose in the west country concerned the sinking of the trawler Pescado off the shores of Devon and Cornwall in late 1991. The vessel was brought to the surface after two years by new salvors, after many false attempts by the original salvage operators, who were brought in by the police. For the families of those who lost their lives on the Pescado, that was a time of great distress and humiliation. Local television stations covered each attempt to raise the vessel and the families hopes were raised, only to be dashed, through the incompetence of the original salvors.

We are not far from the introduction of a range of measures to deal with the quality and competence of salvors operating off the shores of the United Kingdom, to protect people such as the families of those who so tragically lost their lives in the Pescado. That is another reason why it would not be right for us to commit ourselves to a procedure that cannot guarantee urgent ministerial attention and implementation. I believe that that further supports my argument. The Bill introduces into English law the issues arising out of the international convention on salvage. We now need to see an upgrading of firms that are involved in salvage operations.

A measure that may need to be brought forward is one to increase the rewards available to the people who are involved in the operation. We must see an increase in the number and quality of salvors operating from the United Kingdom. For those reasons, I express reservations about Lords amendment No. 1. It is right that the power to respond to an ever-changing marketplace should lie in the hands of the Executive, and it is right that we should be able to introduce changes to the law in relation to salvage quickly, and not await parliamentary time.

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): This is a small but important amendment, which raises some issues of constitutional significance. I do not wish to delay the House, but I want to raise two important points.

The first has to do with the principle of subordinate legislation, with which the amendment deals. I observed when I spoke at the early stages of the Bill that it did not deal with the issue of passing back delegated powers to the House for scrutiny. It is not that I lack confidence in my hon. Friend the Minister or in other colleagues in the Government, and I realise that it is necessary for orders to be made in many cases under many Acts of Parliament. It is simply a matter of a thousand eyes being better than two.

Where changes in the law are proposed, the House should at least have the opportunity to scrutinise them. That is why I disagree with my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Streeter), who I know is an advocate of legislation on that. I understand the reason why he stresses the importance of speed—I do not quibble with that—but I do not agree that changes in legislation would necessarily be held up by requiring this House and the other place to scrutinise them.

There are ways to ensure that that is done speedily through the usual channels if a particular emergency has to be dealt with. Accuracy is more important than speed, so it is important that any changes made to the law should be properly scrutinised. That was picked up by the Delegated Powers Committee in its report on 24 May, and that is rightly what informs us of the need for the Lords amendment.

There are wider constitutional reasons why it is important for secondary legislation to be properly scrutinised, and those relate to the authority of this place. This place exists to sanction and approve the law and if we increasingly encourage other ways by which the law can be amended or changed by diktat, that inevitably diminishes the powers, authority and responsibility of this place. Those powers have been built up over many centuries, often following great difficulty and struggle, and it is important that they are preserved.

There is also the simple and practical reason that our constituents expect and require us to be aware of changes in the law, and to look closely at, and to scrutinise, those changes. If there is a system where major changes in the law can be easily made, without reference to the House, we are put in the extraordinary position of having to say to our constituents that not only are we unable to make representations on the matter but we have no powers, responsibility or involvement. They would find that difficult to take, and we would find it difficult to justify.

Secondly, the international aspect is significant. This is a matter of considerable controversy at present, principally because of the European Union legislation. Many of my hon. Friends regard it as a dangerous trend that it is increasingly possible for those in Brussels, who have no elected status, to tinker with, and to change, the law of this country, often in a simple and easy fashion.

It worries me that we had, or still have until the amendment is finally accepted, a situation where the law can be changed effectively at international level. I appreciate that the regulations would actually pass through our constitutional process, but the reality is that negotiations could take place in an international forum where we are represented by a Minister or, effectively at some levels, by officials. A deal could be done and something that is not palatable could be accepted, perhaps without the full implications being realised. We could end up with a de facto situation where an international committee, comprising of a large majority of people who are not British, makes a decision which, through this process, slips into British law. That is a dangerous precedent. The matter that is agreed may not be one of any controversy, but it could be. It is necessary that the House ensures that there is a safeguard against that happening.

That is why I think that the Lords amendment is extremely important, why I fully support it, why I hope that it is incorporated into the Bill and why I beg to disagree with my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton, although I respect his views.

Mr. Roger Knapman (Stroud): I agree with all that my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) has said. I have looked at the speech of the noble Lord Donaldson, as well as at the offerings from my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris), and I congratulate them both on the way in which they have brought forward the Bill. When someone as learned as the noble Lord says that he is proposing a small technical amendment, it is normally time to dive for cover. In this case, I entirely agree that the amendment, which deals with an Order in Council under clause 1(3)—I presume that that is the clause to which the noble Lord was referring—is absolutely necessary.

I listened with care to the excellent speech by my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Streeter). It is always encouraging to hear a member of the legal profession arguing for directness and speed. Sadly, however, at that stage I must part company with him. Such is the apparent need for speed—I am sure that this will not be taken as a savage attack on the usual channels—that we have, according to my hon. Friend, 35 law reports which are waiting to pass through the House. That is indeed a matter for the usual channels.

My hon. Friend said that this is such an important matter that we should bypass this place. I would merely say that, by the time that we have government by the Privy Council, government from Brussels and government by international convention, the press may indeed start to wonder why we are being paid any salaries at all.

I strongly support the amendment, and I look forward to what my hon. Friend the Minister has to say. I hope that he will be able to confirm that nothing can happen unless the matters come before the House of Commons.

Mr. Waterson: I am delighted to be here today to have an opportunity to speak on this important Bill and finally to wish it godspeed through the last of the legislative process. Like my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Streeter) I should declare an interest as an Admiralty solicitor. I should also perhaps declare a more obvious interest, which is that I represent a coastal constituency—the most attractive coastal constituency represented in the House.

I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) who is a doughty campaigner for the sea and for those who earn their living on the sea. He has fought hard not only for the Bill but for other legislation for the sea. His constituents and all those with an interest in seafaring and the sea's environment already owe him a great debt. They will owe him an even greater one after the Bill is passed.

I join my hon. Friend in paying tribute to Lord Mustill. I also join in paying tribute to the learned Lord Donaldson for his magisterial publication on the Braer disaster, which contained 103 recommendations. I am sure that the House will refer back to that publication many times in the next few years.

We are considering the implementation of the salvage convention of 1989. I support amendment No 1, the drafting of which is analogous with that of the Merchant Shipping Act 1979. It is important that Parliament has a say in any future changes to the convention. As my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) said so eloquently, that convention will become part of our domestic law, so it would be quite wrong if the House had no say in any future changes to it.

We would all hope, of course, that any amendments to the convention would be sufficiently sensible and practicable to command widespread support in all parts of the House, but there is no guarantee of that. We are talking about important matters. The Lloyd's open form system operates in 74 per cent. of salvage incidents, but a substantial number are left as a matter for general law. The salvage convention reflects much of what is contained in the latest version of Lloyd's open form, but should the convention be altered in the future, such change must be approved by the House. If any change were needed urgently, following a particular disaster such as the Braer, I am sure that those amendments would be passed by the House and the other place with great rapidity.

As someone who represents a coastal constituency, I believe that it is essential that we maintain our crucial right to consider, and to approve or otherwise, any changes that are made to the salvage convention. The British Government will continue to have the opportunity to make representations, through the International Maritime Organisation, on any amendments to the convention, but it is necessary that the House and the other place should maintain the right to have a genuine debate on any suggested changes.

Sadly, this country, perhaps more than any other, has had more experience that any other of major shipping accidents such as the Braer and the Torrey Canyon disasters. We have a major interest in putting our point of view not only to ensure that whatever changes are suggested are sensible and have the desired effect but to protect our essential national interest—the coastlines of our constituencies, such as Eastbourne—from the pollution caused by such disasters.

I warmly welcome the amendment, which I support.

Mr. Bates: I, too, must part company with my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Streeter), who is a doughty fighter on coastal matters and takes a great interest in maritime issues. I fear that he is wrong on this particular occasion, because parliamentary scrutiny allows a number of different factors to come into play that may not be considered by, for example, the marine accident investigation branch.

My argument is based on what happened in my constituency a couple of years ago. A 5,000 tonne Swedish registered vessel, the SK Link, with a cargo of forest materials, tragically caught ablaze 10 miles off the coast of my constituency. It drifted with the tidal flows towards the coast and caused great anxiety to many of my constituents. The marine accident investigation branch paid particular attention to how the fire had started, the structure of the vessel and its safety provisions. It was unable, however, to consider the issue that was of prime concern to my constituents—the risk faced by the team of fire fighters from the Cleveland county fire brigade, who were airlifted onto the vessel to try to tackle the blaze. They discovered that the cargo included 38 tonnes of sodium chlorate, which could have exploded at any time.

Those fire fighters are paid for and accountable to my constituents and their safety is of prime concern to them. As my constituents' parliamentary representative, I should have the opportunity to scrutinise any incident in which those fire fighters are involved. If I cannot discuss in the House a potential risk to the lives of my constituents, and if that is not counted as legitimate use of parliamentary time, I wonder what can be.

It is vital that Parliament should be able to scrutinise the international conventions, such as the convention for safety of lives at sea, chapter 7 of which relates to the carriage of dangerous goods. If we had had a debate on what happened to the fire fighters in my constituency, that chapter could have been amended to avoid similar risks in the future.

Teesport is the second busiest container port in the country and it handles 43 million tonnes of cargo. It faces increasing risks because oil and gas come on shore through the central area transmission system pipeline at Teesside.

I have had a number of discussions with the Cleveland county fire brigade about the risks posed, as well as discussions with the environmental protection officers at the various district councils. There are question marks about safety and great concern has also been expressed about the effect on the environment of any accident. The local authority has taken great interest and made great strides in developing environmentally protected areas. It has established wildlife parks and the area is noted for the particular beauty of Seal sands and the coastline around my constituency at Saltburn. Northumbrian Water is spending about £13 million to try to clean those beaches, one disaster such as the SK Link, when oil poured on to the beaches of my constituency, would cost the local authority thousands of pounds. Because of our constituents' concerns, we have a right to scrutinise any convention. We would be able to offer an added, helpful dimension to any discussions.

Great concern has been expressed about certain high risk areas. In the current stringent trading conditions, many companies find it difficult to operate. Companies feel that, however worthy it is, the proposals in the Donaldson report on high risk areas may attract a higher premium which could place added burdens on business. Business, local authorities, fire brigades, my constituents and representatives of environmental protection areas have a right to have their voices heard and their scrutiny applied to legislation. That is why I endorse Lords amendment No. 1.

Mr. Roger Evans (Monmouth): Clause 1(3) is a classic King James II clause. It really is historically unacceptable for the Crown, by treaty, to alter the rights of property and the obligations of subjects. That is why the amendment is so fundamental and important.

It has not been stressed that the key to the legislation is contained in schedule 1, and in particular in articles 13 and 14 of schedule 1, which are parts of the treaty. They are of fundamental importance. They redefine the liabilities to pay for salvage and how much salvors can be rewarded. They are classic examples of property rights and obligations, and they should be determined by Parliament and not by the Crown by the exercise of the prerogative.

Mr. Clappison: Legally, my hon. Friend has hit the nail on the head. Does he agree that articles 13 and 14 can properly be described as the regulation of economic relationships? However, is not it the case that, as with all economic relationships, they might need to be revised from time to time?

Mr. Evans: I agree entirely, but the difference, for the first time, is that when Lloyd's of London is so attacked from all quarters these days, we should recall that Lloyd's of London has a tremendous historic past and, one trusts, a future in marine insurance, that the triumph of Lloyd's of London was that the greater part of shipping collisions were arbitrated in London by arbitrators appointed by the Committee of Lloyd's, and that a small band of very distinguished experts—London Admiralty solicitors, such as my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) and members of the Admiralty Bar—over a long period established a substantial world dominance in this aspect. How that dominance appears in the invisible balance of payments statistics, I have never begun to understand. It is a classic example of the leadership of this country and the leadership of London being ignored by those who look at manufactured metal boxes which are much easier to count.

The point about that system was that Lloyd's of London had an agreement and could do things on a contractual basis. As was urged, one can see how contractual relations need to be brought up to date.

What provoked the recent convention—it is the key to this matter—is that the matter cannot be left any longer simply to those who are sinking and those who are going to save them because of the environmental issue, which means that, as a matter of public law and international law, it is necessary to protect our coastlines by superimposing and defining upon those contractual arrangements some public obligations and duties.

The important point is contained in article 13(1)(b), which states:

"the skills and efforts of the salvors in preventing or minimising damage to the environment".

That is an absolutely fundamental aspect.

Similarly, article 14(1) states:

"If the salvor has carried out salvage operations in respect of a vessel which by itself or its cargo threatened damage to the environment and has failed to earn a reward under article 13 at least equivalent to the special compensation assessable in accordance with this article, he shall be entitled to special compensation".

The rub of the argument in the international convention was exactly how we deal with the aspect of the environment and the payments to one side or the obligation of the other to pay. There was also a big dispute between this side of the Atlantic and the other side of the Atlantic —it used to be done on a pro rata basis—as to whether the cargo or the ship should pay and in what proportions. That was resolved in the convention by article 16.

I believe that, by a brief description of the guts of the matter, one can see that the most important types of social and public obligations and very serious questions of liability and rights to compensation are defined by this legislation—we hope. That is highly desirable. It is an excellent Bill, but it would be wrong to allow the Crown, by Order in Council—the Privy Council—as a matter purely of Executive power, to alter all that. That is why the Lords Committee was absolutely right to pick up that constitutional error in the Bill, and that is why I commend Lords amendment No. 1 to the House.

Mr. Clappison: I welcome the opportunity to make a short contribution on the importance of amendment No. 1, which goes to the heart of some important environmental issues. Before doing so, it would be a wise precaution for me to declare an interest as an underwriting member of Lloyd's, which these days seems to provoke certain interest in certain quarters. It might be wise to declare that interest now, in case Hansard is read in certain quarters on Monday and I find myself alleged to be part of a giant conspiracy involving amendment No. 1.

10.15 am

I wish to speak strongly in support of my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Streeter) and redress the balance, which has been in favour of strict constitutionality. Perhaps, at the end of the day, together with my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton, I will have to defer to the voice of strict constitutionality, as expressed by my hon. Friends the Members for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) and for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant).

My hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth (Mr. Evans) hit the nail on the head, as I suggested in my intervention, in his analysis of the legal implications of the amendment. However, I might place more emphasis than my hon. Friend did on the environmental implications which follow from leaving such matters to the law of contract and to the economic relationships between contracting parties.

Protection of the environment must be the top priority. It is right that public law should override freedom of contract and reinforce the protection that has been given under the Lloyd's open forms. There have been too many cases, I suspect—this matter was dealt with very well in Committee—when important environmental matters have been at risk when ships are sinking and salvors are considering whether to go to the rescue, and there is hesitation and delay while parties argue about terms in a contract. The environment is just too important for that; it should not be left to such hazards. We should have a clear public law regime that sets out the rights and liabilities of the parties.

Such rights and liabilities may require revision. I am constantly surprised at how late the forces of law have been brought to bear upon the subject. The environment is so vital that the matter should have been dealt with years ago. Now, relatively late in the day, the needs of the environment have been brought into the equation. Perhaps further revisions will be needed to reassess, for example, the balance between risk and reward or to set a higher reward for salvors if salvors do not come forward because of the rewards that are provided for them in environmental cases. They might feel that the incentives are just not great enough for them to take the risk involved in going to the rescue of a ship. Perhaps the incentives will not be entirely effective. If that is so, I for one would be happy to take part in a revision.

I warn my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud and other hon. Friends who talked about strict constitutionality and the use of parliamentary time that it may be necessary for the matter, if it is to be subject to the House and to Parliament, to come back before the House on several future occasions so that we can act in the best interests of the environment and fine-tune the legislation to the needs of the environment.

It is an important issue. There are many other ways in which the law could be developed, not least to take account of marine environment high-risk areas, which is one of the most important recommendations in the Donaldson report. I can see no reason why a way cannot be found to take account of that in regulating such relationships, to provide higher incentives in such cases and to reward responsible masters and shipowners who use routes which put the environment at the least risk.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton put the matter most succinctly. I have expressed concern during the passage of the legislation and said that we should put the highest possible priority on the protection of the environment. I am happy to support the sentiments expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton, even if, at the end of the day, we have to defer to the voice of strict constitutionality.

Ms Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): Many Tory Members have expressed their thanks and gratitude to the noble Lords in the other place. May I place on record my gratitude to Lord Clinton-Davis, who gave full co-operation to the Bill but has not been mentioned in previous speeches. [Interruption.] Hon. Members tell me that the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) referred to him.

Mr. Harris indicated dissent.

Ms Walley: Oh, the hon. Member for St. Ives apparently did not mention the noble Lord. Clearly, I should not accept contributions made from a sedentary position.

Mr. Harris: I did not mention Lord Clinton-Davis, but I am happy to join the hon. Lady in thanking him for the valuable contributions that he made in the other place.

Ms Walley: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman.

Amendment No. 1 deals with parliamentary scrutiny. I am heartened by the huge number of well-informed, brief contributions that we have had from Tory Members who are suddenly interested in merchant shipping and want to participate in a debate on parliamentary scrutiny—issues which the Labour party has been trying to raise for a long time. It is ironic that so many people are suddenly so concerned about parliamentary scrutiny. In reality, it is a well-orchestrated filibuster of today's business, because parliamentary scrutiny should also be given to the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill and the Energy Conservation Bill.

Mr. Bates: The hon. Lady should also place on record the fact that only one Labour Member is in the Chamber this morning. It is all very well for her to talk about the importance of the environment, but by turning out and discussing the environment, Conservative Members are declaring the fact that they are serious about it and interested in it, whereas the vacant Benches behind the hon. Lady demonstrate eloquently the Labour party's position.

Ms Walley: The Bill has come forward only because the Government were not prepared to deal with the international convention on salvage. We have raised the matter time and again in Committee, but the Government refused to bring forward their own legislation to deal with merchant shipping and pollution. It is only because they have relied on the admirable efforts of the hon. Member for St. Ives to rescue them for their failure to deal with merchant shipping that the Bill has now been through its Committee and Lords stages and returned here. It has therefore had all the debate that it needs and it should now be a matter of rubber stamping the amendments before us.

Mr. Roger Evans: It is absolutely astonishing and an indictment of the whole parliamentary process that the Bill got as far as it did before clause 1(3) was picked up by the Lords Committee. It is up to us to put it right this morning.

Ms Walley: That proves that, had the Government been prepared to prioritise merchant shipping and introduce proper legislation rather than legislate in a backhand way through a private Member's Bill, the Bill would have been carefully prepared and we would not have to pick up mistakes at this late stage.

The hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) tabled a great number of amendments to block the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): Order. Will the hon. Lady return to amendment No. 1, please?

Ms Walley: Amendment No. 1 deals with parliamentary scrutiny.

Mr. Quentin Davies (Stamford and Spalding): A moment ago, the hon. Lady said that she thought that the House should rubber stamp the Lords amendments. Will she think again about the phrase, "rubber stamp"? Is it not the obverse of proper parliamentary scrutiny?

Ms Walley: We want parliamentary mechanisms that enable us to deal with the issues of the day and to introduce parliamentary legislation that has been thoroughly researched and well prepared within the overall agenda of the Government's legislation. If that had been done in respect of the 1989 international salvage convention, we would not be dealing with this Bill. The later issue of parliamentary scrutiny had not been included and we are not dealing with it as I should have liked, partly because priority has not been given to merchant shipping. Indeed, the House of Commons does not even have a Minister responsible for shipping—he sits in the other place. Those issues must be borne in mind.

In view of all that has been said this morning on parliamentary scrutiny, will the Minister say whether that will conflict with the provisions of the Bill on deregulation and contracting out? I agree with the hon. Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) that parliamentary scrutiny is absolutely important. Members of Parliament need to know exactly what legislation we are passing and be involved in the procedure of drawing up legislation. I welcome an amendment that will give proper parliamentary scrutiny to subsequent orders of this kind. Bearing in mind not just what is contained in the draconian first part of the Bill on deregulation and contracting out but that many issues relating to deregulation and contracting out could be taken away from this place, could the matter that we are now discussing be taken away at a later stage because of that?

Clause 1 was drawn up because we need to ratify the 1989 international salvage convention. I would welcome any subsequent conventions that arise out of that convention, or out of the International Maritime Organisation or European organisations, which would enable us better to respond to ships in distress and prevent environmental catastrophes.

Other issues arose from the Donaldson report, which many hon. Members have before them. Although those may not relate directly to the international salvage convention, they should be brought forward urgently. The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds has raised some specific issues with me. As so many other issues need to be addressed, the Minister's response may be an opportunity for him to say whether he now proposes to introduce new regulations to implement the recommendations of the Donaldson inquiry, which could be part and parcel of clause 1. Will he introduce the mandatory routing of oil tankers to avoid hazardous areas of sea? Which of Donaldson's recommendations does he expect the shipping and ports industry to deal with voluntarily?

Mr. Waterson: Does the hon. Lady agree that one of the main benefits of the Bill is that, by extending the strict liability to vessels other than laden oil tankers, part II, schedule 3 may help to deal with many clandestine and apparently minor discharges of bunker oil along our coastline which, on a daily basis, is very damaging to our natural wildlife, particularly to birds?

Ms Walley: The hon. Gentleman makes an important case and I entirely agree with him. I am pleased that we are dealing not only with catastrophes but with the regular, consistent discharge of bunker oil into the sea, which is not properly dealt with at present. It may be better to debate that matter under clause 6, but it may also relate to the parliamentary scrutiny that we are discussing now. In which case, this might be an opportunity for the Minister to elaborate further on the Government's policy on ports.

It is clear from recent parliamentary questions that I have asked about whether the Minister will introduce regulations to deal with facilities for the ports and ways in which legal discharges can be made—[Interruption.] I have just accepted an intervention on the subject, which is part and parcel of the parliamentary scrutiny that we are discussing. I agree that the issue of facilities in ports cannot be left to the marketplace.

Having made those few comments, I look forward to the Minister's reply.

10.30 am

The Minister for Transport in London (Mr. Steve Norris): I commend my hon. Friend the Member for St Ives (Mr. Harris) for his customary assiduity in introducing the amendment, and I join him in thanking noble Lords in another place who have helped to sponsor the amendments to the Bill that we wish to make this morning.

The lonely vigil of the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on the Opposition Benches is notable for the very reason that she should recall more than she has —she alone appears to have the slightest interest in these important topics. By contrast, my hon. Friends have contributed to an extraordinarily high-quality debate on an extremely important issue. It is a bit rich for the hon. Lady to talk in terms of a sudden interest because it would be useful if the Labour party took a sudden interest in who governs the country, which is what the amendment is about. It has been notable over the years that the Labour party has been solely concerned to ensure that it introduced the sort of socialistic nonsense that the electors of this country will never take through the front door as they have shown by their affection for the Government—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is getting a head of steam and must return to amendment No. 1.

Mr. Norris: As ever, Mr. Deputy Speaker, you go straight to the heart of it. I was incensed. I crave your indulgence as I did stray, for which I should be reproached, and I am grateful to you. I shall leave my remarks on the record and those who witness our proceedings on television will draw their own conclusions about which side of the House is concerned about marine pollution.

Ms Walley: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Norris: No, I do not have the time to give way to the hon. Lady, as it is important to get on.

I was discussing the useful debate that we have had with my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick). He and I are mere journeymen in the world—we are small business men. When I listened to my hon. Friends the Members for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Streeter), for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterston), for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison), for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates), for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) and for Monmouth (Mr. Evans) I became terrified at the prospect of ever having to pay my hon. Friends for the sort of contributions that we have just heard free of charge. I am diffident about intervening or responding to the extraordinary outpouring of knowledge that my hon. Friends displayed. I note that my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) has a degree in law and politics so perhaps, by implication, he is also to be commended for his assiduity.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham was right when he said that it was important to ensure that any amendment to the essential provisions of the Bill should be subject to the scrutiny of the House. He made an important point that was underlined by my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud. Without wishing to select one contribution over all the excellent contributions that we have had this morning, I must say that in the House we can effectively scrutinise the changes proposed by others whose interests are not those of the United Kingdom. I believe that that was the expression for which my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham was seeking—the people that we are talking about were not necessarily born in the United Kingdom. We are talking about those who quite properly prosecute interests that are not United Kingdom interests. We want to ensure that when such changes are made, they are made with the full scrutiny of the House. It is important on all such occasions when we, quite properly, enter into international obligations—whether as part of the European Union or any other international forum—that this House remains in control of those negotiations and is able to endorse them after appropriate debate or to reject them if that is appropriate.

Mr. Ian Bruce (South Dorset): I thank my hon. Friend for giving way—I decided not to make a speech so that we could get on. Will my hon. Friend take up the point that concerns my constituents? Recommendation 9.3 of the Donaldson report mentions the harmful effects of pollution from bunker oil and waste, which are often carried around the world without the facilities to get rid of it. A company called ROIL proposes to place a facility into my constituency, in Portland—all the details have been given to the Minister for Aviation and Shipping. In asking us to ensure that we ratify the conventions, the Government must also help to put in place the necessary facilities.

Mr. Norris: I know that my hon. Friend has submitted full details of the ROIL scheme to my noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping. No doubt ROIL will continue to press for a waste oil facility and I know that my hon. Friend the Member for South Dorset (Mr. Bruce) will continue to press for new jobs in Portland. I hope that he will not mind if I do not dwell at length on the point that he has made. If I can help to bring the matter to the attention of my noble Friend, I will be happy to do so.

Like all law, conventions adopted within the International Maritime Organisation require amendment from time to time to take account of the changing circumstances in which they operate. I think that my hon. Friends appreciated the fact that many of the amendments are technical and do not necessarily require detailed consideration by a Chamber such as this. The Bill, therefore, provides for those amendments to be implemented by Order in Council—that is perfectly sensible and straightforward. It is clearly right that Parliament should have oversight of the implementation of such amendments. I, therefore, agree with those of my hon. Friends who supported amendment No. 1, which ensures that any future revision of the salvage convention can be simply and rapidly implemented in the United Kingdom, subject to the agreement of this House and the House of Lords.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton, who I know is, and has for a long time been, interested in the subject as he has a maritime interest in his constituency, need not worry about the ability of the House to make swift changes and take rapid action should that prove necessary—a point endorsed by my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh. My hon. Friend also mentioned the tragic accident involving the Pescado, which was the subject of a thorough investigation by the marine accident investigation branch.

As my hon. Friend knows, a number of recommendations were made as a result of that report. Some of the recommendations have been made public, some have been communicated to members of the family and others remain to be determined. Following that incident, there is and will remain a procedure that must be followed—whether in relation to tragic accidents such as the Pescado or incidents involving oil pollution—and under which rapid action can be taken and, if necessary, rapid changes can be made to the regulatory framework. None of that will be impeded because the House has the opportunity to endorse such changes where it is felt that they are appropriate.

In this country, we can be proud of the fact that we have the ability swiftly to address the causes of accidents, whether marine, aviation, rail or any other mode of transport to ensure that swift action is taken—I am thinking particularly of the MAIB and the air accident investigation branch. One of the things about which we are concerned is that we should not rush to make regulatory change before we have fully taken account of, for example, the cost that might flow from our over-enthusiasm in dealing with the cause of accidents immediately. I know that my hon. Friend is concerned about the Pescado and I understand his point, but it does not conflict with the intention of this amendment.

If the amendment were not made, there would be no parliamentary oversight of the implementation of any revision of the salvage convention. Those who ask whether this power sanctions the implementation of radical changes to the salvage convention by subordinate legislation need not concern themselves—the answer is clearly no. The power sanctions only the implementation of relatively minor changes to the convention. If the convention needed to be revised extensively, that would be done not by agreeing amendments to the 1989 convention, but by agreeing an entirely new convention. The power of clause 1 (3) would not allow the implementation of a new salvage convention. For that, one would properly require primary legislation.

In answer to a couple of my hon. Friends, we do not anticipate the early need for significant amendments to the 1989 salvage convention, which supersedes a convention that was agreed in 1910. As I think my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne knows, the principles are, in general, well established and such amendment as is necessary is technical—it reflects technical change rather than any amendment of the principle.

The United Kingdom will, of course, ratify the salvage convention shortly after the Bill receives Royal Assent. The convention will enter into force one year after the date on which 15 states have agreed to be bound by its provisions. To date, nine states have made that commitment. The Irish Republic already has legislation in place to permit ratification. Australia and Canada, like the UK, should adopt the necessary legislation shortly. Entry into force in 1995 is, therefore, possible and one can assume that entry into force no later than 1996 is relatively certain. If, this autumn, the number of contracting parties to the salvage convention is still insufficient to bring the convention into force internationally in 1995, the terms of the convention will be applied in UK law from 1 January 1995.

I should like to refer to one or two other points that were made by my hon. Friends during the debate. My hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh mentioned Teesport. I agree that that is an important matter. I think that he will agree that the issues have been answered, in a sense, by my hon. Friends' observations. We have had a valuable debate to flesh out precisely why, as a number of my hon. Friends have said, this is an important amendment.

Perhaps it was not fair of my hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth to chide the House for having allowed to Bill to go this far without spotting the need for the amendment. I underline that my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives introduced the Bill as a private Member's Bill. He has prosecuted it vigorously with the support of Labour Members, who have been here, if not in number, then at least in spirit and who have not opposed the passage of the Bill. I am grateful to them for that. The hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North mentioned the Donaldson report. I do not want to go down that track, because there are other amendments with which we should deal. As she knows, the Government remain committed to ensuring that the recommendations in Lord Donaldson's excellent report are fully aired and debated and, where necessary, brought into effect as urgently as possible.

On salvage tugs, Lord Donaldson's inquiry envisaged in the longer term a mixture of a few large salvage tugs and smaller tugs to administer first aid while a larger tug is on the way. The inquiry rightly acknowledged the need for negotiations with tug owners and other countries to establish what could be done before we decide on tug sectors. We intend to take those discussions forward and the inquiry also recognised that detailed negotiations on arrangements and funding would take time, but it identified Dover strait, the western approaches and north-west Scotland as the three areas most urgently in need.

10.45 am

We have asked the chief executive of the Coastguard Agency to carry out a study of the cost and benefits of providing the three tugs. That study should take about six months. The appropriateness and role of public funding, both in the short and long term, of the tugs needs careful consideration and we shall consider the matter in the context of the report's general recommendations on financing.

Ms Walley: In view of what the Minister has said, can we expect early Government legislation to implement the Donaldson report?

Mr. Norris The hon. Lady knows our attitude to the Donaldson report. We have commended those people who prepared the report and, in particular, Lord Donaldson for an excellent piece of work which gives us a number of valuable insights. We have accepted some of the recommendations and agreed, as Lord Donaldson suggested would be appropriate, to investigate others as a matter of urgency. She will not cause me to move from that position this morning, as she is well aware.

The hon Lady asked whether the provision of the salvage tugs should be more widespread. She knows that the inquiry recognised that it was impractical to provide coverage of all areas by full-size salvage tugs. Not only would cost outweigh benefits, but skilled crews might become stale and unable to function in an emergency. The inquiry suggests the Dover strait and south-western approaches because the density of traffic means that a tug is most likely to be needed there. Most other areas have some sort of tug available. The only exception is north-west Scotland, where a third salvage tug is suggested.

The hon. Lady asked for an undertaking in relation to the contents of the excellent Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry currently has before the House. It is classic of the Labour party to assume that any attempt to reduce the burden of regulation on industry or business will lay to waste killing fields of danger and expose employees unnecessarily, solely in the pursuit of profit and putting safety last. That is, of course, a nonsensical approach to the sensible business of ensuring that regulations are always appropriate to the protections that any individual or organisation can reasonably expect.

Mr. Don Dixon (Jarrow): Are the Government in favour of regulation?

Mr. Norris: I shall not be drawn on that, save to say that we believe that regulations should exist only where they are necessary for the protection of the public, as individuals or collectively, and where they are concerned with safety, honesty and probity. Any regulation that goes beyond that to any degree and imposes a burden on individuals or businesses which cannot be justified should not remain on the statute book for one moment longer.

I am sad to say that the Labour party is obsessed with the idea that the slightest reduction in the burden on industry or business will somehow simply allow the massive accretion of private profit at the expense of personal safety. That sort of attitude will ensure that it remains exactly where it is long after the next election, with or without the ministrations and leadership of the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott).

The hon. Lady need not concern herself that the deregulation Bill will have the slightest impact on the terms of the convention. My goodness, I saw you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, about to direct my mind to the amendment, but I hope that you appreciate that I was answering a request from the hon. Lady. Methinks I was provoked yet again, not just by the hon. Lady but by the normally silent member of the usual channels mafia, the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) who is occupying his usual place on the Opposition Front Bench.

I do not wish to detain the House unnecessarily. We have had an excellent debate and I am grateful to my hon. Friends who participated. My hon. Friend the Member for Hallam reminds me that I may have overlooked mentioning my hon. Friend the Member for Hertsmere. All the contributions were excellent. My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton is an experienced enough lawyer to know that, although he made his debating point with force, my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham and others are clearly right that it is necessary for Parliament to have the right and ability to scrutinise proposed changes to obligations entered into by this country in conjunction with others. The amendment provides for that and I commend it to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Clause 3

AMENDMENTS AS TO POWERS OF IMPLEMENTATION

Lords amendment: No. 2, in page 2, line 43, leave out from ("section") to ("shall") and insert—

("(a) may make provision corresponding to the provision authorised for an Order by paragraphs (a) to (d) of subsection (4) of this section; and (b)")

Mr. Harris: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

I hope that this matter can be dealt with quickly. The amendment corrects a minor error in the wording of clause 3, and I am grateful to their lordships for correcting it.

Clause 3 is important. It aims to simplify the procedure for the domestic implementation of technical amendments to the International Maritime Organisation conventions governing the safety of life at sea and the prevention of pollution from ships. Those two issues—making our seas cleaner and safer—are what the Bill is all about.

Hon. Members have spoken about the work of the IMO. I visited the IMO across the river yesterday to meet its secretary-general, Mr. William O'Neill, about Lord Donaldson's report. It is clear that the IMO has carried out its own appraisal of that report, but, of course, the initiatives on the report have to be taken by the Government. I have no doubt that the Government will make recommendations to the IMO on safety at sea and the prevention of pollution by ships.

Despite the remarks by my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant), it is necessary for many of these matters to be dealt with internationally. I look forward to the Government, taking a lead where international initiatives are required in putting such matters to the IMO. I have always been greatly impressed by the IMO, which is rather different from most United Nations agencies. I was about to say that it does a down-to-earth job, but that is quite the wrong metaphor for a maritime organisation. It functions in a workmanlike and impressive way.

Question put and agreed to.

Clause 4

PREVENTION OF POLLUTION FROM SHIPS: FURTHER POWER TO IMPLEMENT INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS

Lords amendment: No. 3, in page 3, line 22, at end insert—

("and provision authorising the making of regulations authorises the amendment or revocation of regulations made by virtue of paragraph (e) of the said subsection (4).")

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.-[Mr. Harris.]

Ms Walley: Will the amendment make it easier for the Government to lead discussions at next year's North sea conference in Denmark on the need to curb deliberate and continual dumping of oil at sea? That matter was mentioned briefly in the debate on amendment No. 1.

Mr. Norris: I can assure the hon. Lady on that point. Plainly, the extension of the United Kingdom's jurisdiction for counter-pollution measures will apply to the law not only as it stands but to any future law. The amendment makes that clear.

Mr. Quentin Davies: The clause is extremely important, because it gives effect to the provision in the law of the sea conference that coastal states can extend their jurisidiction over waters beyond the territorial sea for the purposes of controlling marine pollution. This island is beside the world's busiest sea lane, between the English channel and the North sea. A small proportion of ships passing our coasts fly the British flag or the flags of the other coastal states. Therefore, it is important to exploit the possibilities provided by the new law of the sea that emerged from the 1982 convention to apply our own standards as a coastal state.

The amendment is sensible; it makes it clear that when the legislation is used to extend coastal state jurisdiction by regulation, we can subsequently change the regulations. That is important, because, from time to time, marine pollution regulations need to be revised without having to go back on that essential extension of the jurisdiction of this country over the seas beyond our territorial waters. I hope that the amendment will be accepted.

Question put and agreed to.

Clause 5

LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION FOR OIL POLLUTION DAMAGE: 1992 PROTOCOLS

Lords amendment: No. 4, in page 3, line 37, leave out from beginning to ("and") in line 42 and insert—

(a) the word "1984" shall be omitted from the section 4A(1) of the 1974 Act and the paragraph 4(a) and (d) constituting Schedule 1 to the 1974 Act as respectively inserted and substituted by Part II of Schedule 4 to the 1988 Act;")

Mr. Harris: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to take Lords amendments Nos. 5 to 7.

Mr. Harris: The amendments improve the clauses as they left the House. Clause 5 is extremely important.

Mr. Norris: The amendments are important because clause 5 will allow the UK to accede to the 1992 protocols. The Government are keen to do that as soon as possible, so that higher levels of compensation quickly become available to victims of oil pollution. The 1992 protocols will enter into force one year after the date on which a total of 10 states representing both leading carriers and importers of oil have agreed to be bound by their provisions. To date, only Mexico has agreed to be bound by the 1992 protocols. The Government plan to accede to the protocols shortly after the Bill has received Royal Assent.

Hon. Members will be interested to know that copies of the 1992 protocols are available in the Vote Office for them to consult. We have arranged for the text of the protocols to be published as a Command Paper and laid before Parliament at the beginning of the next Session.

In the past, the implementation of IMO instruments has taken a considerable length of time. We are anxious to avoid a repetition of that with the 1992 protocols; we are working with our partners towards early implementation of the protocols in domestic law, and will seek to encourage other countries to follow suit.

Question put and agreed to.

Subsequent Lords amendments agreed to.

It being Eleven o'clock, MADAM SPEAKER interrupted the proceedings, pursuant to Standing Order No. 11 (Friday sittings).

11 am

The Minister for Social Security and Disabled People (Mr. Nicholas Scott): With permission, Madam Speaker, I should like to make a statement regarding the publication today of a consultation document on measures to tackle discrimination against disabled people. The document addresses five key areas affecting their lives. The Government would welcome comments on the proposals in the course of the next three months.

The Government give a high priority to helping disabled people to live with dignity and independence. Over the last 15 years, much has been done to further that aim. This document seeks to build on that record, offering wider opportunities for disabled people to partake in and contribute to the life of our community.

As the House will be aware, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister welcomed the fact that the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill was to be examined and discussed in more detail in Committee. This and subsequent debates also provided the opportunity for other voices to be heard in addition to those of the supporters of the Bill—employers, small businesses and other service providers, the very people on whom the burden of any additional cost would be likely to fall. The Government's consultation document will ensure that all those affected will have the opportunity to comment on the next steps.

The first issue addressed in the document is that of employment. The quota system, which requires that registered disabled people should make up at least 3 per cent. of larger work forces, is increasingly recognised as unworkable. Only one third of those in the work force eligible to register do so—about 1 per cent. Therefore, the quota scheme as it stands cannot be sustained and the approach is, in my view, inappropriate to today's needs.

Many employers, of course, adopt good and sensitive practices when employing disabled people, but the Government recognise that some employers may discriminate unjustifiably against them. We are therefore inviting views on how that unjustifiable discrimination against disabled people can be tackled in this important area.

One option might be to strengthen the quota scheme itself, but it is hard to see how its underlying problem of low registration could be overcome. Another approach might be simply to repeal the quota scheme and replace it with an entirely voluntary system.

The Government are aware, however, that there is now widespread support for the present system to be replaced by a statutory right for disabled people not to be unjustifiably discriminated against in employment. Such a right would replace the quota scheme. We are consulting on ways in which such a right might be framed, but the Government would be prepared to consider the position again if there were substantial support for a workable and effective alternative.

The introduction of such a right would have to take into account the fact that some people would be unable to do some jobs because of their disability. Employers would also have to consider whether it was reasonably practicable—taking account of cost and other factors—to make an adjustment to the working environment or practices or to provide specialist equipment to enable a disabled person to do his job. A code of practice would be issued to provide guidance on those matters. We would draw on the experience of employers and disabled people when developing the code.

We believe that the right should apply only to people who have a substantial disability that is long term or recurring. We are seeking views on how best to define that group in a clear and practical manner. The new right, like the quota scheme, should not apply to employers with fewer than 20 employees.

Where individuals believe they have been unjustifiably discriminated against, they would have a right to complain to an industrial tribunal. However, it might be possible to provide, as an alternative to full tribunal proceedings, a less formal but more practical and more speedy process to resolve such issues.

Disabled people not only want jobs—important though that ambition is—they also want to be able to participate, to the greatest extent possible, in the full range of activities open to the able-bodied population. It is important, therefore, to make the environment increasingly more accessible to them. The building regulations have done much to make new non-domestic dwellings accessible as well as most extensions to such buildings.

We are considering whether the regulations should also apply to the design of new domestic dwellings so that they would take greater account of the needs of disabled people. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is considering advice in that area from the building regulations advisory committee. He aims to consult on detailed proposals before the end of the year. That will promote an informed debate on the extent to which new dwellings should be made more accessible to disabled people. There will be a similar consultation exercise in Scotland.

Making buildings physically accessible is of little use to disabled people if they are excluded by prejudice or groundless fears for their safety. We are seeking views on making it unlawful for any person providing goods or services to the public to treat people unfavourably because of disability. Discrimination would be ruled out in a variety of areas, including access to public places, accommodation, entertainment facilities such as cinemas, theatres and restaurants, as well as facilities for transport and travel. The new right of access would not apply where existing physical barriers prevented access or where compliance may create insurmountable safety problems. Where access was wrongly denied, a disabled person would be able to take civil proceedings. He or she would be able to recover damages for any financial loss suffered as well as damages for injuries to feelings. In the latter instance, it might be a fixed sum or an amount subject to an upper limit. The Government could vary the sum or limit in future years. Depending on the level of damages for injury to feelings, claims could be subject to the small claims procedure where proceedings are informal and simple and the cost relatively low.

However, the disabled person might often prefer that the situation which had originally caused offence should be rectified without recourse even to the small claims court. To facilitate the resolution of cases without recourse to legal action, the Government are considering whether to institute a mechanism to help the parties concerned reach a mutually acceptable solution. For example, that might be done by funding a voluntary body to provide an advice and conciliation service for disabled people.

I come now to financial services. We have received little evidence of discrimination in the provision of financial services. None the less, we are inviting the Association of British Insurers, the British Bankers Association and the Building Societies Association to develop and issue statements of good practice on the treatment of disabled customers, including clear advice on how to pursue complaints and, in the case of banks and building societies, to explain the role of their ombudsmen. The Association of British Insurers, for example, will be asked to include in their statement of good practice, first, the need to be aware of the main forms of disability and their relevance in assessing the size or probability of an insurance claim; secondly, that insurers should ask only for medical information that is demonstrably related to the additional risk associated with insuring the disabled person; and thirdly, the need for insurance companies to have a clear mechanism for the investigation of complaints from disabled people and for those complaints to be handled sensitively and speedily.

The ABI will also be invited to set up an independent advisory committee, comprising representatives of insurers and the disability organisations, to monitor the effectiveness of the statement of good practice.

The banks and building societies already follow the code of practice,"Good Banking". That code has, as one of its guiding principles, that banks and building societies should act "fairly and reasonably in all their dealings with their customers".

The Government are committed to tackling discrimination against disabled people. There is a strong case for setting up an independent body that could closely monitor that area and advise the Government on the effect of existing efforts to combat discrimination. The body would work closely with existing bodies representing the interests of disabled people.

The new body might be called the National Disability Council. In particular, its duties would include monitoring discrimination against disabled people and advising the Government on general issues and measures relating to the elimination of discrimination and progress towards those aims; drawing up codes of practice when requested by the Government; reviewing the effect of the new right of access on business; and reporting annually to the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People, who would be required to lay its report before Parliament.

The Government, in their triple role of policymaker, employer, and service provider, can and should provide a strong lead. I am now co-ordinating a programme of action developed to build upon the many positive initiatives that are already taking place. Later this year, the Government will be launching a major publicity campaign designed to change attitudes and actions that adversely affect disabled people. We will also seek to involve organisations of and for disabled people in wider public consultations and to increase the representation of disabled people on public bodies.

A new programme for action on employment of disabled people in the civil service, launched in conjunction with this document, will provide a strategic framework and detailed action checklists to help Departments and agencies recruit and retain disabled people. Many Government Departments and agencies have already improved the accessibility of their buildings and the quality of service they offer to disabled people. To encourage this approach throughout the public service, a checklist on how the citizens charter principles apply to service provision for disabled people will also be published shortly.

The Government have an impressive record in helping disabled people, but more needs to be done. This document outlines the Government's proposals for further action designed to release the untapped potential of disabled people in our society.

I commend the document to the House and ask that hon. Members and all those who share our concern to improve the quality of life of disabled people by removing barriers and expanding opportunities, to respond in a constructive and forward-looking way to its proposals.

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield): It was with some sadness that I listened to the Minister's statement on what could possibly be his last appearance at the Dispatch Box. His words add very little to what was said in the previous debate in the House, and in his subsequent letter to me on 26 May.

The Minister knows that there are two ways of evaluating the Government's performance before the statement—it is either malevolence towards disabled people and their rights or it is incompetence. Those of us who have been here Friday after Friday know which it is.

It is clear to us that the Government did not have the honesty or integrity to oppose publicly and openly a Bill offering civil rights to disabled people, and that they did not have the courage to allow the House to make its own decision on such a Bill. That is the background to today's statement. But for the Government's total embarrassment on recent Fridays, there would have been no statement, however inadequate.

We received a copy of the statement very late—only a few minutes before the Minister spoke. I thank him for giving us a copy, but I see that it refers to codes of practice; we hear "voluntary" "advisory" and, unfortunately, "citizens charter", but we do not hear about "power" to disabled people. Nor did we hear about a commission, which is the only effective way to deliver rights to disabled people.

Will the Minister confirm that the statement says nothing about important matters such as education and transport, which seriously affect the lives of disabled people? The statement runs to five pages of guff, but contains nothing about education or transport. [Interruption.] If I am allowed to be heard, I shall continue. I know that there are certain sensitivities on the Conservative Back Benches—we have certainly witnessed a discreditable performance Friday after Friday. Once again, Conservatives would like the Opposition's voice not to be heard on this important issue.

Why does the statement fail to address various aspects? It is clear that the Government believe that education and persuasion are all that is necessary, workable, affordable and practical. Suitable legislation that meets all the criteria and which would deliver power to disabled people has already been before the House.

Why has not the Minister produced a document that delivers civil rights? That is what the debate is all about, but the Government are terrified of delivering them to disabled people. Why has not the Minister made a statement of intention that delivers on holistic and integrated approach? The House and disabled people outside know that the statement is piecemeal, partial, pathetic, grudging, belated and inadequate. Disabled people and their supporters will not accept it.

Mr. Scott: I recall a story about a parson who from time to time used to write in the margins of his sermons the initials "AWSL". They stood for "argument weak: shout loudly". Nothing better typifies the hon. Gentleman's approach than those initials.

The previous Labour Government's record bears no comparison with that of this Government in meeting the needs of disabled people over the past 15 years. We have trebled the amount of money provided to disabled people through the benefits system; we have introduced the disability living allowance, the disability working allowance and the independent living fund; carers' income has increased one hundredfold; and I believe that our record bears comparison with anything that has gone before.

I am sure that the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) listened with great care to the statement, and that he will respond in his usual constructive manner when he has had time to reflect. I believe that it contains another major step in the right direction. We do not believe in the concept of rights in the sense that it was embraced in the Bill. We prefer to tackle the key issues affecting the lives of disabled people in a practical, workmanlike and affordable manner. We will continue that approach.

Mr. Alan Howarth (Stratford-on-Avon): Does my right hon. Friend accept that his own abhorrence of discrimination is widely recognised and appreciated and that it is welcome that the Government are undertaking consultation? But will he further accept that the extent of the consultation needs to be increased and that it must be conducted, so to speak, without prejudice?

Does my right hon. Friend agree that the Government owe it to all of us who are concerned about this immensely important issue to make a balanced and realistic analysis of the benefits as well as the costs to the economy, and that it will not do to assert again in the consultation document that the cost of anti-discrimination legislation is £17 billion? We appear to have a dialogue of the deaf in this regard—not with my right hon. Friend, but with the economic Departments.

Will my right hon. Friend accept that the consultation needs to cover all the relevant fields and that it is for the Government to lead in the introduction of legislation to establish civil rights for disabled people on a comprehensive basis as a decent society requires, while safeguarding the reasonable interests of employers and service providers?

Mr. Scott: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his opening remarks and I appreciate his concern. I sought to set out in the statement what we have identified as the key issues. However, it will be open to those who read the consultative document to respond on a range of matters affecting the lives of disabled people. The document contains some assessment of the costs that flow from action in these spheres and, if we move in due course to relevant legislation, compliance cost assessments will be introduced.

I understand the point that my hon. Friend has raised more than once about the need to balance costs with the benefits that might flow to society.

[Mr. Scott]

Manifestly, it is more difficult to quantify those benefits in financial terms than to quantify the costs, but undoubtedly there are benefits from greater employment of disabled people and from putting greater purchasing power into the hands of disabled people. That purchasing power can then flow out. We ought to recognise those: to quantify them is a much more difficult task.

Mr. Alfred Morris (Manchester, Wythenshawe): Is not the Minister still up the river without a paddle? Does he recall my hour-long meeting with the Prime Minister, when it was made clear that the Government could not accept any Bill on this subject with cost implications? Is that still his policy?

Is he aware that the promoters of the civil rights Bill have consulted very widely already? Indeed, is he aware that, ever since I first published the Bill in 1991, the response has been strongly positive? Is he also aware that it would be a further and gross betrayal of Britain's 6.5 million disabled people to abandon a Bill which they say is so crucially important to them, and which has a parliamentary majority? Will there be a debate in this House on the document on an amendable motion?

Mr. Scott: It is certainly not open to me to deal with the last point raised by the right hon. Gentleman, but I have no doubt that he can make his views known in other quarters.

The manifest flaw in the approach taken by the Bill which we recently discussed is that the costs that were inherent in it were unquantifiable and unpredictable. It is important when the Government come to legislate that they have a clear view not only about the costs that they intend to accept themselves but about those that they intend to impose on business and other providers in our society. That was not taken into account by the Opposition in their approach to the issue. I believe that to create a concept of some over-arching right for disabled people leads one all to easily into the dangers that we have observed in other such legislation.

Mr. Sheerman: Name one.

Mr. Scott: I look particularly—I make no criticism of anyone involved in the process—

Mr. Sheerman: Pregnant ex-service women.

Mr. Scott: If the hon. Gentleman will let me complete the sentence—yes, precisely that. I find few people in my constituency who do not react with astonishment and dismay to the prospect of pregnant ex-service women receiving grants and compensation vastly in excess of those serving members of the armed forces who have been injured in the course of their duties.

Mr. Peter Thurnham (Bolton, North-East): I congratulate my right hon. Friend on an excellent statement, which is welcomed on the Conservative Benches as a positive way forward for providing additional opportunities for Britain's disabled people. I particularly welcome his proposals for the Government's own lead. The Government are a big player as an employer. I urge my right hon. Friend to produce the action checklist and act on it as soon as possible.

Mr. Scott: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, whose record in disability matters is well known and highly respected. As I said in my statement, if we are to encourage others to take action in this important area, the Government must set a lead and an example.

Ms Liz Lynne (Rochdale): Is the Minister aware that, although his statement is all very well and good, it does not go far enough? Disabled people want to have their civil rights entrenched in law. They want to be treated like ordinary human beings, because that is what they are.

Why are there no details about transport in the statement? The Minister says that he wants to get more disabled people into employment. Does he not realise that without accessible transport, they cannot get to that employment? He mentioned action in the document. Is he now saying that education and persuasion have not worked?

Mr. Scott: No—I do not agree with the hon. Lady's last point. Increasingly, in terms not only of physical provision but of attitudes towards disabled people, we have made a great deal of progress. However, I recognise that I would not be making this statement today if I did not recognise that we needed to do better and go further in the future.

In a way, I believe that transport has been a good example of how significant progress has been made in recent years without the need for some over-arching legislation. On the railways, all new rolling stock is now accessible for disabled people. We already have in London and in other parts of the country pilot projects for properly accessible buses.

All new taxis in London have to be accessible to wheelchairs, and 80 other local authorities around the country are following the same rules that were started in London. Anyone who looks at what has happened in terms of accessible transport in Britain over the 10 years should recognise the substantial progress that has been made.

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend (Bexleyheath): Is it not a parliamentary fact that private Members' Bills are frail craft, ill suited for highly controversial and expensive legislation? I warmly congratulate my right hon. Friend on presenting a document that talks in terms of what is practical and affordable. I congratulate him on getting money out of the Treasury for that purpose at a difficult time.

Mr. Scott: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, who has also contributed a great deal on disability matters. [Interruption.] We shall have to see. This is a consultation document. I know that it may be an unfamiliar concept to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) to publish suggestions and then listen to what people outside have to say about them. We will listen to the representations that are made to us and then make firm decisions on the way forward.

Mr. Roger Berry (Kingswood): I thank the Minister for giving me, as the most recent promoter of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill, early sight of his statement and the consultation document. There have been many such Bills, and I hope that it will not be necessary for there to be many more.

Will the Minister acknowledge that the very reason why he has made the statement here this morning is that there is overwhelming support throughout the country for the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill? If the Minister is saying that the Government cannot accept the principle of rights-based legislation, will he tell please tell the House why neither he nor any of his colleagues voted against the Second Reading of the Bill and why he did not oppose a single clause of the Bill in Committee?

Will the right hon. Gentleman recognise that the one option for progress that has the overwhelming majority support of Members of this House is, indeed, the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill? In the spirit of consultation —I share his view that it is necessary to consult—will the Minister circulate with his documents for consultation the one proposal that a majority of Members of Parliament are on record as supporting?

Mr. Scott: I recognise the proprietorial interest that the hon. Gentleman has in his piece of legislation.

Mr. Sheerman: Don't be so patronising.

Mr. Scott: I am not being patronising. I genuinely understand the hon. Gentleman's commitment to the concept behind his Bill. I do not happen to agree, and the Government do not agree, that it is the way forward. I believe that much of the swell of support for his Bill came about because of a general wish in our society to meet the needs of disabled people. I believe that, when people understand what we propose in a practical and affordable manner, they will support us in the work that we are doing, and look forward to the action that will flow from the process.

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): I commend my right hon. Friend for both the tone and the content of his statement, and for the positive steps that he has taken in issuing the consultation document. It is far more in character than his attitude to the private Member's Bill, which some of us found rather disappointing, and which seemed to alternate between ambivalence and a negative approach. Will he assure me that, during the consultation process, full account will be taken of the needs and problems of those who suffer what has been described as the invisible disability—the deaf and hard of hearing?

Mr. Scott: It will certainly be our intention to take account of those needs as we go forward. I hope that the House as a whole, rather than harking back to the approach of the Bill so recently discussed, will look forward in a constructive way to the future. Anyone who has held my job knows that the largest group of disabled people in our society is the deaf and hard of hearing. We will certainly not neglect their needs.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing (Moray): In his reference to the financial aspects and how disabled people could have access to finance, the Minister referred to the "main forms" of disability. Does that mean that he is talking about the categorisation of disability? Disability comes in many forms, and each is distressing, and we certainly would not like to see any categorisation. As to monitoring discrimination, the Minister indicated that a much closer watch will be kept on that. Who will be appointed to do the monitoring and to whom will they be accountable? Finally, what budget limit has been placed on the exercise by the Treasury?

Mr. Scott: It would clearly be wrong to go into the consultation process with some predetermined financial limit on what action might follow, and no such thing has been done. We will be going out genuinely to consult on the proposals in the document, and then looking to see what action can be taken. We do not enter this with predetermined attitudes, and we look forward to receiving and involving all the organisations of and for disabled people, as well as hon. Members. Of course, we are not forgetting that there are many other people whose businesses and other activities will be affected by any legislation that we pass in this sensitive area.

Mr. Roger Knapman (Stroud): Does my right hon. Friend agree that his statement successfully balances the special needs of disabled people with the reasonable ability of a Government to pay, unlike the past rhetoric of Opposition Members?

Mr. Scott: I am sure that that is right; it is the correct approach for us to take in this area. Having said that, I am convinced—I am sure that all those who have held my post are convinced—that there is still discrimination against disabled people. Of course, this involves some expenditure, but it also involves changing many people's attitudes towards disabled people and recognising the immense untapped potential there still is for disabled people to contribute in a whole variety of ways to our society.

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): The credibility among disabled people of the consultation that the Minister wants will depend on what happens after that consultation. The Minister referred to the three-month period. Can he tell the House a little more about what will happen?

Will there be a Bill, or will there be a debate initiated by the Government, which would give hon. Members a proper opportunity to discuss all the points raised in the consultation? If that is the case, can he assure the House that we will not be treated as we were, and as my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) was, over the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill, when we did not have a proper allocation of time? May we have an assurance that, after the consultation, something constructive will happen and there will be adequate time for the House to discuss that?

Mr. Scott: I would not have produced a document, as I have today, unless I was looking forward to positive action following the consultation process. I very much hope that, during the three-month period, we will get a good and positive response to the ideas in the document. Legislation is referred to in the document. We will have to see how to carry that work forward when we return.

Dr. Charles Goodson-Wickes (Wimbledon): Does my right hon. Friend agree that the difficulty in this saga is not a question of principle but the practical application to help the disabled, in which he has such a singularly distinguished record? Is there not a stark contrast between the practical help offered by the Government in the instant help given to those on the disability living allowance introduced by this Government, compared to the Labour Government's mobility allowance introduced in 1976, which was phased in over a long period? Does that not demonstrate the differences between posturing and practical application?

Mr. Scott: Of course, Labour Governments suffer when they seek to introduce measures in this area—and, indeed, in a whole range of other areas—from their total and proven inability to run a successful economy. The controls of the International Monetary Fund always play a significant part in their activities.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): Is not the reality that the Government have been dragged kicking, screaming and protesting into introducing the consultation document? May I take the Minister back to the question asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox), about what might happen in terms of legislation? May we have an assurance that, in so far as the consultation period ends in three months' time, at the end of October, we will have legislation before July next year? I give the Minister notice that Labour will seek substantially to amend that legislation if it does not meet our objectives.

Mr. Scott: The hon. Gentleman knows perfectly well that I am not in a position to give that assurance, but I can tell him that we are approaching the consultative exercise, on which we are now embarking, in a positive way, and looking forward to a positive outcome as a result.

Sir Ivan Lawrence (Burton): Is not the only pathetic thing about the statement this morning the ridiculous rant of the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), and the fact that so many Labour Members have singularly failed to welcome what is an important step forward for the disabled?

Is it not a fact that this Government have achieved more for the disabled than the Labour party could ever have dreamt of 15 years ago? Is it not both presumptuous and impertinent for Labour Members to arrogate to themselves the monopoly of caring for the disabled, and the belief that they have the only practical and sensible system for achieving the sort of end for the disabled that all of us in the House want?

Mr. Scott: With his long experience of advocacy and presenting effective cases, I do not think that I can do better than simply say that I agree with my hon. and learned Friend.

Ms Glenda Jackson (Hampstead and Highgate): If, as the Minister said, the costs of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill are unquantifiable, how have the figures which I have heard, which range from £15 billion to £18 billion, been arrived at, and why was there no detailed definition of such costs in the Bill? Further, with whom will the Minister consult? All we have heard from Tory Members is an attitude to the disabled which suggests that they are constantly looking for patronising help. It is not help the disabled want; it is civil rights.

Mr. Scott: The document is being distributed across the whole range of those who are interested in this matter. Of course, it involves the organisations of and for disabled people, as well as hon. Members. It will also be of particular interest to those on whom any costs may fall, either in the public or the private sector. I look forward to receiving a whole range of views about the way forward, but the Government certainly intend to approach the matter in a constructive and forward-looking manner.

Dr. Ian Twinn (Edmonton): I thank my right hon. Friend for his statement today and for the opportunity it gives the country as a whole for constructive consultation on this matter. Is he aware that the 60 per cent. increase in funding for the London dial-a-ride has been warmly welcomed in London since the demise of the Greater London council? Is that not a good example of how the Government have taken positive and constructive action throughout their time in office to help disabled people and not relied on adding burdens on industry which may in fact harm the interests of disabled people?

Mr. Scott: The whole point of the consultation document is to be able to balance a whole range of factors —some leaning one way, some another way. I certainly reinforce my admiration for the progress that we have made in terms of dial-a-ride. But in a whole range of other areas, surely those who have open rather than closed minds recognise the tremendous progress that has been made over the past 15 years.

Mr. David Hinchliffe (Wakefield): Does the Minister recall that, when the National Health Service and Community Care Bill was discussed in the House, assurances were given by the right hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley), who is now the Secretary of State for Health, that the advocacy provisions in the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 were overtaken by the provisions in the 1990 Act? Obviously, that is now nonsense to all disabled people in the country.

The Minister made no mention whatever of advocacy provisions this morning. What steps will the Government take within the review to ensure that proper advocacy provisions for disabled persons are introduced in Britain?

Mr. Scott: Manifestly, those matters are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and, undoubtedly, the hon. Gentleman will take an opportunity to raise that matter with her. We certainly do not want closely to define the consultative process on the document. If the hon. Gentleman thinks that he has points that are relevant to it, he is welcome to put them forward.

Mr. Eric Pickles (Brentwood and Ongar): My right hon. Friend talked about financial services and suggested that a code of voluntary practice is appropriate. Given the change in those financial services, that is probably better than primary legislation. In his discussions with the industry, and bearing in mind the fact that one of our larger institutions recently had to withdraw some of its employees from work because it got the guidelines wrong, will my right hon. Friend ensure that the guidelines, when they are issued, receive wide publicity and are aimed at customers of those financial institutions?

In addition, will my right hon. Friend stress to the industry the fact that, should it decide to place additional sums on a client's costs because he or she is disabled, it will have to be demonstrably proven that that extra cost relates to the disability and that there is a strong reason why such a cost should not be absorbed generally within the services?

Mr. Scott: I am sure that my hon. Friend's latter point will be taken seriously by those who take part in the consultation—the organisations that represent banking, insurance and building societies.

Mrs. Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): The document contains few international comparisons, which does not surprise me. In 1981, I was the rapporteur in the European Parliament for the International Year of the Disabled, which involved making comparisons between European countries on the situation of disabled people. At that time, the United Kingdom was very near the bottom of the pile on rights for disabled people, and it is still at the bottom of the pile. This document is the mark of a weak Minister, who has failed to make his case with the Treasury.

On the quota system, it has been suggested that the system ought to be voluntary. In other European countries, a financial levy is imposed on employers who do not meet the quota system. The Minister should consider that carefully, as its strength has already been established. The Department of Employment is one of the few Government Departments to have reached its 3 per cent. quota. Is he suggesting that, if there is a voluntary scheme, Departments will be able to throw the quota system out of the window?

Mr. Scott: I described earlier the new actions being taken throughout the civil service to encourage the employment and retention of disabled people. We will be approaching that matter very positively throughout Government.

The hon. Lady's recollection of the pattern of provision in other European countries may or may not be correct. I have visited a number of them since I was given my present responsibilities. In this country, we have nothing to be ashamed of in our provision for disabled people. She mentioned the concept of imposing a levy on employers if they fail to reach their quota, as happens in one or two European countries. Many employers in those countries prefer to pay the levy rather than employ a disabled person.

Mrs. Angela Knight (Erewash): As part of his consultation, will my right hon. Friend explore better ways to promote best practice and effective practical help, such as the excellent decision by Trent Buses, which operates in my constituency, to replace its existing bus fleet with so-called "kneeling buses", to the great benefit of disabled people and the elderly?

Mr. Scott: I very much agree. Opposition Members often deride good practice as an ineffective approach. Of course I recognise that law has to play a part in our approach to meeting disabled people's needs, but I am sure that good practice, and a deeper understanding of the contribution that disabled people can make and the extent to which we can voluntarily overcome obstacles to their doing so—in a way that encourages good practice—also have an important part to play.

Several hon. Members rose—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am now going to bring questions on the statement to a close. Hon. Members will understand that we shall be returning to the subject of disability. Today is the last day for private Members' Bills and I cannot deny those Members with Bills on the Order Paper the opportunity to reach their Bills.

Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Bill [Lords]

Not amended (in the Standing Committee), considered; reported, without amendment.

Order for Third Reading read.—[Queen's consent, on behalf of the Crown, signified.]

11.43 am

Mr. George Kynoch (Kincardine and Deeside): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

This is an important measure, which has received all-party support in this House and in the other place. In the Standing Committee, I welcomed the support given by the hon. Members for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) and for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace), and I am pleased to see the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) here on behalf of the Scottish National party.

The Bill would introduce changes to fisheries legislation to allow my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to control all fishing activities in inshore waters, where it seems to him that such control is necessary to preserve stocks, or prevent disputes between fishermen using different and incompatible types of fishing gear.

Those powers are already available to my right hon. Friend where fishing is conducted from fishing vessels. The recent growth in land-based dredging operations, however, has allowed a coach and horses to be driven through the control measures that Parliament put in place in the Inshore Fishing Act 1984. That has meant that the full weight of stock conservation has fallen on one group of fishermen who are prosecuting the stock in question. There is broad agreement in Scotland that that is inequitable, and I believe that the House will share that view.

It is clear that the law should be changed to ensure that all who profit from an activity also contribute to the long-term survival of the resources that they are using. Only by that means can real sustainability be assured. Developments in other parts of the fishing industry have shown that sustainability can be difficult enough to achieve when all concerned are contributing to sensible conservation measures. It is clear that, without that solution, no conservation measures will work. If there is no conservation, there will be no long-term industry.

The problems of land dredging arise in many parts of Scotland, but the activity has proved most worrying on the Solway firth. That is partly because of the vast sandbanks that are exposed at low tide. They often stretch as far as the eye can see—about three or four miles. The sandbanks are ideal for populations of cockles and, in recent years, a fishery has developed to extract them.

In the beginning, a small number of local vessels adapted their fishing equipment to take cockles, but, as increasing numbers of tractors also joined in the fishery, it became evident that the cockle stocks were diminishing. That reduction was brought about and aggravated by the situation across the sea in Holland, where the Dutch Waddensee cockle fishery closed in 1992. Some of the Dutch fishermen decided to come to Scotland to prosecute the stocks there.

The hydraulic suction dredgers used are tractor-drawn. That is a highly efficient method of harvesting cockles, but unfortunately the dredgers sort, and almost entirely remove, cockles of a certain age and size, which significantly reduces the biomass of stocks within a site.

The survival of the remaining cockles is good only if they are left undisturbed. Unfortunately, with that method of extraction, they are not.

Dredging has an impact not only on cockles, but on the other flora and fauna found in the sea bed. The magnitude of that impact will depend on the frequency of dredging, on the depth at which it occurs and on whether the fauna is able to move away from the site of disturbance. The damage is significant environmentally and has an impact on the life of the sea bed.

The stock reduction may in part have resulted from entirely natural fluctuations in stock levels. I understand that cockle stocks are especially vulnerable to large fluctuations in their numbers. I do not intend to go into details of the reproductive cycle of a cockle—

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): I do not want to encourage my hon. Friend to go into the sex life of a mollusc—exciting or dull though that may be. The obverse, however, is that, when sensible conservation measures are taken, the refreshment of stocks can be very rapid for precisely the same reason.

Mr. Kynoch: My hon. Friend raises a valid point, but he will recognise that the reductions that can occur naturally and through the aggravated process of dredging mean that it is necessary to have conservation measures, and that is what the Bill is about.

I was talking about natural fluctuations, which are a part of the natural biology of the cockle. It is clearly a factor within which fishermen have to work and, as my hon. Friend said, they must take cognisance of it. It is not impossible that some of the falling stock levels were due to natural and environmental reasons, entirely unrelated to either the land-based or vessel-based dredging activities. However, surveys of the cockle beds showed beyond doubt that the population had shrunk considerably.

Because of that, my hon. Friend the Minister had to judge whether the existing levels of fishing could safely continue, given the changing size of the cockle stock. A letter put out by the Scottish Office on 10 June 1993 referred to the stocks situation in Solway:

"Updated scientific assessment of cockle stocks in the Solway have just become available. These indicate that the biomass has improved slightly from its low in 1991 . . . though stocks remain well below the 197m per square km detected in 1990. However much of the latest increase stems from good spat settlement in 1992 and these very young cockles form a very high proportion of the total stock biomass. Stock assessments of older cockles indicate a steady and continuing decline . . . After two poor years, the good spat settlement in 1992 is encouraging. However, the exploitable stock biomass remains at very low levels and is, in fact, below the level at which the fishery was closed last year."

As result of the statistics, the Minister extended the fishery's closure beyond July 1993 and has said that it will remain closed until August 1994. I understand that he has renewed that closure, because the situation is still poor. Of course, that applies only to vessels which fish from the sea.

It was at the point when my hon. Friend acted that local vessel owners pressed him and the Scottish Office to control the activities of all cockle fishermen, to make sure that sufficient population levels remain for stocks to regenerate themselves. They fully realised that they would have to be affected by any controls as well and their motivation was not to put an end to land-based dredging while they continued regardless. They accepted that, in the absence of powers to control tractor dredgers, it would be themselves alone who would have to stop fishing, at least in the short term.

I applaud the fishermen for the responsible attitude that they have shown to stock conservation and I also sympathise with them because they have had to suffer one-sided controls for so long. I know that they are eagerly awaiting the completion of the Bill and that they are equally eager for the powers to be used as soon as possible, to bring all fishing activities under the existing controls. I hope that my hon. Friend will say something about how he envisages the powers being used and how quickly and effectively they can be brought in.

Concerns have also been raised by other interest groups. Cockles are an important foodstuff for many coastal bird populations. The south-west of Scotland is particularly rich in bird wintering and nesting areas. It is not the only part of Scotland which is affected by the measure and which has cockle areas.

I received information from the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds—it has been extremely helpful in the preparation of the details of the Bill and in providing background information to myself and colleagues who have approached it—that cockling areas that are of international importance for wild birds include not only the Solway but Dornoch firth, Cromarty firth and Otterswick in Orkney.

The areas are spread throughout Scotland and while the problem at present exists only in the Solway firth, it is likely that it could be aggravated, and could spread to other parts of Scotland. The Press and Journal of 28 April 1992 states:

"Pirates plunder Tain shellfish".

Tractor dredgers must have already got up to that part of Scotland.

The activities of tractor dredgers and, to some extent, other fishing activities, obviously upset the fragile balance which exists within the eco-system. In particular, dredging activities conducted at low tide can disturb roosting birds during the winter months, as well as the foreshore when it is exposed or covered with shallower water than would be the case with vessel dredgers. That means that overturned sand that has been left to dry out could have a serious impact on many other marine organisms that live in the same stratum of the foreshore as cockles.

If there are not enough cockles for birds to eat, they can starve to death. In the Dutch situation to which I have referred, there was a significant death rate among the eider ducks that fed in that area. Undersized cockles that are returned to the sea as part of the process of suction dredging are less likely to survive if they are returned to parts of the beach that have dried out.

On the other hand, vessel dredgers return small shellfish to the sea bed while they are still covered in water and that allows them to burrow easily back into the sand. Another clear impact on local bird populations—this applies equally to vessel dredgers and tractors—is caused by the fact that the number of cockles remaining for local bird populations is reduced. It must be obvious that that may have an impact on breeding success and can in extreme cases lead to the short-term survival of adult birds.

The House knows that much of rural Scotland has outstanding beauty. [HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."] I am pleased to hear my hon. Friends from south of the border agreeing with that; may many more of them come to see the beauties of Scotland. In particular, they may like to see the beauties of the Solway firth.

The countryside is a valuable natural resource in its own right, but it is also of inestimable value in attracting tourists to areas that otherwise would have limited means of income generation. Tourists come for a wide variety of reasons, but one is to see the wild animals and birds that thrive in those areas. Any potential impact on birds would therefore be worrying in its own right, but could also have an impact on the long-term income generated from the tourism industry.

The Annandale Herald of Thursday 3 December says:

"Scottish Office environment minister, Sir Hector Monro, announced international conservation designations for the Upper Solway Flats and Marshes this week. The site, which straddles the Scottish/English border, has been made a Special Protection Area for Birds and a Wetland of International Importance under the Ramsar convention."

People will come to visit the Solway firth not just to see the bird life but to experience the peace and quiet which is so natural there. I know that the RSPB has circulated hon. Members with photographs of what the beach at the Solway firth looks like with the monstrosities of tractors and dredgers. There is a man in the photograph and it clearly shows that the suction dredger is more than double the size of that man. These objects go charging up and down the beach, ripping it to pieces, and they have an effect on the peace and quiet of the area.

Mr. Alex Salmond (Banff and Buchan): The measures that the hon. Gentleman is proposing are generally thought to be constructive. Is it not all the more a pity that, the last time they came before the House, they were caught up in the disreputable attempts by his hon. Friends to delay and stop discussion of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill? Is not the point that we should take from this that constructive measures such as these should not become a part of the tactics used in this place to stop other hon. Members' constructive measures?

Mr. Kynoch: If the hon. Gentleman had been present on that occasion, he might understand that my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) raised valuable points about the problems related to ownership of the tractors and leasing commitments. He raised valid points about which there was concern and he contributed significantly to highlighting the importance of the details of the Bill.

Mr. Peter Luff (Worcester): My hon. Friend will no doubt recall that the only reason that the Bill failed to complete its Committee stage on that day was that the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) called an unnecessary Division, which meant that the Bill was lost.

Mr. Kynoch: I agree; that is why I want to ensure that we get the Bill through today.

I do not believe that all land-based dredging need necessarily be prohibited, but it must be controlled. That will ensure a proper balance between it and other types of fishing. The powers in the Bill will be used to ensure an overall balance between fishing activities generally and the flora and fauna that would be affected by any activity.

Land-based dredging techniques are in their infancy and I do not believe that anyone can say at this stage that that activity must be curtailed for ever more throughout Scotland and at all times of the year. It is important, however, to ensure that the Minister has flexible powers available to use in whatever way is necessary in the circumstances that face him. In this case, he should have the power to address the anomaly whereby conservation measures affect those who fish from vessels, while, unfortunately, they must watch as tractors on the beach continue to deplete the stocks of cockles.

The Bill has, therefore, been carefully drafted to allow seasonal controls and for those controls to apply to certain parts of the coastline only—for example, in areas of particular sensitivity to bird life. That flexibility is similar to the powers already available in the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984 in relation to vessels. Those powers have worked well in the past 10 years and it can only be right that, when the Act is extended, similar flexibility should exist in its revised coverage.

The Bill has support from both sides of the House and from all fishing organisations. I was speaking to Bob Allan, chief executive of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation, just last night and he reconfirmed his support for the Bill. I therefore believe that it should reach the statute book and pass into law as quickly as possible.

Mr. Peter Luff (Worcester): The hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) once again raised the canard about why a number of Conservative Members are keen to speak about the Bill. I will not weary him once again with an account of those reasons; I simply refer him to column 1039 of the Official Report of 20 May, which gives a full and adequate account of our concerns about the Bill.

Mr. Salmond: I am sure that the hon. Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) did not realise what he was saying when he referred to my non-attendance on 20 May. I am sure that, on reflection, he will recall that that was the day of John Smith's funeral and will want to withdraw his imputation.

Mr. Luff: I will happily give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) if he wishes to help to clear up this matter.

Mr. Kynoch: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for giving way. If the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) had been here on that day, he would have realised that we were sympathetic about the fact that Opposition Members were not present. I was not implying anything about his absence, but he was suggesting that that sensible debate had been totally unnecessary. If he had read Hansard fully, he would have appreciated that the points raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) were valid. I do not want to imply that the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan was absent through lack of interest and if that is what I did imply, I do not want it to be on the record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): Order. I think that those mutual explanations will suffice for the moment. Can we now get back to the Third Reading?

Mr. Luff: I agree entirely with your judgment, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The two basic themes behind the Bill are environmental and economic. One deals with protecting birds and the other with protecting the activities of responsible fishermen. Both those needs are extremely urgent. It is my great regret that we were unable to give the Bill its Third Reading on 20 May, so that it could reach the statute book. Conservative Members, at least, know the reason for that.

There is an urgent need to act. I should like to quote from a leaflet entitled "The Solway Firth" produced by English Nature and Scottish Natural Heritage. It states:

"Today the Solway's highly productive and largely unchanged environment continues to play a key role in many people's lives. With careful management, some of the more traditional means of earning a living such as those in the fishing industry may contribute to the local economy for a long time to come. At the same time the relatively unspoilt coastline with its combination of mudflat, rocky shore, sea cliff and sandy beach is attracting new commercial activities that include tourism, bird-watching and industrial development.

To manage all the Solway's rich resources wisely so that they are still there for future generations to enjoy and use, will require a careful balancing of all present and future needs."

That sums up the purpose that lies behind the Bill.

About 19 months ago, the Scottish Office announced enhanced protection for the upper Solway firth. On 10 December 1992, the Galloway News quoted the Dalry-based RSPB conservation officer for Dumfries and Galloway, Chris Rollie, as saying:

"The RSPB are delighted that the Government has at last recognised the international importance of the Solway and we hope that this will increase the impetus for proper regulation of the cockle industry, for example, to take account of the internationally important birds and other wildlife."

On 5 May, The Herald contained a long report on concerns about marine pollution and human activities, particularly as they affect bird life. It reported David Dick, the RSPB's species protection officer as saying,

"points to 75,000 seabird deaths along Scotland's East coast in February. Scientists are fairly sure the birds died from starvation. They suspect bad weather played a part. But the scale of the deaths has confounded them.

Mr. Dick is also concerned at the increases of some bird populations and the decreases of others. It all points to further signs of an eco-system tilting out of balance.

'It shows just how little we know about how the sea works' he says."

I underline those points. I am sure that hon. Members will have noted Mr. Dick's observation that starvation on the other side of Scotland may have played a part in the deaths of those sea birds. The Bill is aimed at preventing that fate.

In the same article, Bob Allan, chief executive of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation, is reported as saying:

"fishermen are all in favour of participating in campaigns to sustain a healthy marine population, but he warns that they are being locked into 'a straitjacket of bureaucracy'—of regulations and directives from Brussels.

'The last thing we want is a whole new set of rules,' he says. 'If they are coming to talk to us as fishermen about ways we can help them to sustain bird population and other forms of marine life, fine. But they have to appreciate that the industry is in many ways fighting for survival.'"

Against that background, the federation's support for the Bill is all the more admirable.

Controls are urgently required to protect not just birds but, as the quote from The Herald suggests, fishermen. Fish Trader of 5 to 18 March states:

"Cockle beds in the Solway have also been closed and new by-laws are proposed for the Dee. Fortunately cockle stocks in the Burry Inlet, South Wales have been protected by a strict quota system and the fishery, centred on Penclawdd, remains productive.

Ups and downs in stock levels are typical in this fishery and cockle beds can regenerate quickly after a good 'spatfall'."

That was the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside. The article continues:

"But many fishermen fear the cockle bonanza will be over unless stricter controls are introduced soon to protect the declining stocks."

In other words, this is a problem not just for the Solway firth and for Scotland but for the entire United Kingdom. That is why I am here, representing an English constituency.

My first question to the Minister is the same as that posed by my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside. How soon after the Bill receives Royal Assent will its provisions be enacted? The need for action is urgent. In a recent letter to me, the Minister with responsibility for fisheries in Scotland said that, because we had lost the Bill more than a month ago, part of this season's stock has already been lost to effective protection. How quickly does he intend to introduce the measures in the Bill?

I have also received a series of specific questions from the RSPB, some of which I have written to the Minister about. He has been kind enough to reply in writing. As part of the RSPB's new and welcome marine life campaign, it published a document earlier this year, entitled, "Recommendations for the Protection of Seabirds' Marine Habitats", in which it spoke about the need to establish protected sea areas under United Kingdom law. It states:

"Biological targets should be established to judge the success or failure of management. Depending upon the objectives in protecting a site, targets could be in terms of richness of the seabed invertebrate community, fish stock characteristics or wildlife populations.

There must be a basis in law for managing all activities, even existing rights which are not compatible with site management objectives. Fisheries authorities must have proactive powers to manage fishing activities, both in the interest of the fishery and for ensuring fishing in an area is compatible with other uses of the site.

The Government is being called upon to protect marine wildlife and fisheries from various threats, such as tankers, offshore development etc. A coherent programme for identifying sites needing protection and controlling threats must be established by the Government, rather than the current ad hoc site protection measures."

The Bill is welcome—I hope that it will receive the approval of the House—but it is an ad hoc measure in respect of the RSPB's overall marine life campaign. Under the new European habitats and species directive, the Government are obliged to designate and protect coastal and marine areas, including the Solway, Cromarty firth and the Severn estuary, rather nearer to my constituency of Worcester.

I should be grateful if my hon. Friend the Minister would say whether a decision has been made on which coastal and marine areas should be designated under the habitats and species directive and what new measures will be introduced to control fishing in such areas. The Association of District Councils in England and Wales and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities have asked repeatedly for certain activities below low-water mark, including fish farming, to be brought within the jurisdiction of local authorities. I wonder whether my hon. Friend the Minister would repeat what he said to me in his letter about the intention of legislation to extend the jurisdiction of local authorities below the low-water mark.

The regulatory mechanism for fisheries in Scotland is determined by my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for fisheries, and in England and Wales fisheries regulations are determined at local level by sea fisheries committees. Will my hon. Friend comment on an intention to introduce sea fisheries committees in Scotland?

I also press my hon. Friend the Minister about the levels of fine in the original 1984 legislation which are not addressed in the Bill. The levels are referred to in section 4(2), which states:

"Any person guilty of an offence under this section shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £5,000 or, on conviction on indictment, to a fine."

Does my hon. Friend regard those fines as truly adequate 10 years after the original Bill? Was consideration given, in advising my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside, to the need to uprate those fines to provide an effective deterrent?

Several amendments that I have tabled have not been selected for debate. I do not challenge your decision on that point, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I hope that the Minister will be able to give some assurances about the issues that those amendments address, particularly the advice that is given to fisheries officers. The unselected amendments deal with reasonableness in enforcement. I seek a simple assurance from my hon. Friend the Minister that fisheries officers are advised to act reasonably at all times.

We know that the federation supports the Bill—hon. Members heard me quote the article in The Herald—and we heard of the federation's concern about the straitjacket of regulation and bureaucracy that it considers that it suffers from and the fight for survival that it is engaged in. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister would agree that we must not harass fishermen unnecessarily. Fisheries protection vessels—one of my family has served as a fisheries protection officer, so I know something of the subject—can engage in fairly intimidating tactics to stop illegal fishing. They can fire blanks, they can call up a frigate, they can buzz a vessel with a helicopter, and so on. Long chases can be quite exciting experiences. I hope that, at the end of a chase, there is no temptation to vindictiveness on the part of fisheries officers.

What would constitute unreasonableness? An intimidatory approach to searching individuals or cabins, excessive intrusions into privacy and so on all need to be considered. The Bill confers remarkable powers on fisheries officers—powers which I am sure that officers use with discretion. The House will be a little surprised to know that—I say this with no sense of flippancy—this is the only legislation that confers on fisheries protection officers, and sometimes naval officers, an absolute right to ask a pretty girl to submit to a strip search without giving any reason whatsoever. That might be a fanciful example of the powers in the Bill, but my hon. Friend the Minister will have to concede that it is factually correct. I hope that he will be able to assure me that the guidance given to fisheries protection officers deals fully with that point.

This is an important Bill for Scotland; the issues that it raises are important for the whole of the United Kingdom. I commend it to the House.

Mrs. Angela Knight (Erewash): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) on introducing this subject. It is obviously greatly important to him and to other Scottish Members. The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds has raised the matter throughout the country. My eight-year-old son, who is a member of the RSPB, has brought the matter to my attention in the way in which only small children can, and he will no doubt do so in respect of other environmental subjects.

I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff), who obviously has an in-depth knowledge of the subject. I should be interested to learn the answer to his question about strip searching and whether it is true or nothing more than a fishy tale.

I represent a land-locked constituency, but my constituents are not land locked; they travel widely—for example, to Scotland and to other parts of the country. I am conscious from their comments on this and many other environmental subjects just how such issues are becoming increasingly important to everybody, wherever they may live. There is a need for conservation. There is also a need for people to be able to go about their normal course of business and earn their livelihoods. Often, there is considerable tension between those two requirements, but I suspect that that is not the case in respect of the Bill, as the intention is to do in Scotland what has already been done in England and Wales. Often, Scottish Members complain that legislation is introduced first in Scotland and then later in England and Wales. This legislation mirrors what already exists in England and Wales or can be implemented in England and Wales.

There has been an advance in cockle fishing techniques since the introduction of the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984. I suspect that it was not visualised then that cockle fishing could take place in other ways—for example, tractor dredging, which can be very destructive not only for cockle fisheries but for estuaries generally. I have always understood cockling to be a traditional activity in many estuaries in Scotland, England and Ireland. We all recall the song that we learned at school —[HON. MEMBERS: "Sing it."] I will not sing it, but it goes something like, "In Dublin's fair city, where the maids are so pretty". I am sure that hon. Members can finish the first verse for me.

The tensions and difficulties arise not in the traditional activity of cockling but in the suction dredging technique, which the Bill would control. An extremely disturbing survey undertaken by the university of Aberdeen showed that heavy exploitation by whatever technique of such fishing would result in, perhaps, a short-lived, high-yielding fishery but then periods when stocks were too low to support a viable fishery. Those who indulge in such techniques ruin the livelihoods of others.

The problem occurs elsewhere. Disturbing reports have been brought to my attention, in particular one in The Independent in June 1993. It was reported that more than 20 men were travelling the country in search of cockles and were using two articulated trucks, tractors and an all-terrain vehicle, and that they were attempting to take cockles from an estuary in Wales. The problem is more widespread than has been mentioned so far. The report goes on:

"a local cockle picker said of incoming gatherers: 'They have no right to come here. We want to gather cockles here for the next 40 years and not just for a couple of weeks'."

That demonstrates succinctly exactly what the Bill seeks to achieve. An article that appeared in a newspaper a few months earlier said that fast-moving pirates from the south of England are going to a bay in Scotland, which is rich in shellfish, to take the shellfish in a short period, thereby destroying the fishing there for the future.

[Mrs. Angela Knight]

Clearly, tractor dredging is causing great disturbance. It is not only destroying normal fishing but causing many difficulties for other wildlife, particularly birds. Hon. Members will agree that it is much easier to destroy than to conserve, but it is essential for the future that measures be available so that conservation can be dealt with in a sympathetic, clear and coherent manner. I support the Bill.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): It is surprising that the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond), who criticised hon. Members who wanted to speak in this debate for filibustering to keep out another Bill, has vanished now that the discussion is under way.

It is a pleasure to discuss a Bill on conservation, as we rarely have an opportunity to discuss conservation relating to a matter that commands widespread support from both sides of the House. As my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) said, this is an important Bill. As an English Member, I step into this debate somewhat reluctantly as I want to discuss the Solway firth, which the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), knows like the back of his hand. If I make an incorrect statement about it, I am sure that he will correct me immediately. I know the Solway because it is near my constituency. It is a wonderful part of the country and its estuary is of unique value to the landscape and wildlife of the British Isles, so it needs careful protection.

The area is also popular among tourists who go there to see the wildlife and landscape. I know of only one tourist who did not like the area. He was a local man called Paul Jones, who went on to become the commander-in-chief of the Confederate Navy during the American civil war and was responsible for the last invasion of these islands. Funnily enough, the area that he chose to invade was Kircudbright which is on the Solway, and he bombarded the town. So that tourist went back to the area with an evil intention.

The protection of wildlife in the area through the control of the cockle fisheries is essential. Hon. Members may not know that the other side of the Solway is England, where cockle fishing has been controlled for many years. The English have a much better record on conservation than the Scots. For instance, we took off the salmon nets in about 1865, whereas the Scots still have the right to take salmon with nets on their side of the Solway. I believe that the Scots refused to take off their nets in the 19th century because they were frightened that Englishmen would come and steal their fish. So rather than have Englishmen steal their fish, they would fish it themselves, regardless of the conservation consequences. That is a typical Scottish attitude.

The Scots had a fascinating way of catching salmon. I realise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that a salmon is a little larger than a cockle, but it is linked by fishing. The Scots used to ride on horseback and spear the salmon in the shallow waters of the Solway, so there is a long history of fishing in that area.

One of the problems faced by the Solway cockle is the change in status of the humble cockle. We have had a good discussion on the cockle this morning, although I was hoping to hear a little about its sex life. I read up on that interesting subject, but my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside rightly spared the House the intimate details. Whereas the cockle used to be eaten by Cockneys when they went to Southend-on-Sea, it has now moved up a scale and become a shellfish delicacy, particularly on the continent. Because the Dutch closed their cockle beds, the price of cockles has been forced up to such an extent that it has caused a bonanza for tractor dredgers on the Solway and other areas.

I have visited the Solway at night [HON. MEMBERS: "What for?"] I confess that I went there for wildfowl.

Mr. Quentin Davies (Stamford and Spalding): Will my hon. Friend pursue a little further the interesting question of why the Dutch had to close their cockle beds? Was it because of the overfishing, which the Bill is designed to prevent in this country? Or was it for some other reason, such as disease, environmental damage or pollution, from which we could learn a useful lesson to safeguard the future of our cockle industry?

Mr. Atkinson: I understand that it was because of pressure from environmentalists. Overfishing and the knock-on effect on bird life caused the Dutch Government to introduce regulations to ban cockle fishing in a substantial number of traditional cockle beds. The Dutch have a passion for fish and shellfish and are determined to buy it everywhere. Interestingly, Dutchmen are behind the tractor dredging industry on the Solway. Locals will confirm that, although the tractor dredgers are locals or southerners who come up to fish, they sell their cockles to Dutch merchants who wait in the area and pay large sums of cash for bags of cockles, which are rapidly moved overseas to Holland. There are also reports of Dutchmen using British-licensed boats to fish cockles in the sea. So the high prices and the increasing demand for cockles are problems faced by the poor mollusc.

The effect on bird life has differed according to the species of bird. I am grateful to the RSPB, which has been helpful on this matter. Curiously, although the overfishing of cockles is causing a decline in most species, particularly wading birds, the population of the pintail seems to be going up, perhaps because it feeds on smaller cockles which sea fishermen are putting back into the water. I hope that, during the period of consultation that will follow the Bill's enactment, we can examine that phenomenon so that that problem can be dealt with.

I welcome the Bill and congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside on piloting it through the House. I wish it a speedy passage today and hope that it will be enacted as soon as possible so that the wildlife and traditions of the Solway firth may be preserved.

Mr. Richard Spring (Bury St. Edmunds): I thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to make a few comments. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) on promoting the Bill so effectively. It seeks to amend the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984 to make provision for the control of fishing in Scottish inshore waters by vehicles or equipment. As my hon. Friend said, it brings the law in Scotland in line with that in England and Wales.

Many threads in the Bill are being examined today. One thread involves the livelihoods of those affected by cockling and the decline in cockling stocks in the Solway firth area, the good husbandry of stocks for the future and the closing of loopholes that destroy those stocks. There is a broader environmental picture. We are talking about wildlife conservation, fisheries development, business and leisure, all of which have conflicting demands.

The problem is not unique to Scotland. My hon. Friend referred to the experience of the Netherlands. Such was the decline of cockle stocks in the Waddensea, in the North sea in the Netherlands that a closure was made. That action was taken because birds in the area were consuming 13,500 tonnes of cockles per annum—more than the stock. That shows the importance of the cockle stocks, not only to individuals who wish to consume them, but to bird life.

The Solway firth is an extremely important natural habitat, particularly for oyster catchers, knots and sea ducks, which eat cockles. The Solway firth is a natural habitat for many species of bird life. We must balance the needs of the bird life with the needs of fishermen who make their livelihoods in the area.

I believe that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, were in the Chair when I initiated an Adjournment debate on a landlocked subject—metal detecting, which causes big problems in my constituency. Due to that experience I empathise with those in the Solway firth area. Illegal metal detecting destroyed crops in my region—a phenomenon that is not dissimilar to the destruction of fishermen's livelihoods and the depletion of cockle stocks in areas such as the Solway firth. The environmental damage caused is similar and parallels can be made between the two—the spirit of the Bill is the same as the spirit behind that Adjournment debate.

In 1985 and 1989, orders were introduced to make necessary adjustments to the 1984 Act. They stressed that fishermen should voluntarily restrict their actions. The Scottish Office displayed a willingness to be flexible. We now know that the cockle fisheries were closed and the ban has been further extended.

Research was done in the "Netherlands Journal of Sea Research" in 1990 and it was found that considerable damage could be done and recovery could be quick. But it was found that if the action was repeated regularly, it caused irreparable ecological damage. Suction tractors are a new innovation and cause extensive damage when used on an unsustainable basis. The aim at the heart of the Bill is to prevent the terribly damaging effect of tractor dredging that undermines fishermen's livelihoods.

Cockles landed in 1991 in the United Kingdom totalled 40,000 tonnes; by 1993, it was down to 20,000 tonnes. As my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) said, cockles have ceased to be the staple food of cockneys and have become designer food in fashionable restaurants. It is not only the birds that have suffered from the lack of cockles, but people's wallets.

The RSPB and Scottish Natural Heritage have pressed for the measure. The Solway firth is the largest continuous area of inter-tidal habitat in the United Kingdom and is a vital resting place for migratory birds. It is the winter home to many waders and wild fowl. Oyster catchers are particularly keen on eating cockles and 34,000 of them live in the Solway firth. In addition, there are many barnacle geese from Spitsbergen, as well as pink-footed geese. Some 120,000 different birds live in the Solway firth at different times and the ecological balance of that vital area of the United Kingdom is under threat from tractor dredging. The RSPB has pressed for the Bill, which has been introduced so successfully by my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside.

There is considerable resentment among local people at the activity of individuals who appear to own or operate the tractor dredgers. They are called dolers by some local people because they appear to operate in some sort of grey economy with their bull-nosed motor cycle tractors and they are regarded by traditional fishermen as fly-by-night operators with no sense of feeling or love for the sea and its bounty.

The statistics are frightening. The tractors can collect 1.5 tonnes of cockles per hour. We know from research into rates of depletion how damaging that can be. The Bill exposes that unwelcome activity. It highlights the importance of a balance in marine life. Cockle stocks on the Solway firth dropped by about 80 per cent. between 1990 and 1992. That drop must be halted. The Bill will control tractor dredging and, in helping to ensure that cockle stocks are replenished, will play a vital part in the ecological balance in one of the most beautiful parts of these islands.

Mr. Eric Pickles (Brentwood and Ongar): The Solway firth is well known to me—I often take family holidays there—and I have had the opportunity to see tractor dredgers in operation. Such a sight would destroy any romantic idea that one had as a child of shrimping or cockling. It looks more like opencast mining.

The tractor dredgers are very efficient and quite ruthless in the way in which they take cockles from the surface and nothing much is left behind. My hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) mentioned that cockles that do not meet the necessary size requirement are cast aside. That is different from what happens on boats. Cockles are cast aside onto the beach. Whether the molluscs survive depends to a great extent on the state of the tide. In observing the tractors in operation, I did not take the view that I was watching an operation involving biodiversity or recycling in the sea.

Given a good season, cockle beds quickly regenerate, but there must be an optimum level at which they cannot form. My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmonds (Mr. Spring) talked about the Dutch experience. My hon. Friend the Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) asked whether it was a question of disease or fishing. Therein lies one of the principal dangers of not passing the Bill. The nature of over fishing means that if a disease is introduced into cockle beds—which one hopes will not happen—the constitution of those cockle beds will make them less able to survive.

We live in a constantly changing world. Cockle beds in the Wash in East Anglia, an area which I represent, have been out of action for a whole season, but fishing is about to restart. Cockling has been taking place in the Solway firth for generations and fishermen have adapted. They, too, operate a dredging system. We should not lose sight of the fact that sustainable communities in the Solway firth rely on fishing. Our fishing industry has diminished, but communities can survive, and we can look forward to their being there for the next 40 or 50 years. Communities rely on fishing and enjoy untold benefits from it which extend across the region.

[Mr. Eric Pickles]

I do not take the xenophobic attitude that was perhaps displayed by some of my hon. Friends. I do not mind who eats the cockles, whether it is Scots, the Welsh, the English or even the Belgians—if I could differentiate between Belgians and an oyster-catcher. The importance point is that if the Belgians are paying for cockles, that money is coming back into the local economy. That is part of the process of ensuring that such economies can be sustained. It is right to try to influence control at the source rather than seeking to control the vessels or tractors that extract the cockles.

Mr. Quentin Davies: My hon. Friend has not mentioned what appear from the debate to be important consumers—the birds. What are we to do about them? We have heard that birds ate more of the Dutch stocks than the annual replenishment rate. Over-consumption by birds and not over-fishing by humans destroyed the Dutch stocks. Surely no conservation measure applied to this cockle fishery will be effective unless we can cope with the problem of birds. What does my hon. Friend suggest?

Mr. Pickles: On that matter, I must defer to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds who has great knowledge of the subject. It is a matter of common sense that if vehicles are removing molluscs at the rate at which my hon. Friend the Bury St. Edmunds referred, stocks for birds will be diminished. For birds to take cockles is natural. Long before dredgers entered the Solway firth and before my hon. Friend became a Member of the House birds were taking cockles there, but nature has a way of sorting out populations. Dredgers are artificial and destroy the balance of nature. That is the reason for fishery conservation.

Some 100 or 200 years ago, there was cockelling along the Solway firth, but the way in which the cockles were taken from the sea was quite different and not as efficient as current methods. If old methods were still used, the balance of nature would be preserved. The central theme is that this practice is an important part of the economy of the Solway firth. Communities rely on it and we must do our best to ensure that the balance of nature is maintained. That is why the measure is important.

I am delighted to see that my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) has returned to the Chamber. She spoke about problems on some of our beaches caused by gangs taking cockles and other molluscs from local communities. That has led to a degree of tension and there has been some violence on our beaches, which I deprecate. By controlling the extraction of molluscs, the measure makes it less likely that cowboys will engage in raids and take from communities a commodity on which they rely as a major source of income. I commend the Bill to the House and congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside on introducing it.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland (Sir Hector Monro): I have many points to answer from my hon. Friends in this important debate. As many hon. Members have said, I have a personal interest in the Bill, because I live within sight of the Solway firth and I know its shoreline particularly well.

The Bill has had all-party support and it made speedy progress when it had a chance to do so. I will not repeat what happened on 20 May: perhaps hon. Members know the sad reason why I was not able personally to promote the Bill that day.

The general agreement in this useful debate is that it is a worthy Bill. I pay a warm tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) for guiding it through the House. I think that it is the first Bill that he has taken through the House under the private Members' Bill procedure, and I am glad to say that it looks as if it will be successful.

I thank Lord Campbell of Croy, who has great Scottish knowledge and interest, for guiding the Bill through the other place. We have had satisfactory progress on a Bill which will be of tremendous benefit to the Solway.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) referred to the ecological and economic importance of cockling on the Solway. Many of my hon. Friends highlighted the importance to the whole shoreline of bird life on the Solway. The major areas are the Caerlaverock nature reserve and the East Park centre, which many thousands of people visit each year to see barnacle geese in particular, but also the large numbers of grey and pink-footed geese on the Solway in winter and the many other species of wild fowl.

The numbers of barnacle geese had dropped to a dangerous level 20 or 30 years ago, but now 15,000 to 20,000 of them come to the Solway each winter. There appears no reason to be too concerned about their long-term future, which is good news for all those interested in bird life. However, that raises questions among the large farming population in my constituency about how many geese are sustainable in the winter months. The farmers look longingly at the large financial assistance for the farmers on Isla, who have a similar, although bigger, problem with barnacle geese.

Many hon. Members have referred to the tremendous support for the Bill from the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds. I commend it for its support and for the information it has supplied to Members of Parliament. I am pleased to have a close relationship with RSPB officials in Scotland and throughout the United Kingdom on any matter that relates to Scotland.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester referred to the position of fishery protection officers. I am sure that they would always behave reasonably in carrying out their duties under the Bill. They have immense experience around our coast, both in fishery protection vessels and in aircraft, which are also important. The Scottish Fishery Protection Agency has a code of practice on enforcement procedures. My officials go into great detail on the law as it applies to fishing activities on the shoreline and out to sea.

I was glad to hear from my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) that her children are interested in wildlife. She was right to suggest that we should encourage children to take an interest as early in life as possible. England is, perhaps, fortunate in having slightly stronger legislation on tractors than Scotland. However, Scotland should soon catch up on that. My only disappointment was that my hon. Friend did not burst into song.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester raised two points about the habitat directive. Scotland is closely following through issues related to the marine environment. Under the Natura 2000 sites, we will fulfil all responsibilities. He referred to the sea fisheries committees. Scotland has always taken a different line on that. We feel that it would add a layer of bureaucracy to an already complicated system and might, through byelaws, cause problems for the fishing industry. It is something of which we are constantly reminded by some fishermen, although others remind us that they do not want committees in Scotland.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson), who is an acknowledged expert on the countryside, shared his expertise with us. If I could just establish contact with him, I must say that I thought that I noted a hint of suspicion in his comments. I believe that he thought that English conservation legislation was perhaps more effective than the equivalent Scottish legislation.

I remind my hon. Friend that King Robert the Bruce introduced the first conservation Bill, which dealt with salmon, significantly before any such legislation in England. Of course, at about the same time we put certain men to flight at Bannockburn. [Interruption.] I want to keep hon. Members on side.

My hon. Friend was absolutely right to highlight the importance of cockling on the Solway. I shall not digress and become involved in the story that he was relating about John Paul Jones. The cottage in which he was born has recently been renovated and opened to the public, and is located near to the main cockling areas on the Solway which we are debating. My hon. Friend also mentioned the support given by the RSPB, and I reiterate our gratitude to that organisation.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) gave us some interesting information about the amount of feed required to sustain the bird population. He is right to say that we have to find a balance between the long-term livelihoods of fishermen and the sustainability of the bird population. He also mentioned the barnacle. I am sure that there is a substantial number of Brent geese in his part of the world, just as there are substantial numbers of pinks and greys on the Solway and all around the coast of Scotland.

My hon. Friend also mentioned the fact that cockling on the beaches has become a particularly unattractive sight because of the sometimes venerable tractors and, more important, the diggers and other implements which do not mix well with those who enjoy walking on the beach or bathing in the summer when cockling takes place.

We have always accepted and welcomed cockling from boats, but the problems that have been highlighted are the reason for the introduction of the Bill. We have to prevent a modern form of cockling, which has been imported perhaps from Holland and which has overtaken cockling from boats which has existed in this country for many years.

My hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) also stressed the importance of sustainability and of striking the essential balance between fishing from boats and fishing on shore. My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester asked a key question—how soon would we be able to take action? I highlight the imperative of the issue by pointing out that only this week I signed yet another order to ban cockling from fishing vessels from 1 August —in other words, the ban on vessels fishing for cockles will be continuous, because stocks are so low.

When the Bill has received Royal Assent, I shall, rightly, have to allow several weeks for consultation, but, subject to that consultation, which I must not prejudge, we shall have an order in place in the not-too-distant future. I believe that we are talking about a month or two. Initially, we certainly envisage that for the Solway firth, but, if the situation were to deteriorate on the Dornoch firth or the Moray firth or elsewhere in Scotland, legislation is available to be introduced quickly to deal with it.

My hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside spelled out the importance issue of the activity that we wish to restrict. When we introduced the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984 to provide powers to regulate inshore fishing, no one anticipated that tractor-based dredging would be introduced a few years later. This is our first opportunity since the position became serious to prevent that from happening in the future. There will be proper consultation and we will take action on the basis of scientific evidence of the availability of stocks.

My hon. Friend's Bill will give us the opportunity to make an order, again subject to consultation, to prevent dredging of cockles by tractors. My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds highlighted the huge tonnage that could be extracted in a week's fishing with dredgers. That is why we want to have the legislation in place as soon as possible.

I am disappointed, of course, that we have to prevent local fishing vessels from fishing for cockles, but that is because the stocks are so critical and so very low. After a year or so, we shall reassess the position and consider what can be done this time next year, when the order that I have just signed runs out.

We have to take all factors into account, as well as the additional duties that were placed on me and other Fisheries Ministers under the Sea Fisheries (Wildlife Conservation) Act 1992. That Act was introduced as a private Member's Bill and, like the Bill that we are discussing today, attracted strong Government support.

The long title of the 1992 Act adequately explains its function. It requires Fisheries Ministers and relevant bodies to have regard to the conservation of flora and fauna in the discharge of their functions under the Act. Section 1(1)(b) also requires Ministers to achieve a reasonable balance between conservation of flora and fauna and any other considerations to which they are required to have regard.

In effect, the Act merely confirms the existing position, because I and my colleagues in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and in the Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices already took such factors into account. However, it was helpful to confirm that in legislation and to bind our successors to the practice that we believed to be sensible.

Existing vessel-based fisheries came within the purview of the fisheries Acts. My powers would therefore be used after taking into account the conservation interests mentioned in the long title of the 1992 Act. The subsequent developments brought increasing numbers of tractors, which ploughed the exposed foreshore at low tide. Unlike the vessel-based fishery, those activities were not open to control under existing fisheries legislation. We therefore faced the unwelcome fact that a natural and finite resource was subject to exploitation by increasing numbers of operators, but that only one group was subject to control.

I should perhaps stress that I do not believe that all tractor dredging is necessarily harmful or that the activity should be prohibited under any and all circumstances. If that had been my view, I would have suggested to the House that section 3 of the Act should be amended to enshrine an outright ban in the primary legislation.

[Sir Hector Monro]

Dredging activities have shown themselves to be economically efficient. We must now examine what safeguards should be set in place to ensure that other factors are taken into account. In some highly sensitive areas, that may mean many year-round bans—I cannot rule that out—but in other areas it may be possible to develop controls that will allow judicious amounts of dredging to take place while still taking into account the impact on the stocks and the effects on other forms of natural life. Therefore, the issue is one of ensuring that the new activity is open to control in the circumstances required.

I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, whose constituency borders the Solway as much as mine—indeed, more so—became increasingly concerned about the effect that combined fishing pressure might be having on stock levels on the Solway. The scientists at the Scottish Office marine laboratory conducted surveys of the stock level in the area affected. Some of the results of the surveys have been mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds.

The surveys showed conclusively that the cockle stock had reduced significantly. It was not easy to determine whether that was due to the natural fluctuations which natural populations are subject to or whether dredging activities were having a more direct impact, but it was clear that the stock level had reduced to a point at which fishing pressure could make the difference between stock collapse and stock recovery.

We looked at other ways of trying to meet the problem; in particular, we recommended to local authorities that they might frame byelaws under the Civil Government (Scotland) Act 1982. But at the end of the day, because of the necessity to get almost universal approval from landowners to the shore, it was considered best to proceed as we are—by this legislation. That is why we were so glad that my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside was successful in the ballot. We are about to see the Bill's enactment into law.

As I said, the Bill has considerable support from hon. Members on both sides of the House. I know that the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) gave it warm support in Committee. We will now proceed, once the Bill is enacted, to consult and then decide to bring in an order to deal with something that is presently, at face value, very harmful to the cockle stock on the Solway.

We are looking not only at the issue of saving the cockle stock but at the long-term future of the fishermen—the traditional fishermen who have earned a valuable livelihood over many years and who are now finding it swept away by modern methods which were, as I said earlier and as hon. Members mentioned, originally imported from Holland.

We are concerned about other fish. All in all, the Bill will be a valuable restriction and a tremendous help to the fishermen and fish processors. A number of fish processors in Scotland deal with cockles and other similar products.

Hon. Members have mentioned how popular cockles have become in restaurants abroad. Of course, that is very welcome. The amount of fish exported from Scotland is high, and that is important to the Scottish economy. It is interesting that in 1992, the total income from shellfish landings into Scotland was more than £46 million; yet, in 1938, the comparative figure was £70,000. Even allowing for inflation, that shows that it is an important issue in Scotland.

I am grateful to hon. Members for the all-round support that we have had for the Bill. It is right that we have highlighted our concern about not only the fishermen and the cockles but the tourists. What has stood out firmly today is the way in which hon. Members felt this was important to bird life, and the interest that has been shown by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds.

After all the explanations that we had in Committee, in another place and in this House, this is the moment when we should say, "Well done," to my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside. He has achieved a significant piece of legislation—something with which we in the Scottish Office are proud to be associated. I am grateful to the large number of my hon. Friends who have shown support here on a Friday. I support the Third Reading of the Bill.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed; without amendment.

Marriage Bill

Not amended (in the Standing Committee), considered; reported, without amendment.

Order for Third Reading read.

1.4 pm

Mr. Gyles Brandreth (City of Chester): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

I am pleased to say that the Bill enjoys support on both sides of the House and beyond. You may have noticed, Madam Deputy Speaker, that today every national newspaper is carrying a delightful picture of yesterday's royal wedding. I hope that you have also seen a wonderful British film called "Four Weddings and a Funeral", which is a considerable box office hit—one of the most successful British films ever made. It is playing to marvellous business throughout this country and on five continents.

It seems that the whole world loves an English wedding and my Bill is designed to give couples who choose a civil wedding in England and Wales even greater choice as to where their marriages take place. The Bill would implement two of the most popular recommendations contained in the Government's 1990 White Paper, "Registration: proposals for change"—those aimed at introducing greater choice and flexibility for couples over a venue for civil marriage, by empowering local authorities to license suitable buildings, in addition to registry offices, as venues for such marriages, and by allowing couples to marry by civil ceremony in any registry office or approved building in England and Wales.

As the law stands, couples wishing to marry by civil ceremony have to do so at the registry office in the district where at least one of them resides. There are many reasons why people wish to marry by civil ceremony in other places, the most common being that they have moved away from their family home to study or work, but wish to return there for their marriage. Perhaps the registry office does not meet their expectations of a suitable place for marriage —it may not be sufficiently stylish or large. Those of us who believe in marriage want it to be celebrated in the style and manner that the couple choose.

Mr. Peter Luff (Worcester): I would appreciate it if my hon. Friend could reassure those of us who watched, "Love Story" and saw the rather sickening chic of the marriage sequence in that film, or who occasionally browse through the pages of Hello! magazine and have seen some of the grosser excesses of Las Vegas-style weddings, that his Bill will not open the floodgates for such scenes.

Mr. Brandreth: I am shocked by the revelation that my hon. Friend reads Hello! magazine. "Love Story" is not a British movie and therefore not one that I have seen. My hon. Friend can be reassured that there is no way that we want to move towards the Las Vegas style of wedding. Marriage is, we hope, a uniquely important event in any couple's life and the ceremony must be conducted with dignity in suitable premises. I shall elaborate in a moment.

By allowing local authorities to approve buildings such as stately homes and hotels as venues for civil marriages, and by removing the requirement to marry in the district of residence, the Bill will give allow members of the public a greater choice over the venue of their marriages.

Mr. Roger Evans (Monmouth): My hon. Friend mentioned stately homes and hotels. I do not understand whether it is a requirement of the Bill that a marriage should take place in a public place, in the sense that an approved location is one to which the public can have access.

Mr. Brandreth: Yes. Being a distinguished lawyer, my hon. Friend has gone to the heart of the matter. One of the basics of the English marriage is that it should take place in a public place, so the place must be accessible to the public. Obviously a constituency such as mine, which is rich in heritage and packed with historic buildings and the finest hotels, is ideal. Candidly, I foresee a day when the City of Chester becomes the most popular location for weddings in the United Kingdom.

The Bill ensures that local authorities adopt a responsible attitude in approving buildings for civil marriages, by providing for the making of regulations setting out the procedures to be followed by councils. That follows consultation with the local authority associations and the drawing up of formal guidelines. The Bill has the support of the Association of County Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, and the Society of Registration Officers—the registrars' professional organisation.

Mr. David Lidington (Aylesbury): I am concerned because the Bill does not mention the Association of District Councils. For those of us who live outside the main metropolitan areas, the district council is the chief planning authority and it might be worried if unsuitable premises, from a planning point of view, were selected by the county council. Has my hon. Friend taken that into account in the Bill?

Mr. Brandreth: Yes. My hon. Friend will find that district and county councils will be able to work together on this in a satisfactory way. I shall show him the range of consultation that has taken place and he will be reassured on the involvement of the district councils.

As I have mentioned the registration service, this could be an appropriate point at which to pay a tribute to that service and the contribution that it has made to the civilised ordering of important moments in all our lives. The registration service in England and Wales came into being in 1837 and, in many respects, its organisation and procedures have not changed greatly up to the present day. It is in some ways comparable with the city of Chester and —some would say—with the hon. Member for the City of Chester in that it is a service that is as modern as tomorrow and yet has a lot of time for yesterday.

Mrs. Angela Knight (Erewash): I am sure that my hon. Friend is whetting the appetites of those who wish learn about the provisions of the Bill and about the delights of the city of Chester. When will the proposals be put into effect if the House agrees to them?

Mr. Brandreth: If the Bill goes through the House and has a satisfactory passage through the other place, we hope that weddings will be taking place in this way this time next year, so it will be reasonably imminent.

Exactly a decade ago, the Government's programme of efficiency scrutinies included an inquiry into the registration service. The findings were published in the efficiency scrutiny report on the registration of births, marriages and deaths, and the report made nearly 50 recommendations for change.

[Mr. Brandreth]

In 1987, the Government announced that if time could be found, new legislation would be introduced. As a first step, a working group was set up and was asked to consider the scrutiny recommendations and to make proposals for the form that the legislation should take. The working group covered a wide range of interests, with representations from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, the Department of Health and Social Security —as it then was—the Home Office, the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities. In sub-groups of the working party, the Society of Registration Officers, the National and Local Government Officers Association—as it then was—the Local Authorities Conditions of Service Advisory Board, the Society of Genealogists, the Institute of Population Registration and the Institute of Heraldic and Genealogical Studies were also represented. The consultation process was wide and deep.

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): My hon. Friend has given a long and impressive list of professional societies, corporate bodies and voluntary organisations which were consulted in connection with the Bill. Were people at any stage also consulted?

Mr. Brandreth: Very much so. The working group reported in 1988 and its recommendations were published in a Green Paper called "Registration: a modern service". That Green Paper received 600 responses from throughout the United Kingdom, including many from public bodies and other organisations, but also many from individuals. The great majority of those who responded registered broad agreement with the proposals.

In January 1990, the White Paper to which I referred was published and the proposals that it contained put forward a sound basis for reforming and modernising the registration service in England and Wales. Because of the many other reforms that this great reforming Government have introduced, it has not yet been possible to find time in the parliamentary programme to introduce the legislation necessary to implement many of the proposals. I am aiming to remedy the matter from the Back Benches.

Last year, I introduced a Bill relating to the registration of deaths. The Bill whose Third Reading we are now considering proposes to introduce two of the most popular recommendations contained in the White Paper to give members of the public greater choice over where their civil marriages may take place. It will also give local authorities greater scope and flexibility to deliver a service geared to the needs of the local population.

I pay tribute to hon. Members on both sides of the House for the work that they have undertaken to get the Bill to this stage. I pay particular tribute to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), who has taken a keen interest in this matter. He has been actively supported from his Front Bench by the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) and by the spokesperson on the Liberal Democrats Front Bench—I suppose that it is its lone Bench really—the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms Lynne).

In Committee, the hon. Member for Leyton tabled half a dozen amendments, half of which would have brought a religious dimension to what is essentially a Bill about civil marriage. It is important to understand that the Bill relates to civil marriages. About half the marriages that take place nowadays in England and Wales are civil weddings.

The hon. Member for Leyton wanted the Bill amended to allow for religious marriages to be solemnised in any building approved by local authorities. He felt, in particular, that it should be made a requirement for every local authority to approve a Buddhist or a Hindu temple, a Muslim mosque or a Sikh gurdwara within its area and that persons other than registrars should be able to solemnise such marriages.

I hope that I was able to reassure the hon. Member that the law already provides for the registration for marriages of any building used as a place for religious worship and certified as such by the Registrar-General. I believe that the procedures involved are reasonably straightforward and the cost is certainly minimal. There are 281 eastern religious buildings currently registered for marriages in England and Wales. There is scope for further considerable extension. Marriage ceremonies in those buildings can already be performed by the religious celebrant, where that is required.

The hon. Member for Leyton also tabled an amendment to allow marriages to take place in gardens and other public open spaces, bringing English law into line with that of other parts of the world. My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) mentioned the possibility of beach-style weddings, the sort of thing that might feature in American or Australian films. That would change English marriage law fundamentally. My hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth (Mr. Evans) raised that point in a timely intervention. Apart from specific and historical exceptions, marriages in England and Wales must take place in a registry office, a church or chapel of the Church of England or the Church of Wales, or in buildings of other religious denominations, Christian or non-Christian, registered for marriages. It is a basic tenet of English law that marriages take place in buildings publicly recognised as being suitable and approved for the purpose.

It is also necessary for the venue of the marriage to be capable of clear description so that a specific and known venue can be included on the notice displayed at the registry office and to give ample opportunity for any legal objection to be made. The idea of a wedding in a garden may seem romantic, but it could be an elusive venue. We do not want to encourage people to get married behind the bushes. We want to know where the marriage is taking place.

The climate in our country might be said to be against open-air marriages. It might be possible for a marriage to take place in what could be described as a garden room within a permanent structure. It would not be possible, however, to hold a marriage in a large open space, somewhere like Hyde park, because one would arrive to witness the wedding, but would not know where it was —it could be anywhere. That is why we do not envisage open-air marriages.

A moored ship on a permanent site, such as the Thames, might be a possibility as a venue, but not a free-floating vessel. One must know where— [Laughter.] My hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) is amused at that suggestion, but there is a serious point behind it. One wants to be able to attend a wedding, let us say—[Laughter.]

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): I intervene to assist the hon. Gentleman while he convulses. It is an interesting point. Should not marriages be conducted on a moving vessel?

Mr. Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire, South): On a submarine?

Mr. Banks: Some marriages would have been better conducted in a submarine, kept quiet and never allowed to rise to the surface. What about a captain's power to twin people? I thought that captains still had such power. Would it go?

Mr. Brandreth: That power will not be affected. We are talking about civil weddings in England and Wales. My serious point—it is wonderful that such a happy measure is being received in such happy terms—is that it is vital that people are able to have access to the place where a wedding is taking place. Although we want to introduce greater choice in respect of a wedding venue, it is a serious and important public event. Therefore, access to it by the general public is essential. A wedding must be at a location that is well known, open to the public and, consequently, stationary.

The hon. Member for Leyton withdrew an amendment aimed at ensuring that the regulations that are provided for in the Bill would be formally approved by the House and the other place rather than being subject to affirmative resolution. Although I recognise the importance of the Bill—the number of right hon. and hon. Members who are present today underlines its importance—I do not believe that the regulations made under it are of such significance that they warrant the affirmative resolution procedure.

In Committee, I was able to offer some good news to the hon. Member for Leyton—this will please my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight)—who asked when the legislation would be implemented. I have encouraging news on the timetable for the implementation of the Bill. The hon. Member for Leyton proposed that the Bill should automatically come into force three months after receiving Royal Assent. I do not believe that such an amendment would have been necessary.

I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Minister. Not only is he a fine Minister and an adornment to any Government, but he has taken a particular interest in the work of the registration service. Publicly and behind the scenes, he has worked hard to ensure that the important reforms are put forward as rapidly but as sagely as possible. I have been assured by my hon. Friend that, should the Bill pass into law this Session, from January next year, couples will be able to marry in the register office of their choice in England and Wales.

Clause 2, however, requires the making of regulations and the setting up of the necessary procedures for the approval of premises by local authorities. We do not want to harm a good job by doing it in a hurry, particularly when, as has been said, there might be a need for discussions between county councils and district councils. A three-month deadline would be restrictive. I hope that the provisions can be brought into effect within the first six months of next year.

A spring or early summer wedding in an approved building is therefore a distinct possibility. Think of it, Madam Deputy Speaker—this time next year, at wedding receptions across the land, once the bride and groom have been toasted and once the best man has celebrated the bridesmaids, glasses might be raised to the hon. Members who give a fair wind to the Bill today.

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): Would it not be very good if, as they raised their glasses, they could think of the prospect of living in a warm and comfortable home which had been enhanced by the House also making progress on the Energy Conservation Bill?

Mr. Brandreth: We have to proceed one measure at a time, but I understand the right hon. Gentleman's desire to move on to his business, which is why I conclude by saying that this is a good-news Bill which is designed only to add to the nation's sum of human happiness. I commend it to the House.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): I welcome the Bill and the change that will occur in our nation's marriage laws provided that the Bill passes all its stages before the end of this Session. I am one of the Bill's sponsors and I congratulate the hon. Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) on getting it this far. When, in Committee, he compared the Chairman, the hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill), to Hugh Grant, the star of "Four Weddings and a Funeral", I thought that he was pushing his luck. I am pleased that he did not compare you, Madam Deputy Speaker, to Andie MacDowell, the female lead in that film, because that certainly would have been pushing his luck. When he said that, I thought that he might—

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. I suggest that the hon. Gentleman does not push his luck. He must remember that Third Reading is about the content of the Bill.

Mr. Cohen: Yes, I had better move on to safer ground.

The current marriage laws were enacted in 1949 and are out of date and restrictive. They do not give couples who want to get married the same rights and choices as those in other countries. I want that choice to be expanded, which is why I introduced a Bill—number 13 on today's Order Paper—on St. Valentine's day last year and again this year. But my Bill will not make progress, whereas this one will. With due respect to this Bill's proposer, my Bill is better, but we must take what we can get and the form that he proposes is welcome.

This Bill deals with civil weddings and their location, whereas mine deals also with their religious aspect. In my Bill, couples can choose to get married in the manner that they wish, whereas under this Bill, the registrar decides where the venue should be, but at least it is a move in the right direction. I was particularly concerned that many couples are forced to have two weddings. In 1949, the law makers in this country knew only about the Church of England, the Quakers and the Jews. Many other ethnic minorities were not covered effectively by the wedding laws, so they have been forced to have two weddings: first, a religious ceremony—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Gentleman, but he is not answering an exam question comparing and contrasting the various methods. He must concentrate on the Third Reading of this Bill.

Mr. Cohen: This Bill relates only to civil weddings, so many people will still be forced to have two weddings. Those people will be not just ethnic minorities but couples in which only one partner is religious or when the partners have different religions. Such couples will have problems. The hon. Member for City of Chester assured us that a wedding could take place in gurdwaras, mosques or temples, and I welcome that. I hope that the "Minister for marriages", as he called himself in Committee, will add his assurance in that respect. Perhaps the guidelines that his Ministry will publish will included guidance for local authorities and registrars to allow marriages to take place in those venues in all circumstances if they are located in their vicinity. I hope that the guidelines will take that matter into account.

I should like marriages to take place in gardens, open spaces and parks. That happens in other countries. It is well known that in Australia couples like to get married under Sydney bridge. I do not see why couples in this country—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I fear that the hon. Gentleman was not listening when I said earlier that we can discuss only what is in the Bill. Open-air locations, and certainly Sydney bridge, are not in the Bill.

Mr. Cohen: I appreciate what you are saying, Madam Deputy Speaker, but the Bill is about locations for weddings and marriages. The registrar can choose nice buildings in the location, which is right. The locations should include the person's own garden. That would fall in line with giving the couple the choice. When people get married they spend money and are prepared to do so, but some may not wish to spend too much money.

The couple may also wish to get married in the place where they will live out their vows, so their garden may have a special significance to them. It is a shame that we are still restricting that choice. The measure could still include provision for open doors, mentioned by the hon. Member for City of Chester, even if the ceremony were in an open space. There could be an arrangement so that other people could object so that the marriage complied with requirements under the current law.

I welcome the Bill. A press release has been issued by an organisation called Garlands. There is a role for celebrants to conduct marriages, as happens in other countries around the world. Our law should recognise the fact that a celebrant could have a good role to play. I should have thought that the Government would have welcomed the idea of a celebrant, who conducts a sort of business —the Government say that we should encourage small businesses.

When I was presenting my amendments in Committee I spoke to one of the Clerks of the House who said that he hoped that the Bill and the changes would be passed because when he retired he would like to build a church in a beautiful location and let people come to be married there for a charge. That is a reasonable aspiration and a business which could be encouraged by both sides of the House.

The press release is headed, "Wedding Survey Reveals Discontent with Venues". It states:

"More than one in five couples with no religious beliefs marries in church simply because they want the tradition and pomp of a church ceremony.

'It was everything I wanted' said one bride. 'I just closed my mind when it came to the religious bit.'

A survey of recently married couples published today reveals that 60 per cent. weren't able to have their first choice of wedding venue because of Britain's current restrictive marriage laws.

Churches were the first choice of those who held firm religious beliefs, but over half of those questioned would choose to marry in a beautiful garden, if they could. And stately homes, castles and hotels also came out high on everyone's list. Nobody at all gave a register office as their ideal venue. In fact, increasing numbers are voting with their feet and are getting married abroad in their search for a romantic wedding.

The survey was commissioned by . . . Garlands"—

"specialises in organising wedding ceremonies in unusual venues."

"Current law allows a marriage to be legalised only in a register office or church . . . Many couples come"— to Garlands—

"wanting to be married in a beautiful building or by a river and then are heartbroken to find that, although they can have their own ceremony where they like, they still have to go to a register office to register their marriage. And they feel that this effectively means having two ceremonies."

It states:

" The survey shows that religious couples often have to marry in a register office because the local priest is intransigent over divorce or mixed religions, or refuses to marry non-churchgoers. And non-religious couples often choose a church simply because they want the solemnity of atmosphere or else they end up in a register office if they aren't prepared to lie about their beliefs.

"Although many register offices are attempting to make their ceremonies more memorable affairs in order to accommodate the desire for a meaningful event, some are still very mundane places without character. 'Dark, dismal and naff' was how one bride described her London register office. 'Drab and office like' said another.

"The only alternative one-stop venue at present is a church but in fact only 1 per cent. of those questioned were churchgoers. Some 53 per cent. of the brides claimed some religious beliefs and 40 per cent. of grooms. But 35 per cent. of brides and 48 per cent. of grooms said they had no religious beliefs at all."

A Garlands representative said:

"That's very significant . . . Many people aren't religious but their wedding is still the most important day in their lives and they should have an equal right to a grand and dignified ceremony where they want it. If only a tiny minority of the population are churchgoers, it seems wrong that other than register offices churches are the only buildings which can be licensed to register marriages."

The press release then refers to the Bill introduced by the hon. Member for City of Chester. It welcomes the relaxation of marriage laws and states that his Bill

"proposes that certain other buildings such as stately homes and hotels should be able to be registered for marriages and that couples should be allowed to marry in any register officer and not just the one in the local authority area in which they live.

"Gyles Brandreth's Bill is a start but it doesn't go far enough . . . I'd like to see a situation where the marriage is legalised not because of the building it takes place in but by the officiant who performs the ceremony—whether he or she is a priest, registrar or trained marriage celebrant. Then people could have their wedding where they want just as they do in the Australia and the USA. They're much more enlightened than we are."

That is a press release from a company and a celebrant with knowledge in this area and it puts the issues clearly. The proposal would widen choice. It shows how out of date our marriage laws are. It shows how we could and should introduce further reform to take into account couples' wishes on marriage, which are not being met in many cases.

The Bill introduced by the hon. Member for City of Chester is an important start in the achievement of change and I welcome that. It is the only prospect of achieving change quickly. I hope that we will approve it today, that it will be passed in another place and that those many couples that the hon. Gentleman referred to can have the wedding of their choice next summer.

A change in the law will still be necessary in the not-too-distant future to increase choice so that couples' wishes can be met. I congratulate the hon. Member for City of Chester. He has set in motion important changes. The Minister for marriages is also the Under-Secretary of State for Health. The Department of Health has only few opportunities to present legislation to the House in every Session and marriages, I suspect, are a long way down the list of important matters on which health legislation is required. If it were left to the Government, it is likely that it would take several decades to change the marriage laws.

I congratulate the hon. Member for City of Chester on picking up the issue and proposing changes that can be passed by the House.

1.37 pm

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): Like the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) on introducing the Bill and on the perspicacious, persuasive, perceptive and even passionate way in which he spoke. Like a wine waiter introducing us to the virtues of a good claret, he showed that this particular variety would be distinctive and greatly enjoyed by many celebrating people.

As the hon. Member for Leyton said, it is right that we should pass a deregulation measure which will allow the 60 per cent. of people who do get their first choice of marriage venue a greater opportunity to do so. As part of my lengthy preparation for the debate, I asked the registrar of deaths and births in Kidderminster in my constituency about the figures on marriages in registry offices and in Church of England and other authorised religious establishments. In 1989-90, there were slightly more marriages in religious establishments—346 compared with 288 registry office weddings. By 1993-94, the position had been reversed and more people—286 against 283—were getting married in registry offices. The measure will give those people greater choice. The figures are not surprising as one third of marriages nowadays are remarriages.

As the hon. Member for Leyton said, sadly, parts of the Church of England take a dirigiste attitude and people are forced into registry office weddings although they would prefer a religious ceremony. That probably has something to do with the appalling fact that a 1991 survey showed that some 57 per cent. of people of the marriageable age of 18 to 24—it is getting older nowadays—were ignorant of the nature, purpose and history of Good Friday. By encouraging people in the way that the measure seeks to do, that situation could be improved.

There is a broader reason why it is important to give couples more choice of places in which to be married. It is that successful marriages depend on the involvement not only of couples' families but of their communities. Given the production line nature of many registry office weddings, it is often difficult to provide a personalised atmosphere, but the investment and memorableness of the wedding occasion are preludes to a successful marriage.

Earlier this year, The Daily Telegraph published an article in which Lesley Garner said:

> "Marriage is more than a ritual that many consider outdated. It is the offering of protection and security under the law."

Any change in the way in which people get married—especially as it affects those 50 per cent. who get married in registry offices—that underlines that and involves the family in a place that is familiar or has an impressive setting, would make it more likely that people will take their marriage vows more seriously and think more carefully about the implications. It may be a forlorn hope, but in my view that could lead to more stable marriages.

Such changes may also encourage more people to get married. At present, 25 per cent. of children are born out of wedlock. While I make no comment on people's decisions about life style, many people do not get married because they feel that it is a hassle and would not mean much to them. If they were able to get married surrounded by their family in a happy and familiar setting, they might be prepared to consider it slightly more seriously. That leads me to what I think is the Bill's only fault, which, I hope, can be remedied by the regulations that will oversee the way in which local authorities decide on the places that are appropriate for marriages.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the view expressed by the hon. Member for Leyton that we should encourage maximum flexibility in the choice of places for registered weddings. Sadly, many stately homes and chateaux mariages—the sort of hotels that would be applying for licences—are anything but the kind of places where marriage vows should be properly exchanged.

Perhaps the house of an aunt or that of a mother or father would be more appropriate for marriage vows, whether outside or indoors. The legislation should allow local authorities on a temporary or permanent basis to permit such places to be used for registered weddings after deciding that health and safety and planning regulations have been met. It is important that the public should be able to gain access to such events. Obviously, that would be up to the local authority and, ultimately, the registrar. He will have discretion over whether to marry a couple after he has seen—together, I hope, with local authority officials—the surroundings in which weddings will take place.

Provided that the regulations can be drawn up in a flexible way, people will be allowed to marry in registered surroundings of their own choice rather than the long-standing and possibly inappropriate choice of the local authority. That would meet the objectives of the Bill.

With that important proviso, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester on bringing the Bill to the House and I wish it every success.

1.46 pm

Mr. David Lidington (Aylesbury): Like other hon. Members, I welcome the principles that animated my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) to introduce the Bill. I want to take just a few minutes to deal with three or four points of concern about the detail of the Bill, with which I hope either he or my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary will deal when they reply to the debate.

My first point is that to which I alluded in an intervention; it concerns the respective duties of county and district councils. In the majority of cases, there would be little difficulty in the two local authorities reaching agreement on the designation of a particular building as a suitable site for civil marriages. There would be no problem with most hotels, to take the example most frequently cited. However, I can imagine circumstances in which there might be a clash of opinion. We all know of certain public buildings and of private buildings with a public function, such as sports stadiums, whose construction and use has been permitted by the local district council subject to fairly stringent planning conditions.

Where there is a difference of opinion between the two authorities, whose power will prevail? Will it be the county council, with its proposed right under the Bill to designate particular premises as suitable for civil marriages, or the district council, which might say that the building cannot be used because its planning conditions state that it may be used for certain defined purposes only and not for anything else? Will the county council, as registration authority, have to seek planning permission from the district council?

I want to question the definition of "premises" in the Bill. I do not think that a full answer was given to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). I understand that a particular building or a garden attached to a building is covered by the definition of "premises". If a couple wanted a Disraeli wedding, they could book Hughenden house or its garden. If they wanted to be a little more adventurous and have a John Wilkes wedding, they could book Prebendal house in Aylesbury for that purpose. However, if they wanted a Hellfire club wedding, would the West Wycombe caves count as premises under the Bill's definition?

Even though a couple could not use a field or a large park, would a small, easily identifiable, well-defined and fenced area of open space count as premises? Could they hold a John Hampden wedding by the Ship Money memorial in the field just outside Prestwood?

My third query relates to public access. Public access is crucial because a wedding is not only a private but a public ceremony. All of us who have been through the ceremony as a participant know that the most heart-stopping moment comes when the minister or registrar asks whether there are any objections to the marriage. I am worried especially about the designation of premises outside a couple's registration district. I hope that the regulations will contain provision for adequate notice to be given—and to be given publicly—of certificates and licences so that members of the public are able to exercise their lawful right to voice a legitimate objection in that one in a million case where such an objection exists.

My final concern relates to the record of marriages taking place under the proposed new system. In passing, I regret that my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester did not feel able to include in the Bill a provision covering information additional to that contained in marriage certificates. In this respect, England and Wales have much to learn from the Scottish system.

I ask the Minister and my hon. Friend to take on board the use that genealogists make of certificates, licences and other material relating to weddings. Such material is especially important for the reconstruction of family history. Whereas my hon. Friend and I would probably not have too much difficulty tracing our ancestors, even though we might not know exactly where they were born and married or where they died, people with a more common surname might find it more difficult knowing only the name. In such cases, the place of residence and, associated with that, the place of marriage, become more important. I hope, therefore, that registers of licences and certificates provided for in the Bill, and especially of documents relating to marriages that have taken place out of a couple's home registration district, will be made available as a matter of course to genealogists and other legitimate researchers.

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): In view of the time, I shall be as brief as possible. I thank my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) for introducing the Bill because I was one of those caught up in the bureaucracy that he seeks to abolish.

Eighteen years ago, when my wife and I were planning to get married, I was living and working in London and she was living and working in High Wycombe, although we wished to marry in York where her parents lived and where she had been brought up. In order to be married in York, not only did she have to re-establish her residence there for a couple of months before the wedding but I had to make four separate visits to the registrar in London to persuade him to study up and get the forms right to enable us to be married in York. My impression was that if two professional, reasonably articulate people found it so difficult to overcome such bureaucracy, most people must be living in sin because they could not have got through all the hoops in the first place.

I hope that either the Minister or my hon. Friend can clarify, first, the religious use of premises. The notes that my hon. Friend has helpfully circulated state that for premises to be registered under the Bill there "must be no recent or continuing connection with any religion."

Filton folk centre is a major public building in the town of Filton in my constituency, and it would be ideal for registration under the Bill as drafted. However, at weekends it is regularly used for services by at least one major evangelical Christian group.

The premises would be perfectly adequate for the celebration of marriages at other times or, indeed, at the same time because there are plenty of rooms in the building. I hope that the restriction under the regulations concerning connection with any religion will be applied, if necessary, not to the whole of a building but to a particular part of a building or a particular part of a building at a particular time. If not, what would otherwise be ideal premises will be completely excluded.

There are two matters on which the Bill does not go far enough. There has already been some discussion of whether people should be entitled to be married in a private home or their own home. In fact, quietly, the Bill permits that in two types of home. The Bill will permit the marriage at home of the owners or occupiers of a stately home or their families. It will permit the marriage at home of the owner-occupiers or employees living on the premises of a hotel. That is wholly admirable. I hope that in building on the legislation in future that principle could be extended. I hope that the matter can be considered in the regulations.

I understand the difficulties that are admirably expressed in the notes that my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester circulated in relation to his argument that weddings must be held in a public place. However, I commend to him the principle that the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) and I became used to in our youth. At certain times of the year—I am thinking of the passover service held at home—private premises are thrown open to all comers. The door is left open and an extra place is laid at the table to anyone who wishes to walk in. I can see no reason why, as my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) said, a private house cannot be made into a public place for a particular purpose and on a particular occasion. There are now many religions and branches of religions in this country for which either a combined religious and civil ceremony or one following the other would be ideally held at home. I cannot honestly see any reason why the law should be so restrictive as to bar people from ordering what is often the most important day in their life as they and their families desire.

The second matter is that, to my great regret, while the Bill and the proposed regulations under it recognise the increasing practice of registrars of allowing some music at a civil ceremony, there is still a crazy distinction—I can only describe it as such—between religious and secular music. Why is it that popular tunes such as "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" or "Sheep May Safely Graze" are barred from use in a ceremony because they originally formed part of a cantata? Why is it that Rossini's "Stabat Mater", which has been described by critics as the most secular piece of religious music ever written, should be barred because of its title?

Why is it that if one is particularly fond of Ravel's "Danses Sacrées et Profanes"—roughly translated as sacred and secular dances—one has to pick the bits of the dances that are permitted to be played legally at a ceremony? It is a crazy distinction and any registrar who was serious about it would find that there was little secular music that had not been made into a hymn tune at some time or another.

I hope that when the regulations are made under the Bill they will be somewhat wider in their application to what is permissible. Subject to that, I commend my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester for introducing the Bill. I wish he had been in a position to do so 19 years ago and I certainly do not wish to delay its passage.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Tom Sackville): Time is pressing on so I shall simply limit myself to dealing with some of the points raised during the debate. First, the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) raised yet again his obviously deeply felt desire to have been married in a garden. As we know, there are some problems with marriage law—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. My problem is that that is scarcely relevant.

Mr. Sackville: That is what I was about to say, Madam Deputy Speaker. I shall turn to my next point.

The Bill is about civil marriage. Matters to do with marriages in temples are taken care of. Those places can be registered and, as long as an authorised person or registrar is present, there need be only one ceremony. I think therefore that that is not relevant to today.

My hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) made a good point about which local authority would be designating. The answer is that it is metropolitan boroughs, county councils and London borough councils at present. That will remain the case, although district councils—of course, there may be changes in all this; we do not know—can put forward their own civic buildings for consideration. But there will be no change to that.

My hon. Friend said that among other excellent places in his constituency are the Hellfire club caves at Wycombe. I have to tell him that I used to play in a rock band called "The Hellfire Club", and I have some knowledge of the activities that those gentlemen—Wilkes and others—got up to in the caves. Those activities would not lend any sort of dignity to the institution of marriage, so the answer to his question is probably no. Being caves, they can hardly be called a permanent structure, either—although that is a matter for geologists.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr.Stern) raised a number of interesting points. He pointed to the criteria for designation, and mentioned a place used by religious groups at some point. The criterion will be something along these lines: any building that would be seemly and dignified, and therefore appropriate to the institution of marriage, will be permitted. The fact that such buildings might be used at some other time for religious purposes would probably not be relevant, but that would have to be left to the discretion of the local authority concerned.

On the matter of the music, I was deeply impressed, as was the whole House, with my hon. Friend's erudition in these matters. If I may, I will write to him and deal with what he said.

I warmly welcome the Bill. We have a strange, quaint custom, particularly at the beginning of Adjournment debates, of welcoming debates that do nothing to help the Government, and congratulating hon. Members who are about to get up and do everything that they can to destroy one's credibility. In this case, however, I most sincerely and warmly congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth). For the past two years, I have been trying to find ways to help the White Paper commitment to the improvement of civil marriage. My hon. Friend has made that possible. I am quite sure that what he and other hon. Members have said—that this will add to the dignity and, we must now say, the popularity of marriage at a time when it certainly needs it—means that this is one of the most useful and beneficial pieces of legislation to have emerged in the past 11 years.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

Sale of Goods (Amendment) Bill [Lords]

As amended (in the Standing Committee), considered; reported, without amendment.

Order for Third Reading read.

2.3 pm

Mr. Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire, South): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

I shall be brief. I commend the Bill to the House, and in doing so I thank those who are responsible for its being here—primarily, Lord Renton. He is better known to many of us in this place as the right hon. Sir David Renton; he was a Member here for many years and the predecessor of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in the constituency of Huntingdon. He piloted this Bill through another place with the general support of peers in all parties.

I had the good fortune to take on the Bill and, had I won a place in the ballot, I would have introduced it last year. I took the Bill through Committee with the support of hon. and right hon. Members on both sides of the House and I am grateful for that support. I am especially grateful to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Technology, who is on the Front Bench today, and to our right hon. Friends the Minister for Industry and the President of the Board of Trade, all of whom have been extremely helpful in supporting the Bill.

The Bill has one simple, but important, aim—to outlaw the practice of market overt. Members on both sides of the House will know that if goods in Bermondsey market, which is the one that is almost always quoted, are bought between sunrise and sunset, the title of the goods purchased passes to the purchaser, regardless of the origin of the goods. The market has been castigated as a thieves' den for that reason. The Bill contains no threat to the legitimate traders of Bermondsey market and it has the strong—indeed, passionate—support of the various antique dealers associations, the Antiques Trade Gazette, the Metropolitan police and many other police forces who have been in touch with me, all of whom see it as a small, but positive and helpful step. The Historic Houses Association is yet another organisation which lobbied for the Bill and welcomes its introduction.

I know that some of my hon. Friends have matters that they want to raised and we have little time. With the leave of the House, I shall respond to them if there is an opportunity. I commend the Bill to the House.

2.6 pm

Mr. Roger Evans (Monmouth): I am grateful to my hon. Friend for speaking so briefly. I propose to be equally brief. He is wrong to suggest that in Bermondsey market one can pass title regardless of origin. The rule applies only to goods acquired for value in good faith. That is not such a startling proposition and, indeed, it is one which is echoed in other areas of the law.

My concerns about the Bill are that, first, it does not apply, and has no relevance, to car boot sales, which are the modern curse, where fences dispose of property. Secondly, a proper understanding of the rule is so narrow that it will arouse greater expectations for change. The problems of prosecuting people who buy colour televisions—stolen from my constituents—in public houses in Cwmbran are exactly the same as those of prosecuting people who buy antique items in Bermondsey market at and under value. The law does not affect that problem.

I do not intend to talk out or to oppose the Bill, because I am satisfied, having talked to my hon. Friend the Minister, that the Government can deal with it in a way that will satisfy all of us. The problem that my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack) identified is important, but—partly as a result of the heritage lobby, with and for which he is elegantly associated and an important spokesman—it is only one aspect. Ironically, he wants to tear up the pages of Coke's institutes and Coke's reports, which are still the law of the land on the topic, and to replace them with the Rocky Horror alternative prayer book version; but never mind. If there is a social need to do so, I can understand the force of the argument, but the problem with the Bill is that it does not deal with other situations that are equally open to challenge, and the matter ought to be given broad consideration.

For example, mercantile agents in possession can pass good title to goods, which means that if one takes one's car to a car salesroom to ask for a quote and it is sold on to someone else, that other person takes good title.

Secondly, if we buy trust property that is sold in breach of trust by a trustee, the rule is that the purchaser for value in good faith takes good title. It makes nonsense of law reform to take one aspect of chattels of a particular class and deal with it on its own. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to consider whether the Government will review the general position.

The next problem is that the Bill moves English law further away from European law, rather than the reverse. The rule in the French civil code is "La possession vaut la titre", which is very similar to the doctrine of market overt. Will my hon. Friend the Minister consider, because this is a single-market issue, whether there ought to be a European approach as to the circumstances in which good title in goods is passed and the circumstances in which it is not. If one buys and imports throughout the European Community—whatever the appropriate balance of protection between the vendor and, on the one hand, the person from whom the goods are stolen and, on the other, the bona fide purchaser—it is a matter with a European dimension that is dealt with on that basis.

Has my hon. Friend had any consultations with the City of London corporation? One of the glorious anomalies is that every shop in the City of London is a market overt in the class of goods in which it trades. He is seeking here to abrogate the ancient privileges of London, and I should be very interested to know what consultations he has had on that aspect.

What has tended to happen in recent years is that our ancient franchise markets—the kind of market to which the market overt rule traditionally applies—have been greatly undervalued by those in power. I am bound to say that we have seen attempts to deregulate them which the Government have had to slightly reflect upon, and this is another fairly brutal attempt to whittle away at their considerable privileges.

I have several traditional franchise markets in my constituency, and I see colleagues in the House who represent agricultural constituencies where rural franchise markets are a part and parcel of life and perform a valuable social function. Farmer Giles can still turn up and sell his potatoes or his beasts. It used to be that one bought them with good title, and one could sue the auctioneer or those running the market. The Bill would stop that.

I urge my hon. Friend to consider the question of franchise markets. He should not abolish them as a feudal anomaly where they are valued and appreciated institutions. Nevertheless, will he consider a general review of the way in which markets are regulated and run? I hear what those in the antiques trade who make complaints about Bermondsey market say. I have never been there and I have certainly never bought anything there, although I may have driven past it.

Those who complain that particular institutions have become thieves' kitchens might perhaps consider whether they have a remedy in the law as it stands, rather than promoting Bills of this sort.

2.12 pm

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): I shall also be extremely brief, and I could not better the erudition with which my hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth (Mr. Evans) expressed his concerns—which I share, particularly those about livestock markets. The reservations that I have about the Bill include the fact that we are intending to sweep away a piece of English history which goes back for many hundreds of years at just after 2 o'clock in a deserted House on a Friday in July, and that is a pity.

The Bill will not do what it is designed to do, and it will pursue people in one market at the expense of livestock markets in my constituency. I have one charter market in my constituency which has existed since mediaeval times. We do not know—and my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack) also does not know—whether it is a market overt or not. I suspect that it is, but there is a dispute about that.

My hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth said that there could be real problems in dealing with the issue of title, which is currently covered by that aspect. While I share those concerns, I do not propose to obstruct the passage of the Bill; but it is worth a moment's pause before we abandon a piece of legal history to the dustbin.

2.13 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Technology (Mr. Patrick McLoughlin): I shall respond to some of the points that my hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth (Mr. Evans) put directly to me. He asked me to consider whether the matter could be looked at through the European Commission. That is an interesting point and I will consider it. I do not believe that the Bill contains some of the anomalies to which my hon. Friend has referred, but I shall want to look carefully at it in the light of what he said. I will respond in due course.

We are conducting a more general review and we have known about the Bill for some time. There have been no representations that the market overt rule ought to be kept. My hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) almost argued against his own point in one respect, when he referred to his local market and said that he was not sure whether it was a market overt or not. There are some problems with definition as to which markets are covered by the general rule of market overt. I do not think that there are particular reasons for keeping it going.

Indeed, it is something of a puzzle why it was not abolished when the common law regarding the sale of goods was first codified in the Sale of Goods Act 1893. The rule has been much criticised as a thieves charter, and although there is not a great deal of evidence that market overt is used as a means of disposing of stolen goods, it can no longer rationally be defended. For that reason, the Government support the Bill and commend it to the House.

2.14 pm

Mr. Cormack: With the leave of the House, Madam Deputy Speaker, I thank my hon. Friend the Minister for his remarks. I should like to reply briefly to my hon. Friends the Members for Monmouth (Mr. Evans) and for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson), to whom I am grateful for saying that they will not ultimately oppose the Bill. I cast no aspersions on the learning of my hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth, but many learned lawyers, including Lord Renton and Law Lords in the other place, believe that the Bill is desirable and sensible. On the law, I rest my case.

To say that, because market overt has been enshrined in English history since 1189, there is no reason to get rid of it, is hardly an argument. William Wilberforce could have bowed to the same argument when the slave trade was being abolished and one could still be branding people and doing all sorts of other unmentionable things. That argument does not hold, because something that has a long history behind it is not necessarily correct.

I am glad to note what my hon. Friend the Minister said about Europe and it is, of course, important that we discuss matters with our colleagues in the European Union.

As for the City of London, as a freeman of the City—if I have to declare that interest—I have received absolutely no representations from any of my colleagues or from common counsel on this. Many of them know about my interest in the Bill, just as they know that Lord Renton took it through the other place.

I will not weary the House by quoting an extremely learned letter from Brian Davenport QC—I believe that my hon. Friends the Members for Monmouth and for Hexham have seen the letter—but, as he points out,

> "As a matter of history, there is nothing new in the suggestion that the law of market overt should be abolished. This was unanimously recommended by the Law Reform Committee in its twelfth report in 1966."

He goes on to deal with the livestock market and notes:

> "The Law Reform Committee reported that over half the livestock markets in England were private markets and therefore could not be markets overt. In the case of each of the others it would have to be shown that the market was established by charter or had existed since before the year 1189."

I do not believe that the farmers of Hexham or of anywhere else are in danger. No one likes dealing in stolen goods in any event, if he is an honest man, and most farmers are honest.

I am conscious that another measure is to be discussed briefly, so, once again, I commend the Bill to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time and passed, with amendments.

Sports (Discrimination) Bill

Order read for consideration, as amended (in the Standing Committee).

Mr. David Hinchliffe (Wakefield): To be considered on Friday 21 October.

Sir Peter Fry (Wellingborough): There are amendments to the Bill.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): It will not be in order for the hon. Member for Wellingborough (Sir P. Fry) to move his new clause, because consideration has been deferred by the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe), who is in charge of the Bill.

Bill to be considered upon Friday 21 October.

Energy Conservation Bill

Not amended(in the Standing Committee), further considered.

New clause 2

COMMENCEMENT

'This Act, except sections 4 and 5, shall come into force on such day as the Secretary of State may by order appoint; and different days may be appointed for different provisions, different purposes of the same provision and different areas.'.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the clause be read a Second time.

Government amendment No. 53.

Amendment No. 194, in the title, line 5, leave out from 'powers' to second 'and' in line 5 and insert

'to secure the implementation of such plans'.

2.17 pm

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): I listened with great care to the Minister's advocacy of new clause 2, which he spent 30 minutes doing on 22 April and I am disposed to accept it.

Question put, That the clause be read a Second time:—

The House proceeded to a Division.

Mr. Beith (seated and covered): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Is it not clear that this Division was not originally sought and that it is taking place against a Government new clause which I have accepted, with tellers for both sides being put in by Government supporters so as to ensure that the Energy Conservation Bill does not make any further progress today? Can you confirm that the promoter of the Bill did not put in tellers for the Division? It is clearly an attempt by the Government to prevent the House from considering the Energy Conservation Bill any further.

Madam Deputy Speaker: As Deputy Speaker, I have no knowledge of those matters. All that I am concerned with is whether the Division has been called correctly, and I am satisfied that it is in order.

The House having divided: Ayes 63, Noes 2.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Tuesday 19th July, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), the Speaker shall put the Questions on the Motions in the names of Mr. Secretary Patten relating to the draft Education (Assisted Places) (Amendment) Regulations 1994 and Mr. Secretary Gummer relating to the draft Conservation (Natural Habitats, &c.) Regulations 1994, respectively, not later than one and a half hour after each Motion has been entered upon; and the said Motions may be entered upon and proceeded with, though opposed, after Ten o'clock.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Earlier this morning, a statement was made about the important matter of Government consultation on discrimination against disabled people and a document was placed in the Vote Office. I do not know whether it is a Command Paper and therefore I cannot tell whether it will be formally placed before Parliament. Can you ascertain whether that is so? Will the facts in the paper that is laid before the House, particularly those on page 13, be examined by a Select Committee?

Madam Deputy Speaker: I have no information on the main point. I can cause inquiries to be made.

Mr. Roger Berry (Kingswood): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. In his statement this morning, the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People said that the Government had always opposed rights-based legislation to outlaw discrimination against disabled people. Given that, on Second Reading, not a single hon. Member—

Madam Deputy Speaker: This is quite irregular. That is not a point of order for the occupant of the Chair. [Interruption.] Order. The hon. Gentleman must be guided by me.

Palestinian Refugees (Lebanon)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

2.35 pm

Mr. John Gunnell (Morley and Leeds, South): A visit by members of the parliamentary Labour party to Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, Gaza and Jericho provided many memories: the destruction still so overpowering in the centre of Beirut; the quiet tension of the artificial border on the Golan heights; the sense of progress in Amman; and the atmosphere of fresh celebration, liberty and hope on the streets of Gaza and Jericho. Yet for me, as a member of that party, no memory will be more lasting or more poignant than that of a visit to the camps of the Palestinian refugees at Shatila and Burj El-Barajneh in Beirut.

Our Lebanese hosts were not encouraging when we said that we wanted to go there, but they recognised our determination and the strong wish of Lionel Brisson, the director of United Nations Relief and Works Agency affairs in Lebanon, to meet us at the camps.

The discussion that we held with the group of residents who represented them all gave us the starkest reminder of the distance that the peace process has to travel. The men whom we met had lived in compulsory exile for 46 years. They were stateless; they were not allowed to obtain jobs outside the camps; and they could not get education beyond secondary schools. They lacked those most basic rights, but they had great dignity.

Some of the older men showed us their British birth certificates. Two of them produced documents showing that, under the British mandate, they served in the police force. Others had spent the whole of their lives in the camps and had no reason to suppose that they would ever see the villages around the lake of Tiberias which their parents called home.

Given their experience and the role that Britain, under a Labour Government, had played in their fate, they were surprisingly free from rancour; however, they were more critical, and I think more fearful, of the current peace process, for they could see that it had passed them by. Perhaps it would develop, but the more it did and succeeded, the more they would be left trapped in time, but without space. They would be the long-term victims, first of war and then of peace. They also know that there is now a concentration of resources from many nations on Gaza and Jericho, but that means fewer resources for them. They are the real losers in the peace process.

It is easy to cast stones: at Lebanon, because refugees in Syria and particularly those in Jordan have a far better deal; at Israel for bombing and raiding the camps during its invasion as far north as the outskirts of Beirut; at the PLO, as the fate of these people was not remotely on the agenda in the negotiations; and at ourselves for our role in the creation of the problem. It is easy to cast stones, but it is not constructive. We must address what measures we ought, through the United Nations, to argue for and be prepared to contribute to in the short and long terms.

The members of the camp council whom we met made it clear that they supported Hamas, which was to be expected. The policy of destroying Israel made sense to them. How else, they argued, could they recover their homelands? But they recognised that that was not on our agenda or on those of Lebanon, Syria or Jordan. It is a political and military non-starter, so how can we prevent these refugees from becoming the forgotten of the region?

First, we must accept that they are not simply Lebanon's responsibility. Lebanon makes it quite clear that they are unwelcome and that, however long they have stayed, they cannot settle. That exacerbates the refugees' problems. Many of the Lebanese camps suffered enormously during the Israeli invasion and in the Lebanese civil war. Shatila was almost destroyed, as was two thirds of Burj-El Barajneh.

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency has spent money on building blocks of flats in Shatila, replacing with homes the rubble left by Israeli raids. It wants to build more, including schools and infrastructure for water and sanitation, but the Lebanese Government say no. Permanent structures create a feeling of permanence and that cannot be allowed, so far more people live in and among the debris than need be the case.

It is true that Beirut has massive reconstruction problems: years of huge expense lie ahead. It is also true that, after the disastrous civil war, the balance between the Christian and other communities is delicate and would be upset by the acceptance of about 300,000 Palestinians as citizens. Lebanon cannot act alone, but must be part of a comprehensive solution.

United Nations resolution 194 affirms that Palestinian refugees have the right either to return to their former areas or to be compensated for their losses. The Jordanian parliamentarians whom we met affirm their continuing support for that resolution to be implemented as part of a lasting peace settlement. Jordan, of course, has far more than the 300,000 refugees in Lebanon—it has upwards of 1 million. The parliamentarians made it clear that the settlement of the refugee issue on a comprehensive basis was for them an absolutely integral part of the peace process.

Britain, too, should confirm its support for resolution 194 and work for its acceptance by all parties. Jordan, Syria and Lebanon, as well as Israel and the PLO, will have to reach accord if the region is to gain the level of stability that will enable all the nations involved to give economic and social development the priority that they could have if all national securities were guaranteed. That cannot happen if the 1948 exiles are simply ignored or if those in Lebanon, who are the ones with the greatest difficulties, remain the only group not affected by an agreement. They would then become irrevocably committed to a radical solution, but without any of the means of achievement or even self-expression, let alone of escape.

We must accept that, historically, the United Kingdom has a level of direct responsibility, which I am sure we will be glad to share with our European partners. We must support UNRWA and ensure that, in stepping up the aid we provide to the new Palestinian authority—the Minister is well aware of my support for the measures taken to assist it—we must be careful not to remove aid from the work that UNRWA is doing with refugees, especially its budget for Lebanon.

There are real worries about that budget. It has not kept pace with local inflation and the Palestinians say that in the closure of a hospital, in reduced levels of health care and in the contributions that they are asked to make, there is evidence of a reducing budget.

We should be willing to back the agency's planned capital programme for the camps. We should raise with it the current concerns of the Palestinians, and we should use our relationship with the Lebanese Government to get permission for that capital work to go ahead.

Britain is currently 10th on the list of contributors to UNRWA. We do not sponsor specific projects. It would be timely to back one of the new facilities needed and give it the level of support that would ensure that it was provided. In those circumstances, the Lebanese Government would give permission for the work to go ahead. I am sure that it is much easier in this country to get public backing for a school or a housing project than it is to get aid for general purposes.

I was one of the first group of parliamentarians to visit Beirut for 20 years. We found Britain well regarded because our embassy, unlike most others, stayed open throughout the civil war. As Prime Minister Hariri told us, that should provide opportunities for the involvement of British firms in the huge programme of renewal. However, it also gives us the ability to ask questions about the status of the refugees.

Our ambassador played a direct part in ensuring that we visited the camps. We should say that, while we fully understand why Lebabon denies citizenship for internal reasons, the legal status of the refugees should give them the rights of residence, shelter, work, education, health, social security, the protection of the law and democratic freedom. We must recognise that Lebanon alone cannot deal with that and that solutions within a wider context are essential—solutions guaranteed and underpinned by a UN framework.

Visually, Beirut is still disturbing, but the experience of Shatila and Burj-El-Barajneh and our talks with their people was not just physically but emotionally unsettling. The peace process has brought flickers of hope to many. We must work to stop it bringing, at the same time, despair to others.

Britain, in Europe, has an important role. Historically, we know the region and its peoples. We must strengthen those forces and agencies for conciliation and help Lebanon to improve the prospects for all who live there, including those who, after 46 years, are still unwelcome guests.

2.49 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Douglas Hogg): I am glad that the hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Gunnell) has chosen to raise this important subject on the Adjournment. I am also glad to see two of my hon. Friends here: my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope) has a particular interest in the middle east, and my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) is well known for his concern about all matters relating to Israel.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): Does my right hon. and learned Friend accept that the problem of refugees in the middle east goes somewhat wider than outlined by the hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Gunnell)? Does he accept that, in the immediate aftermath of the formation of the state of Israel, there were also a large number of Jewish refugees, and that the difference between the state of Israel and the state of Lebanon was that Israel provided jobs and houses for the Jewish refugees? Is it not a pity that Lebanon, Syria and Jordan did not do the same for the refugees that they received?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend has shown his customary ingenuity in making the point that I knew he wanted to raise. However, it enables me to welcome the fact that my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) is also here. He, too, has a well-known concern for the affairs of Israel.

The serious problems of the 1948 Palestinian refugees have always been a major concern of the international community. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency —UNRWA—was set up to deal with just those problems. UNRWA established its headquarters in Beirut in May 1950 and, since then, has played a significant role in the lives of Palestinian refugees living in Lebanon.

UNRWA provides services to some 2.8 million registered refugees in the region. Those services include basic education, health, social services and income generation. The United Kingdom sits on the seven-member advisory commission to UNRWA in Vienna and we fully support its work throughout the region.

UNRWA quoted the number of registered refugees in Lebanon as around 335,000 at the end of last year. Of these, more than 150,000 live in 12 camps run by UNRWA, and 95 per cent. of the Palestinians living in UNRWA refugee camps in Lebanon are 1948 refugees.

No one doubts that the hardships faced by the Palestinians who went to Lebanon in 1948 have been especially severe. Not only did they leave their houses in 1948, but they subsequently found themselves in the middle of a brutal civil war. The horrors of the massacres in Sabra and Shatila refugee camps are known to us all. UNRWA itself was forced to move its headquarters from Beirut to Vienna.

The refugees in Lebanon today still find themselves in a difficult political environment, in many ways outside the society that hosts them. That problem was described by the hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South. UNRWA is working to rehouse refugees who have been displaced from property in which they sheltered during the war, property which the Lebanese are now hoping to restore to its rightful owners during the process of reconstructing Lebanon.

Although the delicate situation in Lebanon has affected the situation of the Palestinians there—through no fault of their own—we must recognise the contribution made to those refugees by their hosts. We welcome that help.

We are concerned about the continuing difficulties in the south of Lebanon, not least because they periodically affect the refugee population. We are supporting fully the peace process which we hope will lead to a permanent peace settlement. We have welcomed Israeli Government statements to the effect that they have no claims on Lebanese territory or water resources. We hope that they can be translated into action and look forward to the full implementation of Security Council resolution 425.

We have consistently called for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon as provided for in the Taif accord. In this context, we have been encouraged to see the Lebanese armed forces play a far more active role in maintaining peace and security in Lebanon. They will have a key role to play in the establishment of lasting stability.

Lebanon has now embarked on an ambitious programme of reconstruction which the British Government whole-heartedly support. There is a renewed mood of confidence, and British companies are actively participating in the reconstruction process. We recognised the progress that Mr. Hariri's Government had made when we restored Export Credits Guarantee Department cover in January. Since then, the political situation in Lebanon has remained stable. The enormous progress made should have a beneficial effect on the lives of everyone there.

[Mr. Hogg]

There is a widespread perception—one to which the hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South referred—that the 1948 refugees are the forgotten victims of the breakthroughs in the middle east peace process that have taken place in the past year. They have not been forgotten by either the negotiators or the aid agencies.

The 1993 declaration of principles signed by the Palestine Liberation Organisation and Israel provided for discussion of the 1948 refugees as a permanent status issue. Permanent status talks are to begin on or before 4 May 1996. Other permanent status issues include settlements and Jerusalem. While those are some of the most difficult issues, they are also some of the most important to an overall settlement and there is no danger of their being overlooked.

The declaration of principles stated explicitly for the first time that the peace process and the negotiations of permanent status would lead to the implementation of resolutions 242 and 338. Resolution 242 affirms the necessity of achieving a just settlement of the refugee problem. We will do all we can to ensure that the peace talks address that issue.

We continue to stress to all our interlocutors the importance that we attach to a just, lasting and comprehensive settlement. That is not to say that a solution to the problem will be easy or quickly found, but we are urging all parties to proceed with all speed to reach solutions to the refugee question on both the Palestinian and the Lebanese track. In that context, we welcome the recent progress on the Jordanian track, and greatly welcome the speech made by His Majesty the King of Jordan.

We will continue to urge progress on all aspects of the peace process, including the multilateral tracks. We participate in all the working groups of the multilateral talks, not least the refugee working group. In April, a mission went to the refugee camps in Lebanon. UNICEF is also involved in projects for the Lebanese through the working group.

The European Community is holding its second inter-sessional activity of this working group in Bristol next week. It will work on an inventory and assessment of the assistance available to all refugees. We very much hope that progress in the peace talks will enable Lebanon to join in the multilateral talks, and particularly the refugee working group.

Our assistance to UNRWA is mostly in the form of a contribution to the regular budget. At present, we contribute £6 million annually, which makes us the fifth largest donor. Our contribution is used by the Commissioner-General to meet his general priorities, rather than being earmarked for specific needs.

To take up a point made by the hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South, our contribution is more useful if it is available for general needs. As the hon. Gentleman said, it is sometimes easy to find money for specific projects. Schools and housing were the two examples that he gave. By making it available for general needs, we make money available for what might otherwise be seen as somewhat less glamorous causes.

Mr. Gunnell: I accept what the Minister says. I accept that we put in a considerable amount of money. I wondered whether perhaps some additional specific aid might be given. I agree that public support is more easily gained for specific aid, but I do not suggest that we should reduce the amount that we give to the general UNRWA budget.

Mr. Hogg: I understand that. The impression I gained from the hon. Gentleman—I am not being critical about this—was that he suggested that we should focus more than we do on special projects. I make the point that there are advantages in putting the money into the general spending policy because that requirement is less glamorous. The Commissioner-General finds it more difficult to find support for general outgoings than for specific projects, which attract general support.

We also contribute to UNRWA through the EC. The EC contributes at present about 30 million ecu a year, of which the UK's share is around one sixth, or about £6 million a year.

UNRWA's peace implementation programme, which was drawn up in response to the declaration of principles, deliberately included provision for refugees in Lebanon, Syria and Jordan. In Lebanon, there is a health programme, an education programme and a relief and social services programme.

Our own bilateral programme also addresses the situation of the Palestinians in Lebanon. Recently, the Overseas Development Administration agreed to spend nearly £200,000 in support of Palestinian refugees living in Lebanon.

The largest part of that funding is going through the charity Medical Aid for Palestinians—MAP—which works closely with the refugees and the Palestinian Red Crescent Society in the area of health. They are working on projects to restructure health services and develop primary health care and medical training in south Lebanon.

We also provided £10,000 in emergency aid through MAP to the Palestinians in Lebanon after the Israeli bombardment of southern Lebanon last July. That is another example of a situation where we cannot solve the root cause of the trouble, but we can, and do, play our part in easing the symptoms. This is always in parallel with the political pressure on the parties to reach agreement between themselves to solve the underlying dispute.

That is the approach which we will continue to adopt. Our support for all tracks of the peace process will continue unabated, both politically and economically. Only the success of that peace process will be able to find a permanent solution to the problem of Palestinian refugees. We hope that that settlement is not long in coming.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 4 July 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recylced paper.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. However, the paper used for press releases and written questions is classified as "environmentally friendly".

Courts Services Agency

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what amounts have been paid out, and to whom, by way of fees for consultation about the setting up of the Courts Services Agency; what sums he plans to pay out in this respect in the future; and to whom.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: The Department has paid £15,500 in fees to Dent Lee Witte and KPMG Peat Marwick for work assisting with the setting up of the Court Service Agency. One contract is still continuing, with further costs of £3,000 expected. A further contract to design the launch documents is currently out to tender. There are no other plans to use consultants to assist with establishing the agency, but the Department will assess whether their assistance may be appropriate as work progresses.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his latest estimate of (a) the costs incurred so far and (b) the costs yet to be incurred in the setting up of the Courts Services Agency.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: The preparatory work started in July 1992 and has cost £362,000 up to June this year. Costs of £246,000 are expected to be incurred from June this year to the launch of the agency in April 1995.

Courts and Court Buildings

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to allow notices to be posted with regard to consultation about the proposed closures of courts and court buildings in the public areas of the courts and court buildings concerned.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The consultation procedure for the proposed closure of a court requires the circuit administrator to consult a wide range of local interests. Also, it is open to a circuit administrator to post a notice on the court notice board.

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date the changes announced on 7 July 1993 to the judicial appointments system take effect.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Clywd, North-West (Mr. Richards) on 19 May, Official Report, column 529. The Lord Chancellor's proposals for implementing the changes announced in his speech were set out in a consultation paper, copies of which were placed in the Library.

The closing date for responses to the consultation paper was 30 June. The Lord Chancellor is now considering the responses received and will make an announcement as soon as practicable.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of the Law Officers' departments' (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

The Attorney-General: Nil.

PRIME MINISTER

"The Downing Street Years"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what clearance the Cabinet Secretary gave to Lady Thatcher's book on the Downing street years in respect of (a) relations with Libya and the 1986 raid and (b) the Falklands War.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and noble Friend, Lady Thatcher, submitted the manuscript of "The Downing Street Years" to the Cabinet Secretary in accordance with the recommendations of the Radcliffe committee on ministerial memoirs. The Cabinet Secretary, acting at my request and on my behalf, examined the manuscript in respect of national security, the preservation of international relations and the treatment of confidential relationships. Exchanges between the Cabinet Secretary and former Ministers in respect of their memoirs are confidential.

EC Rebate Mechanism

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those statements made by the United Kingdom heads of Government stating that the United Kingdom EC rebate mechanism could not be changed without the consent of the United Kingdom Government.

The Prime Minister: The abatement is an integral part of the own resources decision—ORD. The ORD, including the abatement, continues in force unless or until changed or replaced. Change or replacement requires unanimity in the Council followed by adoption of the new arrangements by member states according to their respective constitutional procedures. In the case of the United Kingdom, this means the passage of an Act of Parliament. This has been made clear on many occasions.

Pensions

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available calling for the unfreezing of the British state pensions of those pensioners living in countries where annual upratings are not made by the Department of Social Security; and what is the explanation for the discrimination against such pensioners.

The Prime Minister: In the last 12 months, I have received representations from the Governments of Australia and Canada. I have also received numerous letters from pensioners overseas.

It would cost an additional £230 million a year to uprate British pensions worldwide. In view of the continued need to contain public expenditure, we have no plans to change this long-standing policy.

SCOTLAND

Enzootic Bovine Leukosis

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) of 22 June, Official Report, column 231, what was the location of the cattle aged 30 months or under with enzootic bovine leukosis.

Sir Hector Monro: The information requested is as follows:

Enzootic bovine leukosis reactors (Under 30 months)

Location	Number
Grampian	1
Dumfries and Galloway	1
Strathclyde	6

Fisheries

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to introduce precautionary limits on the industrial fishery catch permitted on the Wee Bankie.

Sir Hector Monro: The industrial fishery on Wee Bankie by non-United Kingdom fishermen is carried out beyond the United Kingdom's 12-mile territorial sea and United Kingdom catch levels in this fishery are minimal. Any limits on catch levels for all member states would require the agreement of the Council of Ministers in Brussels. In the light of further scientific work being carried out on the impact of industrial fishing, the United Kingdom will consider whether further controls on the North sea fishery should be proposed.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion by weight of the the total fish catch in International Council for the Exploration of the Sea area VI, (a) is taken by industrial fishermen and (b) comprises sandeels.

Sir Hector Monro: Data on total international catches for all species in sub-area VI—West of Scotland and Rockall—are available in the publication "ICES Fisheries Statistics (Bulletin Statistique des Peches Maritimes)". The most recently available volume is dated November 1992 and is for the year 1988.

On the basis of the information contained in that publication, figures for the years 1985-88 are as follows:

"Industrial" catch as percentage of total catch	1985	1986	1987	1988
Division VIa (West of Scotland)
Sandeels (per cent)	2·2	3·1	1·9	3·4
Norway pout (per cent.)	1·1	—	5·0	—
Blue whiting (per cent.)	24·3	33·6	17·8	14·7
Total (thousand tonnes)	857·4	794·3	767·4	719·5
Division VIb (Rockall)
Sandells (per cent.)	—	—	—	—
Norway pout (per cent.)	—	—	—	—
Blue whiting (per cent.)	1·4	2·5	30·0	3·9
Total (thousand tonnes)	31·7	28·4	44·4	36·1

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the catch by the industrial fisheries on the Wee Bankie, Firth of Forth, in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993;

(2) what proportion of the industrial sandeel catch on the Wee Bankie is taken by British fishermen.

Sir Hector Monro: Total international catch data are published only for larger areas than Wee Bankie. Available data for the area off the Firth of Forth, however, show that catches in that area totalled 39,000 tonnes in 1991 and 60,000 tonnes in 1992. Published data are not yet available for 1993.

No United Kingdom vessels landed sandeels from that area in 1991 or 1993. In 1992, United Kingdom vessels landed just over 1,000 tonnes. The precise proportion this comprises of the entire sandeel catch on Wee Bankie in that year is unclear because of the factors explained above; but the information available indicates that the proportion will be less than 2 per cent.

Agriculture

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) farmers and (b) holdings there were in (i) each region and (ii) less-favoured areas and non-less-favoured areas in Scotland in 1993.

Sir Hector Monro: The figures for main holdings at June 1993 are as follows:

Region	Number of holdings	Number of farmers
Borders	1,740	1,346
Central	1,088	732
Dumfries and Galloway	3,022	2,434
Fife	1,047	785
Grampian	6,520	4,708
Highland	4,672	3,063
Lothian	1,137	720
Strathclyde	5,706	4,099
Tayside	2,904	2,087
Orkney, Shetland, Western Isles	4,256	2,796
Less Favoured Area[1]	20,692	15,081
Non Less Favoured Area	11,400	7,689

[1] Holdings where 50 per cent. or more of the land is classified LFA for subsidy purposes.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is (a) the amount of land in hectares in each region, (b) the number of farmers and (c) the cost of the five-year set-aside scheme in Scotland in (i) 1993-94 and (ii) 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The areas and numbers of farmers as reported and the aid paid to date under the five-year set-aside scheme in each region of Scotland in respect of 1993-94—that is, for the set-aside year ending on 30 September 1993—are as follows:

Region	Number of farmers	Area Hectares	Amount paid £
Borders	44	2,219	348,309
Central	26	1,042	201,406
Dumfries and Galloway	7	115	20,938
Fife	34	1,327	173,398
Grampian	444	10,301	1,778,760
Highland and the Islands Councils	72	2,447	428,603
Lothian	23	1,025	208,185
Strathclyde	44	615	119,599
TOTALS	812	23,766	3,990,731

Estimated expenditure for 1994-95 is some £2 million in respect of 350 set-aside agreements covering around 12,000 hectares. It is not possible to give a regional breakdown as the 1994-95 payments will not commence until after the claims have been received in respect of the set-aside year which ends on 30 September 1994. The difference between the 1993-94 and 1994-95 figures is the result of some farmers having completed their five-year agreements and others having taken advantage of the option to terminate agreements early in order to join the arable area payments scheme.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will give the payment rates made per hectare under the arable area payments scheme for (a) cereals, (b) oilseeds, (c) proteins, (d) linseed, (e) set-aside and (f) the simplified scheme paid in (i) the first year and (ii) the second year of the scheme in both the less-favoured area and the non-less favoured area of Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: The payment rates per hectare in Scotland for the first and second year of the scheme are set out below. The actual rates payable in 1994 may be reduced if base areas are exceeded and the rate for oilseeds may be adjusted to reflect changes to the reference price.

	LFA (£/hectares)	Non-LFA (£/hectares)	LFA (£/hectares)	Non-LFA (£/hectares)
(a) cereals	114.0746	131.3893	156.9785	181.7817
(b) oilseeds	368.8521	445.6669	402.8383	489.3607
(c) proteins	296.5939	341.6122	291.5314	337.5946
(d) linseed[1]	(—)	(—)	(—)	(—)
(e) set-aside	205.3342	236.5008	255.6506	296.0445

(f) simplified scheme	114.0746	131.3893	156.9785	181.7817

[1] Linseed was not incorporated into the Arable Area Payments Scheme until 1994. The payment rate for 1994 has not yet been fixed by the EC Commission.
[2] There is a reduced payment rate for voluntary set-aside in excess of the applicant's cropped area; voluntary set-aside was not available in 1993.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 88, if he will now give (i) the number of holdings in Scotland in 1993 for (a) cereals, (b) potatoes, (c) linseed, (d) sugar beet, (e) horticultural produce and (f) oilseeds in each region and in the less-favoured area and non-less-favoured areas.

Sir Hector Monro: The figures for main holdings at June 1993 are as follows:

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the take-up of the arable area payments scheme in hectares for (a) the simplified scheme, (b) cereals, (c) oilseeds, (d) proteins, (e) linseed and (f) set-aside in (i) the less-favoured areas and (ii) the non-less-favoured areas in Scotland for 1994.

Sir Hector Monro: Officials are currently analysing claims made in 1994 by Scottish farmers under the arable area payments scheme. Until this analysis is complete, it is not possible to determine what this year's uptake has been.

Mineworkings

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the most recent information available to him on the stability of old mineworkings which lie under the town of Johnstone and the village of Elderslie; how many houses have been demolished in the area because of subsidence caused by old mineworkings; if he will give the year of demolition; what measures have been taken to minimise the risk of further subsidence; if he will commission a study into the need for further ground stabilisation measures; which public bodies have responsibility for monitoring the situation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 June 1994]: The information the hon. Member seeks is not held centrally. It is not clear from the hon. Member's question what type of mining operations are being referred to. However, in the case of coal mining subsidence where properties suffer damage, British Coal is responsible for repair or compensation, as appropriate, under the Coal Mining Subsidence Act (1991). Following privatisation, claimants' rights regarding coal mining subsidence damage will remain unaffected, although British Coal's responsibilities will pass either to the Coal Authority or to the new mine owner.

If the hon. Member is concerned about a specific coal mining related matter, he may care to direct his inquiry to British Coal.

Road Haulage Industry

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the current issues and problems facing the road haulage industry in Scotland;

(2) if he will make a statement on the current issues and problems facing the excavation and heavy plant hire sector of the road haulage and contracting industry in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 July 1994]: My right hon. Friend and I are not aware of any particular issues and problems that are peculiar to the road haulage industry in Scotland. The road haulage industry in the United Kingdom is generally acknowledged as being one of the most efficient, reliable and cost-effective within the European Union. It has a continuing and important role to play in the economy of Scotland.

Correspondence

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average time his Department takes in replying to letters from right hon. and hon. Members; and what is (a) the shortest time and (b) the longest time it has taken to reply in full in the last Session of Parliament.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 1 July 1994]: Information is not held currently in precisely the form requested. My Department has a target of issuing replies to correspondence from hon. Members and others within 17 working days of receipt. Statistics of performance are held by calendar year and in 1993, 52 per cent. of replies to hon. Members were within that 17 working day target. The time taken to answer individual items of correspondence in 1993 ranged from fewer than five working days to over 30 working days of receipt of the correspondence. Some 85 per cent. of correspondence warranting a ministerial reply in 1993—10,320 items out of a total of 12,089—received a full reply within 30 working days.

Renfrewshire Enterprise

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the identifiable (a) capital and (b) revenue or current expenditure by Renfrewshire Enterprise by regional council electoral division, or on any other geographical basis on which the data is collated or accounted, in each year since 1990; how much in both expenditure categories is (i) legally committed and (ii) planned for fiscal years 1994-95 and 1995-96; what is the pro-rata expenditure in each category for each regional council electoral division, expressed as a percentage of the total capital and revenue budgets measured against their respective populations; if he will rank the regional council electoral divisions in decending order by level of expenditure in both categories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 July 1994]: The overall budget allocation for Scottish Enterprise is determined by my right hon. Friend. The distribution of funds from Scottish Enterprise to the local enterprise company network is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise. I shall ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what decisions his Department has taken in respect of local enterprise companies over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement with LECs over the same period.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 29 June 1994]: My right hon. Friend and the Scottish Office set the operating frameworks within which Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise contract with the local enterprise companies, but do not have any direct, formal relationship with the local enterprise companies themselves. Scottish Enterprise requires the approval of the Scottish Office before making material changes to the local enterprise company operating contracts or articles and memoranda of association. One such case has been referred to the Scottish Office in the past year. In addition, there are frequent informal contacts between Scottish Office Ministers and officials and the local enterprise companies.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he proposes to introduce to implement the EC habitats directive 92/43/EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for the Environment have today laid before Parliament a set of draft regulations which would, subject to approval by both Houses, give legislative effect to the directive in Great Britain.

The measures set out in the draft regulations build on our existing nature conservation legislation and provide increased protection on land and at sea for the most internationally important sites for nature conservation in Great Britain. They form part of the Government's wider action to promote nature conservation and biological diversity, as set out in "Biodiversity: The United Kingdom Action Plan", launched by the Prime Minister in January this year.

The draft regulations also reflect the comments made when the Government consulted a wide range of conservation, farming, fisheries, economic, recreational and other interests in the autumn of 1993 about implementation of the habitats directive. The 94 responses received in Scotland emphasised to the Government both the widespread support for the nature conservation objectives of the directive and the need to implement the directive in partnership with those who earn their living from our countryside and our sea.

The draft regulations apply to special protection areas designated under the EC wild birds directive and to special areas of conservation to be identified by the Government in accordance with the habitats directive. Together, these sites will contribute to a European network of sites of high biodiversity significance to be known as Natura 2000.

In brief, the regulations contain the following provisions:

- duties are placed on Ministers and the statutory nature conservation agencies—for Scotland, Scottish Natural Heritage—to fulfil the requirements of the habitats directive;
- duties are placed on other statutory authorities to address the requirements of the habitats directive in the exercise of their functions;
- new provisions build on those in the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to give additional protection to Natura 2000 sites. Existing restrictions on potentially damaging operations may be toughened where necessary, and farmers and landowners will be compensated for any losses which they sustain because of this. Special nature conservation orders will give indefinite protection to the conservation interests of Natura 2000 sites from proposals to carry out damaging operations. In the last resort, Scottish Natural Heritage would be obliged to use its compulsory purchase powers to protect Natura 2000 sites from deterioration or where no satisfactory management agreements could be concluded following the making of a special nature conservation order. This power should seldom, if ever, be used given that SNH will be seeking to address the inappropriate management of land by the negotiation of voluntary management agreements;
- some technical measures supplement the species protection provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981;
- an innovative set of measures is proposed to secure the protection of Natura 2000 sites in the marine environment. Ministers and statutory authorities would be obliged to use their powers to protect the integrity of marine Natura 2000 sites. SNH would advise relevant authorities on the conservation objectives of marine Natura 2000 sites. Where desirable, the relevant authorities concerned would cooperate in drawing up a management scheme for the marine Natura 2000 site. Ministers would have reserve powers to ensure that management schemes were developed where necessary and to ensure these schemes effectively address the issues facing the site;
- provisions are made to ensure that planning authorities, and other authorities giving consent for developments or operations potentially damaging to the integrity of Natura 2000 sites, cannot give consent to developments if they would damage the integrity of a Natura 2000 site. Authorities would be required to review, and where necessary modify or revoke, existing permissions whose implementation would be damaging to a Natura 2000 site, and compensatory provisions are established for developers who incur loss because of this. The Government will consider sympathetically requests from planning authorities for reimbursement of the costs of compensation necessarily incurred by them in revoking or modifying planning permissions under these regulations. Provisions governing simplified planning zones and enterprise zones are amended by the draft regulations so as not to give permission for developments damaging to the integrity of a Natura 2000 site. The General Permitted Development Order is being amended similarly following a separate consultation in the late summer of 1993.

Further minor measures will be introduced after the summer recess bringing the exercise by relevant authorities of powers under specific statutes into line with the requirements of the directive. The Government also expect in the autumn to consult owners, occupiers and other relevant interests on a draft list of proposed special areas of conservation. The Government believe this consultation to be important even though it is not required by the directive.

The Government intend, subject to the regulations coming into force, to issue a circular to the relevant authorities detailing the effect of the regulations.

The Government consider that the draft regulations set out before Parliament a balanced and effective range of measures to establish and protect Great Britain's valuable contribution to the Natura 2000 network.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hospital Services

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what efforts he is making to assist with the marketing abroad of Britain's hospital services in both private and NHS sectors.

Mr. Needham: Promotion of health care exports is primarily the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. However, our two Departments work closely together on export promotion and we are currently in the process of setting up a health care sector group under the auspices of the Overseas Projects Board. For my own part, I have sought to promote British health care expertise during my visits abroad, most recently during my programme of calls earlier this month in Asia and the middle east.

Company Inspections

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what records of time, expenses and costs are kept where his Department's officers act as inspectors under the Companies Acts.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Records are kept of the expenses incurred by departmental inspectors and, since 1991, of the time spent on individual inspections. Time costs are calculated taking into account salaries, associated costs, and general overheads including accommodation costs.

Indonesia (Trade)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to encourage British manufacturers to export goods and services to Indonesia.

Mr. Needham: Indonesia is one of my Department's priority markets. Last year, we effectively doubled the number of staff working on promoting trade to Indonesia and engaged a secondee from industry specifically for that purpose. In 1993, I led three business delegations to Indonesia and the DTI financially supported a further 150 British business visitors: it is likely that a similar number will receive support this year.

Ernst and Young

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action has been taken against Ernst and Young and its partners, following the criticisms made by the inspectors in their report on (a) Rotaprint plc and (b) Sound Diffusion.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In the case of Rotaprint plc, the investigation committee of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales reprimanded and fined Mr. R. H. Legge FCA, the engagement partner for the audit in question. In the case of Sound Diffusion plc, the investigation committee concluded earlier this month, after taking leading counsels' opinion, that there was no prima facie case against the institute members responsible for auditing the accounts of the company in 1986 and 1987, the years in question. Consequently, the investigation committee decided not to refer formal complaints to the institute's disciplinary committee.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: Few surveys of this kind have been conducted in the DTI during the past two years, and they relate to the operation of internal management procedures. They are confidential to management and to the staff involved.

Receivers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to proposals for legislation under which receivers would owe a duty of care to (a) the shareholders and (b) the employees of a company in receivership.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: If the hon. Member will detail the proposals to which he refers, I will ensure they are given careful consideration.

Moizer Report

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what consideration he has given to proposals for the creation of a single independent body to monitor the work of auditors;

(2) when he will lay Professor Moizer's report before the House.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am still considering Professor Moizer's report on audit monitoring.

Alexander Howden

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken against the auditing firm and partners criticised in the inspectors' reports on Alexander Howden; and what has been the outcome.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A copy of the inspectors' report into the affairs of Alexander Howden Holdings plc—formerly Alexander Howden Group plc—was passed to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in August 1990. The matter was then referred to the joint disciplinary scheme. In December 1992, a joint disciplinary scheme committee of inquiry, noting that the events which were the subject of the inquiry took place prior to 1982, found that no criticism was made out concerning the conduct, efficiency or competence of two members and, in respect of the others under inquiry, decided that it would not now be able to reach a finding on their conduct, efficiency or competence.

J. S. Bass and Co.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will appoint inspectors to investigate the liquidation of J. S. Bass and Co.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

WMD Underwriting Agencies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken against the auditing firm and partners criticised in the inspectors' reports on WMD Underwriting Agencies; and what has been the outcome.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A copy of the inspectors' report into the affairs of Minet Holdings plc and WMD Underwriting Agencies Limited was passed to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in August 1990. The matter was then referred to the joint disciplinary scheme. In December 1992, a joint disciplinary scheme committee of inquiry, noting that the events which were the subject of the inquiry took place prior to 1982, decided it would not now be able to reach a finding on the conduct, efficiency or competence of the members under inquiry.

Insolvency

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to impose on the regulatory bodies responsible for insolvency a duty care to individual shareholders, employees and unsecured creditors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such plans.

Receivers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to impose on receivers a duty of care to individual shareholders, employees and unsecured creditors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to do so.

EC Industry Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) of 28 June, Official Report, column 467, what was the voting record of each member state on each item agreed and adopted at the meeting of the European Community's Industry Council held on 22 June.

Mr. Sainsbury: No votes were taken on any of the issues on the agenda of the Industry Council on 22 June.

Sanctions (Nigeria)

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the impact upon British industry of those military and defence sanctions which have already been imposed against Nigeria; when those sanctions will be lifted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 30 June 1994]: It is not the intention of the measures we introduced to damage our economic relations with Nigeria. We and our partners are keeping those measures under review, and will modify them in the light of progress towards democracy in Nigeria.

Councils of Ministers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all qualified majority votes on the single market programme at European Councils of Ministers since 1989, giving in each case the voting record of each member state.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 29 June 1994]: The information requested by the hon. Member is not readily available. I shall write to him with a substantive reply, giving as much information as possible, in due course and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

TREASURY

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what importance he attaches to the exchange rate in determining the competitiveness of United Kingdom manufacturers at home and overseas; and if he will publish his estimate of the amount by which unit costs of labour would have to fall in the import-competing and export industries to compensate for an increase of 5 per cent. in the nominal exchange rate;

(2) what importance the Government attach to the exchange rate in the management of the United Kingdom economy; and for what purposes the exchange rate is managed.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 March 1994, Official Report, column 15. The United Kingdom's price competitiveness depends fundamentally on improving productivity and controlling costs. Policies directed at permanently low inflation and competitive markets provide the best environment in which to achieve this. A policy of continued devaluation would only raise inflation and would be damaging to long-run economic success.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) to what extent the Government's monetary and exchange rate policies are designed to eliminate the deficit in the balance of payments on current account.

(2) to what extent the Government's monetary and exchange rate policies are designed to increase (a) employment and (b) output in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Nelson: It is the role of monetary policy to deliver low inflation. Decisions are based on an assessment of a range of monetary indicators and other data, in particular the growth of narrow and broad money and movements in the exchange rate and asset prices. Low inflation on permanent basis combined with sound public finances provide the stable and macro-economic framework needed for sustained growth in output and employment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish a table based on table 7.1A of "CSO Financial Statistics, May 1994", showing the pound sterling exchange rate index against non-European monetary system currencies on a 1985 basis for each year since 1975, the fourth quarter of 1976, the second quarter of 1979, the first quarter of 1981 and each quarter since the fourth quarter of 1986, together with the corresponding figures for the pound sterling exchange rate index;

(2) whether it is the Government's policy to reverse the fall in the real exchange rate against the ecu between October 1990 and February 1993; and if he will publish a table showing the real exchange rate against the ecu and non-ecu currencies in the fourth quarter of 1976, October 1990, February 1987 and at the latest available date for countries for which figures are available measured in terms of (a) relative unit export values for manufactures and finished manufactures, (b) terms of trade for semi-finished manufactures, finished manufactures and manufactures, (c) relative producer prices and (d) relative average export values for manufactures and finished manufactures;

(3) if he will publish a table based on table 13.1 of CSO Financial Statistics, July 1988, showing the pound sterling exchange rate index against non-EMS currencies on a 1975 basis for each year since 1975, the fourth quarter of 1976, the second quarter of 1979, the first quarter of 1981 and each quarter since the fourth quarter of 1986 together with the corresponding figures for the pound sterling exchange rate index;

(4) if he will publish a table based on table 7.1A of CSO Financial Statistics, May 1994, showing the pound sterling exchange rate index against European monetary system currencies on a 1985 basis for each year since 1975, the fourth quarter of 1976, the second quarter of 1979, the first quarter of 1981 and each quarter since the fourth quarter of 1986;

(5) if he will publish a table based on table 13.1 of Central Statistical Office financial statistics showing the sterling exchange rate index against European monetary system currencies on a 1975 basis for each year since 1975, the fourth quarter of 1976, the second quarter of 1979, the first quarter of 1981 and each quarter since the fourth quarter of 1986.

Mr. Nelson [holding answers 28, 29, 30 June 1994]: Single sterling exchange rate indices for EMS and non-EMS currencies are not available. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 11 January 1994, Official Report, column 19, where I gave a reference for the weighted composition and methodological construction of sterlin's exchange rate index.

The tables to which the hon. Member refers give figures for sterling's exchange rate index. Sterling real exchange rates defined in various ways can be found in "International Financial Statistics", published by the IMF, and in "Economic Trends", published by the CSO. Export and import unit values of manufactures and wholesale prices for the United Kingdom and its main trading partners can be found in "International Financial Statistics". Average export values of manufactures can be found in the "Monthly Bulletin of Statistics", published by the United Nations. The other data needed to calculate the information requested may be available from the national authorities of the countries concerned.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 March 1994, Official Report, column 15, where I made a statement about the role of the exchange rate in monetary policy.

Hydrocarbon Oil

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 May, Official Report, column 306, what is the annual operating cost of the 17 regional road fuel testing units assigned to control the illegal use of hydrocarbon oil.

Sir John Cope: The latest figures available show that the annual operating cost of the regional road fuel testing units assigned to control the illegal use of hydrocarbon oil was some £1·6 million in the year ending 31 March 1993.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 May, Official Report, column 306, how many vehicles were tested by the 17 regional road fuel testing units assigned to control the illegal use of hydrocarbon oil, in each of the last three years; and what proportion were found to have illicit fuel.

Sir John Cope: The numbers of vehicles tested by the regional road fuel units, and the numbers found to be running on illicit fuel, are:

Year ending 31 March 1992	84,614 tested and 1,594 on illicit fuel
Year ending 31 March 1993	73,051 tested and 1,607 on illicit fuel
Year ending 31 March 1994	66,259 tested and 1,682 on illicit fuel

Valuation

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is (a) the average and (b) the maximum time taken between the completion of a new dwelling and the completion of its valuation for council tax purposes.

Mr. Nelson: This information is not available.

Policies

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his speech to the Konrad Adenauer Foundation on 29 June represents Government policy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (ii) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Nelson: No Treasury press releases or answers to parliamentary questions are currently printed on recycled paper. However, most of the paper used by the Department is environmentally friendly paper which is total chlorine free. The Department's policy on the use of recycled and environmentally friendly paper is reviewed regularly.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many contracts the Inland Revenue has entered into with the computer company EDS-Scion or its predecessor EDS; when the contracts were entered into; what is their total value; and what is the subject matter of each contract.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 1 July 1994]: On 23 May 1994, the Inland Revenue signed contracts with Electronic Data Systems Ltd. for the supply of information technology services to the Department over the next 10 years, starting on 1 July 1994. Over 100 agreements make up the contracts with EDS covering such matters as the pricing and regulation of the service arrangements, the transfer of assets from the Revenue to EDS, the transfer of staff, the leases and licenses to property which EDS will occupy, services which the Revenue will supply to EDS on shared sites, third party agreements allowing EDS the right to various services already supplied to the Revenue and various other documents and side letters.

The 10-year contract is estimated to be worth around £1 billion, and is expected to enable the Inland Revenue to make savings of 15 to 20 per cent. in the costs of its information technology support.

ENVIRONMENT

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government;

(2) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department what are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament;

(3) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports;

(4) if he will list the advisory bodies he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993";

(5) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory basis;

(6) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult prior to legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Gummer: My Department currently sponsors 14 advisory non-departmental public bodies, information about which is in the table below. Publication of advice and reports is usually for the NDPBs and the Department to determine rather than a statutory requirement. "Going for Green" and the Government's panel on sustainable development have yet to determine their working methods. Those two bodies, plus the Assessment Panel for Construction Research and the Local Government Staff Commission (England) have been set up since the qualifying date for "Public Bodies 1993".

There are statutory requirements for Ministers to consult the Advisory Committee on Hazardous Substance, the Building Regulations Advisory Committee, the Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council and the Local Government Commission for England in specified circumstances. In addition, the Government regularly seek advisory NDPBs' views on a range of issues. There are no stautory requirements for the Government to publish responses to advice from advisory bodies, but responses are published, or other action taken, when it is appropriate to do so.

Advisory non-departmental public body	Date set up	Advice published	Produces annual report	Report laid before Parliament	Statutory basis

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he has issued as to the propriety of (a) chairmen of public bodies with a specific responsibility for the natural environment and (b) the chairman of English Nature in particular, holding paid advisory or managerial positions with (i) private companies involved in waste disposal or (ii) privatised water companies.

Mr. Atkins: Revised rules were drawn to the attention of the chief executives of the Department's sponsored bodies and discussed with them in April 1991. Following this, the board or council of each body was asked to review its arrangements and report the results to the Department. The essence of our guidance is that relevant interests should be declared on a register and members should refrain from discussion or decisions when matters affecting such an interest come before the board or council. I wish strongly to repudiate the inference in the hon. Gentleman's question that the chairman of English Nature might be acting improperly in holding advisory or main board non-executive appointments in private companies. Precisely the reverse—we expect the services of people we appoint to public bodies for their eminence and expertise to be sought by others in related spheres and I believe that it does nothing for good government to impugn their reputation when they have observed the rules about disclosure of interest in the letter and in the spirit.

Housing Vacancies

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the vacancy rate in each housing sector.

Sir George Young: The latest available information on the numbers and percentages of vacant dwellings in England is set out below. For local authorities and housing associations, figures are also given for management vacants.

Vacant dwellings at 1 April 1993

	Number	Percentage of dwellings
Local authorities[2]
Management vacants[1]	39,700	1·1
All vacant dwellings	70,900	1·9
Housing associations[3]
Management vacants[1]	17,200	2·4
All vacant dwellings	27,600	3·9
Government departments[4]	16,000	15·0
Private sector[5]	765,000	5·0

[5]Annual Housing Investment Programme (HIP1) returns. Local authorities are asked to provide estimates of the number of private sector vacant dwellings in their area on these returns but there are doubts about the quality of the estimates provided by some authorities. Alternative survey information suggests that the numbers of private sector vacants reported on these returns may be an over-estimate.

The figure for housing association vacant dwellings includes around 10,500 dwellings purchased in the last weeks of the financial year under the housing market package announced in the 1992 Autumn Statement.

Recycling

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made since his statement in 1991 that the Government intended to bring forward legislation to introduce recycling plans with firm targets.

Mr. Atkins: Section 49 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which came into force on 1 August 1991, places a duty on waste collection authorities in England, Scotland and Wales to prepare and issue waste recycling plans. The Department's guidance emphasises the value of local targets in those plans, to supplement the Government's national target of recovering 25 per cent. of household waste by 2000. Authorities in England were asked to prepare draft recycling plans by 1 August 1992. Some 98 per cent. of those plans have been approved by the Department as meeting the statutory requirements.

A new waste management order for Northern Ireland is currently being prepared and will require district councils to provide recycling plans in line with section 49 of the 1990 Act.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the Government will adopt fully to comply with the international recommendations from the Paris Commission in relation to BNFL THORP at Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The recommendations of the Paris Commission are not binding. The United Kingdom complies with those recommendations that it accepts. Since 1987, there have been nine Paris recommendations on radioactive issues. The United Kingdom has accepted all of those except for recommendation 93/5.

The United Kingdom, together with other contracting parties, placed a reserve on recommendation 93/5 because it failed to meet the standard of clarity desirable in an international agreement and sought to give the Paris Commission an inappropriate role in the authorising of individual projects.

Fuel Emissions

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution makes for testing emissions from the burning of a fuel which has a variable composition.

Mr. Atkins: HMIP requires all operators to use appropriate means to monitor emissions from their processes whatever the fuel.

Cemfuel

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations have taken place on the subject of Cemfuel between the north-west regional office and the midlands regional office of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Atkins: There have been extensive consultations between the two HMIP regional offices on the subject of Cemfuel.

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria will be used by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution when assessing the results of the Cemfuel trials at Ribblesdale, Lancashire to decide whether to grant an authorisation for continued burning of the substance.

Mr. Atkins: No authorisation will be granted until HMIP is fully satisfied that the requirements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 are complied with.

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at how many locations authorisation for trial burning of Cemfuel has been granted; when these authorisations were granted; and how long each of these trials is expected to continue.

Mr. Atkins: Only one plant is authorised to undertake trial burning of Cemfuel. An integrated pollution control authorisation for this plant was issued on 30 November 1993. These trials are scheduled to be completed by the end of 1994.

Hazardous Waste (Burning)

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the permitted level of dioxins which may be produced as a result of burning hazardous waste in (a) an incinerator and (b) a cement kiln.

Mr. Atkins: The permitted level of dioxins is $1ng/m^3$ for both types of plant.

Objective 1 Status, Merseyside

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on liaison between his Department and the officials of DGXVI of the European Commission representing the Commission in Merseyside.

Mr. Baldry: The lengthy negotiations with DGXVI officials on the Merseyside single programming document were conducted constructively and in a business-like way, and have now been concluded. Liaison with DGXVI will continue, through its membership of the monitoring committee overseeing the objective 1 programme, and its membership of the two technical panels supporting that committee.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make copies of the agreed objective 1 programme for Merseyside available to those entitled to benefit from it.

Mr. Baldry: Extensive guidance material on the objective 1 programme, including simple question/answer sheets, more detailed general guidance, and special guidance for small and medium-sized enterprises is already available through the Government office for Merseyside and other agencies. Copies of the full document will become available once the Commission has completed its legal procedures on the document and a final text is available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the reasons for the refusal on 22 June of the application made by Mr. Peter Johnson, managing director of Rea Metal Windows (Liverpool) Ltd., on behalf of his company to the Merseyside task force for financial support to expand the business and increase its number of employees; and what account was taken in considering the company's application of the company's rights under the agreed objective 1 programme, 1994 to 1999.

Mr. Baldry: The Merseyside objective 1 programme agreed with the Commission provides that grants will be paid to the private sector through intermediaries, to be designated by the monitoring committee. That cannot take place until the Commission completes its legal processes on the document. Mr. Johnson was seeking a form of assistance not provided there. Mr. Johnson was therefore encouraged by the objective 1 secretariat to speak to staff more directly concerned with business support, to see how his business might be assisted. He has now been sent an information pack about business support on Merseyside, which he is encouraged to follow-up with the Government office there.

Coastal Management

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make a full statement on the outcome of his consideration of his consultation on coastal management.

Mr. Atkins: I hope to make a statement shortly.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total capital grant funds to each metropolitan district in England in 1992-93 and 1993-94, and the projected allocation to be completed at the end of the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: Capital grants are issued by a number of Government Departments.

The total amounts of capital grants for the various services for local authorities in England are published annually by Her Majesty's Treasury at the conclusion of each public expenditure survey. Outturn information for the years 1990-91 to 1993-94 and the plans for 1994-95 were published in February 1994 in the public expenditure statistical supplement to the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95".

Information for individual authorities about capital grants is not held centrally and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

County Hall

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers he has to control the display of advertisements on the former County hall.

Mr. Baldry: Control over the display of outdoor advertisements is the local planning authority's responsibility. It is for Lambeth borough council to control advertisements on the former County hall.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to improve funding for the Energy Saving Trust.

Mr. Atkins: An inter-departmental group of officials has been asked to review options for the future funding of the Energy Saving Trust and its schemes.

Dog Fouling

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects his Department's advisory group on litter to make a recommendation on national legislation for dog fouling and the definition of dog mess as litter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Soon.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what weight he will give to the results of the Local Government Commission's current public consultation exercise in Cheshire in deciding the future structure of local government in that county.

Mr. Baldry: It is for the Local Government Commission to consider the results of public consultation on its draft proposals for Cheshire when drawing up its final recommendations to the Secretary of State.

All representations to the Secretary of State on the Commission's final recommendations will be taken into account before decisions about the implementation of any changes are made. Final decisions will be for Parliament.

Fire Advisory Panel

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many members serve on the fire advisory panel; and how many of those members are also members of the Institute of Fire Safety.

Mr. Baldry: The fire advisory panel has 29 members, of whom I understand 10 are also members of the Institute of Fire Safety.

Homelessness

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money his Department has provided for each year from 1991-92 to 1994-95 for helping homeless people.

Sir George Young [holding answer 29 June 1994]: My Department's housing expenditure in the years in question is set out in its annual report 1994, Cm 2507. Some £7·4 billion will be spent in 1994-95. The vast majority of that spending goes to help those who are in housing need, who need help with the repair of their housing or who have difficulty paying their local authority rent.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority, housing association and voluntary sector hostel bedspaces for single homeless people there were in England on (a) 31 December 1993 and (b) 31 March 1994, or the most recent figures available.

Sir George Young: Information available to my Department relates to bedspaces in hostels owned by registered housing associations. There were a total of 69,500 bedspaces in those hostels on 31 March 1993, the most recent date for which a figure is available. Those hostels cater not solely for single homeless people but for single people with a variety of special needs, many of whom are homeless.

The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy annual homelessness statistics publication includes data on the numbers of local authority hostel bedspaces for single homeless persons. A copy of the latest edition—"Homelessness Statistics 1992/93 Actuals"—is in the Library.

Information on hostel bedspaces for single homeless people in the voluntary sector is not held centrally.

Peat Extraction

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to phase out peat extraction.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she is taking to phase out peat extraction.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

Government policy in respect of peat extraction is currently under review. The Government recognise the nature conservation value of the peatland resource and wish to encourage the use of suitable alternative materials while recognising the value of peat for some technically demanding uses by the horticultural industry in particular. The working group on peat extraction, 7 July 1992, Official Report, column 158, is considering a range of policies to secure the protection and rehabilitation of the most important sites and limiting new extraction to areas where no damage to nature conservation interests would arise. I will be publishing the outcome from the group's work later this year. My Department has also supported English Nature in safeguarding, for nature conservation, important vegetated areas on some existing peat workings, which were previously planned for extraction.

Emergency Planning, Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the basis for and outcome of the recent Oscar IV emergency planning exercise held at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Exercise Oscar IV was the level III—national—civil nuclear emergency exercise for 1993. It was held in November and formed part of an on-going programme to demonstrate the off-site emergency arrangements at each civil nuclear site in the United Kingdom every three years.

The exercise was a successful demonstration of the off-site emergency planning arrangements for BNFL's Sellafield plant, fulfilling the licensing criteria set by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Habitat and Species Directive

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the measures he proposes to introduce to implement the European habitat and species directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am pleased to say that the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I have today laid in draft, for approval under the affirmative procedure, the Conservation (Natural Habitats etc.) Regulations under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972, to effect transposition of the directive in Great Britain. The regulations mark an important step forward in nature conservation and consolidate our policies and practices in respect of sites and species of international importance.

On 4 October last year, the Government consulted on the proposed implementation in Great Britain of the Council directive on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild flora and fauna, the EC habitats directive. I am grateful to all those bodies and individuals who responded to the consultation, of which there were 144 in England and Wales and 94 in Scotland. The responses have been placed in the usual Libraries. Departments are writing to each of the respondents explaining the Government's consideration of the points raised and our detailed conclusions. A copy of this letter will be placed in the House Libraries.

The Government firmly support the directive's objective to contribute to the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora throughout the European Union. The Government's proposals for implementation reflect that important aim. The legal measures necessary for transposition of the directive into national law contained in the draft regulations are complemented by broader initiatives in the countryside as a whole to respond to the wider objectives of the directive. We shall deliver the latter in the medium and long term through the strategy set out in the biodiversity action plan published in January this year.

The draft regulations comprise a thorough implementation package. They build largely on the existing extensive legislative basis which provides a strong framework for nature conservation in this country. They introduce some new provisions and apply existing legislation amended as required by the directive's obligations. The EC birds directive is amended by the habitats directive in respect of special protection areas, and the draft regulations also give effect to this. United Kingdom special protection areas and special areas of conservation will together contribute to the European Union network of designated areas known as Natura 2000.

In summary, the draft regulations cover:

new provisions for site selection and designation;

new duties on Ministers and nature conservation agencies to use their powers in accordance with the requirements of the Directive; application of the present SSSI and NNR legislation amended to ensure that the procedures can be operated in accordance with the Directive;

a new basis for the conservation of marine sites in which relevant Ministers and local bodies will be under a duty to exercise their existing powers in accordance with the Directive often within the framework of an agreed inter-agency scheme of management;

a number of technical amendments to the existing species protection legislation;

application of the Directive's requirements for approval and review of schemes which could significantly adversely affect the conservation value of the sites in respect of the Town and Country Planning, Highways, Transport and Works, Electricity and Pipe-lines Acts as well as pollution control, waste management and water discharge consents in the Environmental Protection and Water Resources Acts.

Further regulations will be laid before Parliament in due course to ensure that other activities for which statutory consents and permissions are required and which could have a significantly adverse effect on the nature conservation interests of a protected site are brought within the provisions of the directive.

The Government are committed to consultation on the sites to be proposed under the directive. The regulations make formal provision for designation but the processes leading to that point will be non-statutory. English Nature, the Countryside Council for Wales and Scottish Natural Heritage, co-ordinated through the Joint Nature Conservancy Council are working on their advice to Government about the United Kingdom contribution to the Natura 2000 network in the light of the directive's scientific criteria. When the Government have considered the agencies' advice, we shall decide to publish our proposals and the consultation process will begin. Individual owners and occupiers of sites will be fully involved.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudanese Peace Talks

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the Sudanese peace talks held in Nairobi from 16 to 20 May.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 17 May, the Government of Sudan and SPLA factions signed an agreement on the opening of specific air destinations and surface corridors to humanitarian relief supplies. A draft declaration of principles was circulated to all parties for consideration in advance of the next round of talks scheduled for 18 July.

Sudan

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are presently being pursued by Her Majesty's Government to curtail the flow of arms to all parties to the Sudanese conflict.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 8 March, the European Union agreed an arms embargo. This reinforced our own policy of not selling lethal weaponry to Sundan.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Goodlad: All the press releases and written answers from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are currently printed on paper which is manufactured from renewable sources.

Immigration Cases

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) for what reasons Mrs. Sahib Jee—Ref: V93/21255—was refused a visa to visit the United Kingdom by the High Commission in Islamabad last October; what information she was given at that time on whether the decision to refuse a visa would prejudice a subsequent application at a further date; for what reason Mrs. Sahib Jee was sent away from the post in Islamabad on 30 May 1993 and told that having been refused a visa she could make no further application; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will review urgently the application made to the British High Commissioner in Islamabad by Mrs. Sahib Jee—Ref: V93/21255—to visit the United Kingdom;

(3) if he will urgently review the refusal by the British High Commission in Islamabad to grant a visa to visit the United Kingdom to Mrs. Maskeena Jan—Ref. V94/9363; TH/14866; TH/1912/92; IMM/V9005055—and if he will make a statement;

(4) what recommendations he has sent to the British High Commission in Islamabad regarding applications made to visit the United Kingdom by Mrs. Maskeena Jan —Ref. TH/14866; TH/1912/92; and IMM/V9005055—what decision was made on 15 May in relation to Mrs. Jan's latest application to visit the United Kingdom—Ref. V94/9363—and if he will recommend that Mrs. Jan be issued with a visa to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information in London about these cases, I have asked the entry clearance officer at the high commission in Islamabad to let me have a report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in how many cases since the right of appeal was abolished to those refused a visa to visit the United Kingdom second applications made to the British High Commission in Islamabad have been (a) granted, (b) refused or (c) deferred for inquiries to be made; in how many such cases advice has been offered to the applicant or sponsor to make the application acceptable; and in how many cases an applicant wishing to make a second application was turned away and told they were unable to lodge a second application as their first application had been refused.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The high commission in Islamabad does not keep statistics about the outcome of second applications, nor does it keep statistics on what advice an entry clearance officer may pass on to an applicant following refusal to entry clearance. No applicant will be advised that he is unable to lodge an application. If he wishes to lodge a second application, he is free to do so. In Islamabad, a preliminary assessment of all non-settlement applications is carried out before an application is formally accepted and a visa fee taken. This is done in the interests of both the applicant and the high commission. The ECO may advise that, on the documentary evidence available, an application seems unlikely to succeed. An applicant is not obliged to follow the ECO's advice and if he decides to pursue the application, a formal interview is then arranged.

Tibet

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received about the continuing Chinese occupation of Tibet.

Mr. Goodlad: Hon. Members of the all-party parliamentary group for Tibet called on me on 28 June to discuss Tibet. Human rights abuses there are a matter of continuing concern to the British Government. We regularly raise the subject with the Chinese authorities.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the British Government have made to the Nigerian Government about the release of Moshood Abida.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We strongly regret the arrest of Chief Abiola and called on the Nigerian military Government to engage all sides in a constructive political dialogue. The European Union issued a statement on 30 June condemning the arrest and urging respect for human rights.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the differences in amounts of protein, casein and fat levels in milk coming from a dairy cow treated with synthetic bovine somatotropin and a dairy cow not treated with synthetic BST.

Mr. Soames: Many studies have been carried out to examine the effect of manufactured BST on milk composition. A review of those studies, which includes details of the amounts of protein, casein and fat, is to be found in the proceedings of the BST world-wide symposium held in August 1989 and reproduced in the "Journal of Dairy Science (1991), Volume 74 (Supplement 2), pages 2 to 11, a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been undertaken into IGF-1 levels in cows treated with synthetic BST; and to what extent these levels are different from those in cows not treated with synthetic BST.

Mr. Soames: Considerable research has been undertaken on IGF-1 levels in cows treated with manufactured BST. A review of the published studies is to be found in the 24 August 1990 edition of the journal "Science, Volume 249", pages 875 to 884, a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Consultants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by her Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1988 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Mr. Jack: The table gives the aggregate costs of contracts with each of the nine named consultants for the financial years 1990-91 to 1993-94 let by the Department and its agencies, excluding the Intervention Board executive agency.

Consultant	1990-91 to 1993-94 £	Number of contracts
Coopers and Lybrand	662,065	18
KPMG Peat Marwick	518,343	6

Grant Thornton	[1]—	1

[1] Single contract cost not given for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

The partial cost of some contracts started before 1990 are included in those figures. Neither records relating to individual consultants before 1990 nor breakdowns by type of contract are held centrally and those details could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Agriculture

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her estimate of the take-up of the arable area payments scheme in hectares for (a) the simplified scheme, (b) cereals, (c) oilseeds, (d) proteins, (e) linseed and (f) set-aside in England for 1994.

Mr. Jack: This information is as follows:

	(hectares)
Simplified scheme	158,758
Cereals (including maize)	2,142,426
Oilseeds	365,000
Proteins	239,925
Linseed	75,000—80,000
Set-aside	624,812

Estimates based on the area aid applications actually submitted for 1994 are not yet available.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was spent in each European Union country in pounds sterling, and what was the take-up in hectares, in 1993 on (a) the set-aside part of the arable area payments scheme or its equivalent and (b) set-aside measures introduced prior to the CAP reform of May 1992; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Provisional European Commission figures for the area of land set aside in each member state in 1993 under the arable area payments scheme and the five-year set-aside scheme are set out below, together with expenditure in ecus to the end of 1993. A sterling equivalent has been included for illustrative purposes.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will give the payment rates made per hectare under the arable areas payments scheme for (a) cereals, (b) oilseeds, (c) proteins, (d) linseed, (e) set-aside and (f) the simplified scheme paid in (i) the first year and (ii) the second year of the scheme in England.

Mr. Jack: The payment rates per hectare in England for the first and second years of the scheme are set out below. The actual rates payable in 1994 may be reduced if base areas are exceeded. The rate for oilseeds may change subject to the possible penalties resulting from the EC-US oilseeds agreement, and to adjustments dependent on the observed reference price. Set-aside land which is used to grow sugar beet for industrial purposes does not qualify for payment.

(f) simplified scheme	140	193

[1] Linseed was not incorporated into the arable area payments scheme until 1993-94. The payment rate for 1993-94 has not yet been fixed.

[2] There is a reduced payment rate for voluntary set-aside in excess of the applicant's cropped area.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 56, if she will now give (i) the number of hectares taken up and (ii) the number of holdings in each county in England in 1993 for (a) cereals, (b) potatoes, (c) linseed, (d) sugar beet, (e) horticultural produce and (f) oilseeds.

Mr. Jack: The table gives the requested information.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 391, what estimates she has for the amounts to be paid out for linseed in 1993-94 under the arable area payments scheme in (a) each county and (b) each region in England; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: It will not be possible to produce estimates for the amounts to be paid out for linseed in 1994 until the payment rate has been agreed by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) farmers and (b) holdings there were in each county in England in 1993.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is set out in the table.

Subsidies and Grants

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amount of money was paid out by each of her regional service centres for each (a) agricultural subsidy scheme and (b) grant scheme to farmers in 1992-93.

Mr. Jack: Information in the form requested by the hon. Member could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Summaries of the outturn on various grants and subsidy schemes in 1992-93 on a United Kingdom or on an all-England basis are included in the HM Treasury publication "Supply Estimates 1994-95 (Class III Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and Intervention Board —Intervention Agency)", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much land in each county in England was under the five-year set-aside scheme in (a) 1993-94 and (b) 1994-95 at the latest available date; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The latest information on land in the five-year set-aside scheme which is available on a county basis relates to the scheme year 1992-93, which ended on 30 September 1993, and is set out below.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she is taking to discourage (a) tail docking of piglets and (b) beak trimming of egg-laying hens; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The draft Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1994, which were laid before Parliament on 14 June, provide that tail docking of piglets may be carried out routinely only where there is evidence on the farm that injuries to other piglets have occurred or are likely to occur as a result of not carrying out this procedure. In addition, the codes of recommendations for the welfare of pigs and of domestic fowl, made under section 3(1) of the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968, make it clear that tail docking and beak trimming should be carried out only as a last resort. The Department also addresses means of controlling aggression in pigs and laying hens in its research programme.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the United Kingdom's pig herd was tail-docked in the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: Figures on the number of pigs which have been tail docked are not available.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the United Kingdom's flock of egg-laying hens was beak trimmed in the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: Figures on the number of egg-laying hens which have been beak trimmed are not available.

Bovine Immuno-deficiency Virus

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what tests for BIV are carried out on imported milk;

(2) what evidence of BIV infection has been found in (a) British and (b) imported milk supplies; on how many occasions; and what action was taken.

Mr. Soames: The Importation of Milk Regulations 1988, as amended, require all imports of milk from member states to be accompanied either by a health certificate certifying that the milk meets specified standards of production and hygiene or a commercial document or EC health mark indicating that it meets requirements in EC directive 92/46 on milk hygiene. All imported drinking milk is pasteurised, sterilised or ultra heat-treated. Imports of milk from third countries are currently prohibited. No tests for bovine immunodeficiency-like virus are carried out on British or imported milk. However, experience with other viruses suggests that pasteurisation would kill BIV. There is no evidence that BIV affects humans.

Beef Imports

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of beef imported into the United Kingdom per annum originates in Mexico; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 30 June 1994]: There were no recorded United Kingdom imports of beef of Mexican origin during 1993.

Correspondence

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many letters are received by her Department each year in respect of the problems encountered by the constituents of hon. Members; what is the average time of response and when the hon. Member for Hereford can expect to receive a reply to the letter he sent on behalf of his constituent Mr. Peter Symonds of Llandinabo on 7 December 1993 and about which follow up letters were sent on 4 March and 10 May 1994.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 1 July 1994]: The number of letters received from hon. Members enclosing correspondence from their constituents or from noble peers in the last three calendar years and the percentage replied to within MAFF's target of 15 days are set out in the table:

Year	Number	Percentage replied to within 15 days
1992	10,974	81
1993	11,141	67

Figures are not collected on the average time taken to respond to hon. Members' letters.

The letter of 7 December 1993 from the hon. Member sent on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Peter Symonds of Llandinabo, concerned a commercial appraisal carried out by ADAS. The correspondence was accordingly forwarded to ADAS for reply. However, neither the letter of 13 December nor the follow-up letters were received by ADAS and the Chief Executive was therefore unaware that the matter had been delegated until 29 June.

I understand that the chief executive of ADAS replied to the hon. Member's letter on 30 June.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Howard: The Animal Procedures Committee and the Parole Board.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament.

Mr. Howard: The Parole Board.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Howard: The Government are required to consult the following advisory non-departmental public bodies before legislation proposals:

Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs
Animal Procedures Committee
Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales
Poisons Board
Police Advisory Board
Police Negotiating Board

In addition, the Government's response to advice supplied by the following bodies must be published:

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the advisory bodies he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Howard: The National Board for Crime Prevention.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department that have a statutory basis.

Mr. Howard: The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, the Animal Procedures Committee, the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council, the Local Review Committees, the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England, the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales, the Parole Board, the Poisons Board, the Police Advisory Board, the Police Negotiating Board.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is as follows:
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales

Caravans

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of caravans intended for permanent occupation entering the United Kingdom; and what steps he is taking to stop their entry.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The importation of caravans is not a matter for my Department.

People travelling to the United Kingdom within the common travel area which comprises the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man and the Republic of Ireland do not pass through immigration controls. Nationals of countries in the European Economic Area may enter the United Kingdom from outside the common travel area in accordance with Community law and are subject to a passport and identity card check.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of Ernst and Young on the administration of firearms certification.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report by Ernst and Young on the administration of the firearms licensing system.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Copies of the Ernst and Young report on the cost of the administration of the firearms licensing system will be made available and a copy placed in the Library when an announcement is made about the current reviews of firearms fees.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement as to whether Mr. Joseph Cowlam had a firearms licence.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that Mr. Cowlam did not hold a firearm certificate.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to see that police forces adopt the recommendations of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary concerning the administration of firearms certification.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The administration of firearms licensing is a matter for individual chief officers of police. I understand, however, that the chairman of the Association of Chief Police Officers crime committee sub-group on the administration of firearms licensing has written to chief constables commending the recommendations of the report of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary to them. In addition, Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary will pay particular attention to this subject in its annual inspections of forces.

Cruelty to Livestock

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for cruelty to livestock were brought in each year since 1985; and how many in each case were brought by (a) the Government and (b) the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information held centrally by the Home Department does not identify the individual summoning body. The table shows the number of prosecutions under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 and Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 by type of proceedings from 1985 to 1992. The 1993 data will not be available until the autumn.

Note:—The statistics of court proceedings are based on returns made by the police to the Home Office and although these include offences where there has been no police involvement, such as those prosecutions instigated by government departments, private organisations and individuals, the reporting of these types of offence is known to be incomplete. Where proceedings involve more than one offence, the table records the principal offence.

Community Care

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were imprisoned in each year since 1990 for non-payment of the community charge in each district council area in Wales and for Wales as a whole.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not available. The available information on where prisoners originate is for the county of the sentencing court. The table shows the number of receptions recorded centrally for non-payment of community charge by county in Wales.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for compensation were made to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board by police officers in each year since 1988; what was the average compensation in each year expressed in constant 1994 prices; and what proportion of total claims in each year were made by police officers.

Mr. Maclean: I regret that the available records do not separately identify applications from, or payments made to, the police or other occupational groups.

Private Prisons

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the heads of agreement between the Home Secretary and Group 4 in respect of The Wolds prison;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the heads of agreement between the Home Secretary and Premier Prison Services Ltd. in respect of Doncaster prison;

(3) if he will place in the Library a copy of the heads of agreement between the Home Secretary and United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. in respect of Blakenhurst prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the placing in the Library of a copy of the Heads of Agreement between the Home Secretary and Group 4, Premier Prison Services Limited, and United Kingdom Detention Services for Wolds, Doncaster and Blakenhurst prisons respectively.

Copies of the Heads of Agreement for Wolds and Blakenhurst will be placed in the Library. No Heads of Agreement were signed in relation to Doncaster prison, because Premier Prison Services Limited did not require them.

Police (Standard Spending Assessments)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide tables showing (a) the standard spending assessment, (b) the figure his Department estimated as its contribution to spending at standard spending assessment level and (c) the actual figure paid out in respect of each police force in England and Wales for 1993-94 and for each of the previous three financial years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The following table lists the standard spending assessment for each police force in England between 1990-91 and 1993-94. For Wales, provision for the police is included in the overall assessment made for Welsh county councils. Details of the initial estimate of grant and actual grant paid by the Home Office to all forces in England and Wales during the same period are also shown. The outturn figures for 1993-94 are provisional.

Blakenhurst Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who received the interest on the performance security provided by United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. to his Department under the terms of the contract to manage Blakenhurst prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about who received the interest on the performance security provided by United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. to his Depatment under the terms of the contract to manage Blakenhurst prison.

Under the terms of the contract to manage Blakenhurst prison the contractor is required to provide the Prison Service with performance security. This was provided by means of a Peformance Bond, and therefore the issue of any interest payments does not arise.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been witheld from United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. for loss, destruction or damage to Blakenhurst prison, listing the circumstances and amount of each separate penalty.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the amount of money witheld from United Kingdom Detention Services Limited for loss, destruction or damage to Blakenhurst prison.

The only occasion on which money was witheld from UKDS is set out in my letter to you of 29 June (Hansard Col. 627).

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims have been made against the public liability insurance policy held by United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. and his Department in connection with Blakenhurst prison; what were the circumstances in each case; what were the amounts claimed; and how many claims have been successful.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of claims made against the public liability insurance policy held by United Kingdom Detention Services Limited and his department in connection with Blakenhurst prison; the circumstances; the amounts and the success of the claims.

There have been no claims made against the public liability insurance policy held by United Kingdom Detention Services Limited.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contact (a) the Health and Safety Executive, (b) the environmental health office and (c) the fire service has had with Blakenhurst prison; how many inspections of Blakenhurst prison have been made by each of these bodies; and what were the findings in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about what contact (a) The Health and Safety Executive, (b) the Environmental Health Office and (c) the Fire Service has had with Blakenhurst Prison.

Representatives of the Health and Safety Executive have visited on three occasions. On 19 February 1993 they made seven recommendations, all of which have been actioned. They visited again on the 14 October 1993 when a further seven recommendations were made, including a complaint about cleanliness. Again, all have been actioned. The last visit was on 10 March this year when they expressed general satisfaction in a verbal report.

The local Environmental Health Officer has visited on two occasions. The report of 19 November 1993 contained twenty recommendations. On 22 April this year the Environmental Health Officer assessed progress and found that nineteen of the original recommendations had been actioned satisfactorily. One recommendation is still outstanding.

Hereford and Worcester Fire Service have visited eleven times for exercises or familiarisation visits.

The Fire Service do not carry out full surveys or inspections. These are carried out by the Fire Safety Section of the Prison Service and they have visited on three occasions since Blakenhurst Prison opened.

A full fire survey was carried out in June 1993 and Fire Safety Section's recommendations are being actioned.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made by his Department to the services provided by United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. under the contract to manage Blakenhurst prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the changes made by his Department to the services provided by United Kingdom Detention Service Limited (UKDS) under the contract to manage Blakenhurst Prison.

The only occasion on which changes were made to the services provided by UKDS under the contract to manage Blakenhurst prison is set out in my letter to you of 29 June (Hansard Col. 627).

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been paid by his Department for loss, destruction or damage to Blakenhurst prison, listing the circumstances and amount of each separate payment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibilty for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the amount of money paid by his Department for loss, destruction or damage to Blakenhurst prison; the circumstances and the amount of each separate payment.

No money has been paid to United Kingdom Detention Services Limited for damage repair at Blakenhurst prison.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) staff and (b) people applying to become staff, at Blakenhurst prison, have been refused Home Office certification as fit to perform such duties; and, of these, how many have later reapplied and received such certification.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 30 June 1994]: Responsibilty for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of staff and people applying to become staff at Blakenhurst prison that have been refused Home Office certification; and how many have later reapplied and become certificated.

Twenty people who applied to work at Blakenhurst as prison custody officers (PCO) have been refused Home Office certification. Of these one has been reconsidered and subsequently received certification.

Non-PCO do not require certification. All people who work at contracted out prisons are, however, subject to routine enquiries similar to those made for applicants for Prison Service employment.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what notification or advice United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. gave the Home Office regarding the buildings, facilities and design at Blakenhurst prison; and what action has been taken as a result.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 30 June 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what notification or advice United Kingdom Detention Services Limited (UKDS) gave the Home Office regarding the buildings, facilities and design at Blakenhurst prison; and what action has been taken as a result.

UKDS had no involvement in the original buildings, facilities and design at Blakenhurst. Since Blakenhurt became operational, UKDS have recommended changes to the existing conditions at Blackenhurst on a number of occasions. These have included fitting electric gates on house blocks; creating canteens in four house blocks; modifying the sewage system; installing television cameras in the walkways; modifying the holding cells in reception; providing power outlets and drainage in the industrial workshop; altering one spur of a house block to create a Vulnerable Prisoner Unit; changing the majority of spy-holes to polycarbonate; and installing a new bolt system for cell doors.

All these requests, which have come through the Controller at the prison, have been actioned.

It is common for modifications to be required in new prisons, especially in the first year of operation. UKDS has paid for a number of the alterations and the remainder have been paid for by the Prison Service.

Race Relations

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to respond to the Commission for Racial Equality's second review of the Race Relations Act 1976.

Mr. Howard: I have today written to the chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality setting out the Government's formal response. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Computer Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many contracts his Department has entered into with the computer company EDS-Scion or its predecessor EDS; when the contracts were entered into; what is their total value; and what is the subject matter of each contract.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 1 July 1994]: The Home Office has let three contracts to the specified company amounting to a total value of £80,942·23.

Details of the contracts are given below:

Date Contract let and Subject matter of Contract

12 September 1991

Hardware Maintenance

10 July 1992
Software licences for London Fire and Civil Defence Authority
8 January 1993
Evaluation of Performance of Classifying Finger Printing Images for Police System Research and Development Group

United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions money has been withheld from United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. for giving an unsatisfactory performance or failing to provide the required service; what were the circumstances on each occasion including dates and the nature of the failure; and what were the amounts witheld on each occasion.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 30 June 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of occasions money has been withheld from UKDS for giving an unsatisfactory performance or failing to provide the required service; the circumstances and the amounts withheld.

The only occasion on which money was withheld from UKDS is set out in my letter to you of 29 June (Hansard Col. 627).

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioner Incomes

4. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the rise in pensioners' total average net income since 1979.

Mr. Hague: The estimated rise in pensioner's total average net income, in real terms, from 1979 to 1990-91 —the latest year for which figures are available—was:

Before housing costs:
42 per cent. in all pensioners
39 per cent. to pensioner couples; and 39 per cent. to single pensioners.
Source: The 1990-91 Family Expenditure Survey.

Child Support Agency

18. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operation of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency has had a challenging first year and this is recognised in the report "The Child Support Agency: The First Two Years" which was placed in the Library today. Despite many difficulties, the agency achieved considerable successes in its first year. Over 850,000 cases were taken on and over 200,000 maintenance assessments were made. Nearly 60 per cent. of cases involved absent parents who were not paying maintenance. In 28,000 cases the agency successfully located absent parents for whom the parents with care of the children did not have an address—a success rate of 85 per cent.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the first year of the Child Support Agency's operations and its plans and targets for the second year.

Mr. Lilley: The Child Support Agency has today published "The Child Support Agency: The First Two Years". This provides the annual report for the year 1993-94—"Our First Year", and the business plan for the year 1994-95—"The Year Ahead". The agency's national client satisfaction survey 1993 has also been published today. Copies of both those publications have been placed in the Library. The annual report contains details of the agency 1993-94 performance against the standards of service as set out in the agency's customer charter. In addition, all local caller areas will, as from today, display posters detailing this information. The posters will be updated quarterly.

The targets that I have set the Child Support Agency for 1994-95 are as follows:

50 per cent. of people with care of children making eligible applications to the Child Support Agency to have maintenance arranged.
a score of 65 per cent. on an index of client satisfaction with the Agency's service, as determined by an independent national survey.
annual benefit savings of £460 million. to manage the Agency's resources so as to deliver its Business Plan within a total budget of £184 million.
by the end of March 1995, no more than 40 per cent. of outstanding maintenance applications to be over 13 weeks old, no more than 15 per cent. over 26 weeks old, and no more than 1 per cent. over 52 weeks old.

The agency is making a number of operational and procedural changes this year which should significantly improve performance. The new targets, which are higher than the agency's achievements last year, take this expected improvement into account.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total cost of information technology investment in the child support scheme; and what were the amounts of funding by (a) the Child Support Agency, (b) the Information Technology Services Agency and (c) his Department.

Mr. Burt: Some £52·3 million up to March 1994. All funding of information technology investment is met out of the DSS administration vote.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage availability has been achieved by the Child Support Agency computer system; and what penalty has been levied against (a) EDS and (b) ITSA.

Mr. Burt: Over the last six months, 93·5 per cent. availability has been achieved by the Child Support Agency computer system. No penalties have been imposed.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) additional and (b) re-working payments have been made to the information technology contractors EDS in connection with the Child Support Agency computer system.

Mr. Burt: A development contract is in place with EDS, the terms of which permit EDS to charge for any additional changes requested. Since April 1993, such changes have resulted from policy requirements and amendments to working practices. The charge for additional development work during the period April 1993 to March 1994 was £1·1 million. Contractual arrangements with EDS provide for resolution of faults which are EDS's responsibility within the fixed price for the contract and at no additional charge.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cost of the hardware upgrades which the Child Support Agency computer system's IBM mainframe computer has had to have.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency computer system has had one hardware upgrade at a cost of £5·19 million.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what circumstances the Child Support Agency opens files for maintenance payments in respect of children who are both living with, and maintained by, both of their parents.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency has no role where children and their parents all live in the same household. Where the parents live apart and the children spend on average at least two nights a week with each, the agency may arrange for the parent who provides the lesser amount of care to pay maintenance to the other parent.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what expenditure has been incurred in implementing the programming application on the Child Support Agency computer system.

Mr. Burt: Some £13·5 million, including all expenditure for ITSA, EDS and CSA user design.

24. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received in the last month concerning the CSA.

Mr. Burt: In the month up to 31 May 2,204 written representations were received by the headquarters of the Department and the Child Support Agency from both hon. Members and members of the public covering a wide range of views.

Social Fund

19. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the social fund is currently spent on administration.

Mr. Scott: The cost of administering the social fund was equivalent to 35 per cent. of the gross expenditure, plus recoveries, in 1992-93, the last year for which figures are available. Each application to the discretionary part of the social fund receives a detailed personal assessment whether or not an award is made and recoveries cost money as well. However, the recycling of social fund loans ensures that more help goes to more people.

Adjudication Officers

20. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reform the regulations governing appeals against the decisions of adjudication officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: We intend in the near future to consolidate the adjudication regulations. The appeals system is under constant review, but we have no plans at present to reform the regulations any further.

Mallinson Judgment

21. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement outlining his response to the Mallinson judgment; and what action will be undertaken by his Department resulting from the judgment.

Mr. Scott: The judgment in the case of Mallinson v. the Secretary of State for Social Security has extended the scope of attendance allowance and the care component of disability living allowance by allowing a wider range of activities to be considered as "attention in connection with bodily functions". Independent adjudication officers are applying the terms of the judgment to the decisions that they make.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what date the Government will backdate any changed entitlements to disability living allowance care component and the lower rate of attendance allowance following the Mallinson judgment.

Mr. Scott: The earliest date from which the benefit, or additional benefit, could become payable is 21 April 1994.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many existing disability living allowance claimants will be entitled to (a) the middle rate of the disability living allowance care component and (b) the lower rate of attendance allowance as a result of the Mallinson judgment; and what plans his Department has to initiate a review of these cases.

Mr. Scott: Reliable information is not available as to the numbers of people who are currently in receipt of disability living allowance or attendance allowance and might gain as a result of the judgment in the House of Lords in the case of Mallinson v. Secretary of State for Social Security. The Department has no current plans to initiate a review of those cases as major administrative disruption could be created in reviewing so many cases and the number of successful awards in the light of the judgment do not indicate that such disruption could be justified.

Social Security Payments

22. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the level of basic social security payments relative to average income real terms in each member state of the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Member states have different priorities, structures and methods of funding social security. Those differences, variations in definitions and lack of comparable data make comparisons difficult. We are committed to a social security system which is appropriate to modern needs and protects the most vulnerable while not outstripping the nation's ability to pay.

Post Offices (Benefits Delivery)

23. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether pensioners will be able to choose to have their benefits paid through the Post Office.

Mr. Hague: Pensioners and others will continue to be able to choose to collect their pensions and other benefits at the post office. We are well aware of the valuable role played by post offices, particularly in rural areas.

1994 Benefits Uprating

25. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the difference between the 1994 uprating of benefits for pensioners and sick and disabled people and the rate of inflation.

Mr. Hague: In addition to increases in all major benefits fully in line with inflation, people on income-related benefits received increases based on the Rossi index, which was higher than the retail prices index. Most pensioners and many sick and disabled people will also have received extra help for the effect of VAT on fuel over and above the normal uprating.

Housing Benefit

26. Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reform the present system of housing benefit.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth).

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the total number and proportion of council tenants receiving housing benefit in (a) the London borough of Barking and Dagenham, (b) the London borough of Redbridge, (c) the Greater London area and (d) Great Britain.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The latest available information is in the table.

Area	Number of council tenancies	[1]Housing benefit rent rebate caseload	Percentage of council tenancies with housing benefit
London Borough of Barking and Dagenham	25,624	14,382	56
London Borough of Redbridge	8,340	6,744	81
Greater London	657,096	[2]423,173	64
Great Britain	[3]4,581,171	[2]2,994,184	65

[1] Refers to benefit units, which may be a single person or a couple.
[2] Includes estimates for non-responding authorities.
[3] The total for Great Britain contains estimates for individual English authorities, and estimates of the totals for Wales and Scotland.

Basic State Pension

27. Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the value of the basic state pension as a percentage of male average earnings in 1979 and at the latest available date for which figures are available.

Mr. Hague: The basic state pension represented 20·4 per cent. of average male adult earnings in November 1979 and 15·9 per cent. in April 1993.

Sources:
1. The Abstract of Statistics for Social Security Benefits and Contributions.
2. The Indices of Retail Prices and average earnings.

Pensioner Savings

28. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the percentage of pensioners retiring (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available, who had incomes from savings; and what was the real average level of savings on each of these two dates.

Mr. Hague: The percentage of recently retired pensioner units receiving income from savings has grown from 68 per cent. in 1979 to 78 per cent. in 1990-91. Information about the average level of savings is not available, but it is estimated that the average level of income from savings of recently retired pensioner units has risen from £20·40 in 1979 to £49·90 in 1990-91.

Notes:
1. Source: 1979 and 1990-91 Family Expenditure Surveys.
2. A pensioner unit is defined as a single person aged at or above state pensionable age (SPA) or a couple where the husband is aged at or above SPA.
3. A recently retired pensioner unit is one where a single person, or the husband of a couple, is aged up to five years above state pension age.
4. The savings income figures are at 1991 prices.

Pensioner Assets

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the current value of the assets held by the average pensioner household; and what was the comparable position in real terms in 1978-79.

Mr. Hague: In 1990-91, 48 per cent. of pensioners owned their own homes outright, compared to 37 per cent. in 1979; the average weekly income for pensioners from savings and investments was £30·30, compared to £11·20 in 1979; and the value of accrued rights in occupational pension schemes had substantially increased compared to 1979.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average weekly value of invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: The average amount of invalidity benefit in payment on 4 April 1992, the latest date for which information is available was £75·45.

Pensioner Incomes, Scotland

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in Scotland (a) are dependent on income support and (b) have incomes less than £10 above income support levels.

Mr. Burt: The number of pensioners dependant on income support in Scotland is 170,000.

Using income bought to account for income support purposes, it is estimated that 95,000 pensioners in Scotland have income within £10 of income support thresholds.

Source:
Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry August 1993.

Notes:
1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand for the first part of the answer and to the nearest five thousand for the second part.
2. Pensioners dependant on Income Support are defined as claimants and partners over pensionable age.
3. The second part of the answer has been modelled from the 1989, 1990 and 1991 Family Expenditure data uprated to 1994-95 prices and benefit levels.
4. Income Support thresholds include Income Support housing requirements such as mortgage interest.

Scottish Homes (Successors)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to allowing West Lothian district council and other successor housing authorities to Scottish Homes to operate benefit distribution on behalf of his Department.

Mr. Hague: Local authorities have a statutory duty to administer the housing benefit scheme, and we have no plans to alter this.

War Pensions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by local authority the consideration given to receipt of (a) war widows' pension and (b) war disability pension when assessing housing benefit and council tax payments.

Mr. Hague: Local authorities have the discretion to disregard up to the full amount of war widows' pensions and war disablement pensions when assessing entitlement to housing benefit and council tax benefit.

The information requested with regard to housing benefit has been compiled from the latest information from local authorities for the financial year 1990-91 and is listed in the table. No details are available for council tax benefit.

Local authorities operating a local scheme in housing benefit to disregard an amount of war disablement or war widow's pension in addition to the £10 statutory disregard.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Hague: The Department's policy is to use recycled paper where possible. The Department does not normally use recycled paper for press releases or written answers, because of cost and quality considerations. However, some replies to hon. Members from agency chief executives are on recycled paper, as are the great majority of letters signed by Ministers. We have also concentrated on ensuring that the paper we use is manufactured in the most environmentally friendly manner possible.

Pensions

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what account is taken of ability to pay in the time scale for recovery of money which has been overpaid in respect of pension provision;

(2) what is the normal interval between a change occurring in an individual's benefit arrangements and the notification by the DSS to the superannuation fund providing a pension to that individual of that change;

(3) how many individuals in the calendar years 1991, 1992 and 1993 were paid more than their overall pension entitlement as a result of the failure of the DSS to notify the superannuation funds providing them with a pension of the change in benefit payments made by the DSS.

Mr. Hague: The administration of state pensions is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 1 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking (i) how many individuals in the calendar years 1991, 1992, and 1993 were paid more than their overall pension entitlement as a result of the failure of the DSS to notify the superannuation funds providing them with a pension of a change in benefit payments made by the DSS and (ii) what is the normal interval between a change occurring in an individuals benefit arrangements and the notification by the DSS to the Superannuation Fund providing a pension to that individual of that change and (iii) the repayment of money overpaid in respect of pension provision.

The arrangements which exist for the DSS to send notifications apply only to public service occupational pension schemes. The notifications are sent to tell the schemes that they do not need to inflation-proof the guaranteed minimum portion of the occupational pension because the DSS is doing so.

When a change occurs in the rate of Widow's Benefit or State Retirement Pension payable to a public service occupational pensioner, any notification which needs to be sent to the pension scheme will be issued within one week of the change in rate having been entered onto the pensions computer.

The system is designed to send the notifications automatically. We do not, therefore, have details of the number of notifications which should have been sent but were not. We are aware, however, that there have been instances of delay and recent exercises have been undertaken to identify these cases and ensure that the appropriate notifications are sent.

Although late notification from DSS can cause an overpayment this would be of occupational pension and as such it would be for the scheme to decide if recovery should be effected and if so, how. This is not a matter over which the Department has any control.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Sir John Wheeler: None.

Agriculture

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is (a) the amount of land in hectares in each county, (b) the number of farmers and (c) the cost of the five-year set-aside scheme in Northern Ireland in (i) 1993-94 and (ii) 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: In Northern Ireland, the amount of land in each county included in the five-year set-aside scheme and the number of participating farmers in each county are as follows:—

	Hectares	Farmers
Co Antrim	49·904	7
Co Armagh	24·675	3
Co Down	155·419	13
Co Fermanagh	nil	—
Co Londonderry	138·906	11
Co Tyrone	nil	—

The cost of the set-aside scheme in Northern Ireland in 1993-94 was £62,865, while the anticipated cost for 1994-95 is £33,364.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the payment rates made per hectare under the arable area payments scheme for (a) cereals, (b) oilseeds, (c) proteins, (d) linseed, (e) set-aside and (f) the simplified scheme paid in (i) the first year and (ii) the second year of the scheme in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The payment rates per hectare in Northern Ireland for the first and second years of the scheme are set out below. The actual rates payable in 1994 may be reduced if base areas are exceeded and the rate for oilseeds may be adjusted to reflect changes in the reference price.

(a) Cereals	112	[156]
(b) Oilseeds	379	[421]
(c) Proteins	290	[290]
(d) Linseed[1]	—	—
(e) Set-aside	201	[247]
Set-aside (reduced rate)[2]	—	[174]
(f) Simplified Scheme	112	[156]

Notes:

[1] Linseed was not incorporated into the arable area payments scheme until 1993-94. The payment rate for 1993-94 has not yet been fixed.

[2] There is a reduced rate for voluntary set-aside in excess of the applicant's cropped area.

[3] The figures in brackets are provisional.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Services

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the guidelines for motorway services; and what facilities he will require for (a) women and (b) men truck drivers.

Mr. Key: Since 1 April, responsibility for managing, maintaining and improving the national road network in England, including the provision of motorway service areas, has rested with the Highways Agency. As the information requested by the hon. Member relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 30 June 1994:

Mr. Key has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about motorway service areas since this is now a matter for the Highways Agency.

Roads Circular 1/94, which set out the Department's policy on motorway service areas (MSAs) and specified the minimum requirements for MSAs signposted from the motorway, was published on 9 May. I enclose a copy. The minimum requirements include a specified number of lorry parking spaces, calculated on the basis of the motorway traffic flow.

Lorry drivers will also benefit from some of the other minimum requirements, such as the availability of 24 hours a day of toilets and fuel, and free access to MSAs for those carrying out emergency repairs to broken down vehicles. Whether to go beyond this and provide other facilities aimed specifically at either male or female lorry drivers is, however, a matter for individual MSA operators.

Dear Sir

Motorway service areas

1. Circular Roads 4/88 gives advice on the control of development on trunk roads. This Circular supplements that advice so far as the development of motorway service areas is concerned. Further advice on the considerations which local planning authorities should take into account when considering planning applications for service areas on motorways and trunk roads is given in Planning Policy Guidance Note 13 "Transport" (PPG13).

2. Government policy until 1992 was to promote the development of MSAs providing a standard range of minimum requirements on Department of Transport-owned sites at intervals of around thirty miles while operators in Wales have provided single sided sites on private land at intervals of around fifteen miles. A network of MSAs has been provided on this basis on most motorways though, in England, there are still routes with exceptional gaps in services.

3. In August 1992 the Government announced that in future the private sector should take the initiative in identifying and acquiring MSA sites and seeking planning consent from local planning authorities for these schemes as for any other development.

4. However, the Departments will continue to have interests in MSAs in relation to motorway safety and traffic management. They will wish to see a balance struck between, on the one hand, the necessary provision of opportunities for motorway travellers to stop and obtain essential services at reasonable intervals; and on the other, the avoidance of unnecessary traffic movements on and off the motorway. This guidance is issued so that potential developers and local planning authorities may have regard to the Departments' policy accordingly.

Spacing

5. The Departments will generally not expect to provide signs or (in respect of sites not accessed from an existing motorway junction) to allow access to the motorway for any services development less than fifteen miles from the nearest existing MSA (or MSA site with planning consent and for which signing has been agreed). Exceptions to this minimum interval may be agreed, for example, where existing sites are a little less than thirty miles apart and additional services are proposed roughly half way between them. Where a new MSA is proposed less than fifteen miles from an existing MSA (or MSA site for which signing has been agreed), the Departments will consider the case for signing, but the shorter the gap the stronger the case for an exception to the normal fifteen mile interval will need to be. The Departments will not, in any event, expect to sign more than one additional site between any two existing "thirty mile" MSAs.

6. This minimum spacing between sites should not be taken to mean that the Departments see a need for MSAs every fifteen miles regardless of local circumstances. Their only prescriptive view is that, for safety and traffic management reasons, drivers should not have to travel for long distances without finding services on the motorway (whether accessed directly or via a junction). Intervals between existing services have not been much more than thirty miles. That remains a desirable general aim from the transport point of view. It cannot be a hard and fast rule, particularly in areas of planning restraint. Local planning authorities should take into account the need for and road safety benefits of MSAs; and the greater the distance between existing facilities and a new proposal, the more weight should be placed on the needs of motorway users.

Parking

7. MSAs contribute to road safety by allowing drivers regular opportunities to rest in the course of their journeys. These safety benefits will be lost unless measures are taken to ensure that all sites have sufficient parking capacity to cater for the demands placed on them by motorists needing only to stop and rest as well as those making use of other MSA facilities. In order to qualify for signing from the motorway, therefore, an MSA developer will be expected to demonstrate that he can provide parking for:—

cars:	0·5 per cent.	of the light vehicle annual average daily traffic flow fifteen years after opening;
HGVs:	0·35 per cent.	of the heavy vehicle annual average daily traffic flow fifteen years after opening;
coaches:	0·1 per cent.	of the heavy vehicle annual average daily traffic flow fifteen years after opening;

8. Advice on predicted traffic flows is available from Regional Network Management Divisions of the Highways Agency of the Highways Directorate of the Welsh Office.

9. Developers need not necessarily provide the full fifteen year parking levels as soon as the site opens, but will be expected to build up to the final provision in suitable stages over the fifteen year period.

Other requirements

10. In addition to the parking quantities specified above, the Department will require MSA operators to provide from the outset at least a standard range of minimum facilities. MSAs which do not meet the minimum requirements will not be signed nor, in the case of sites not reached by way of an existing junction, will they be allowed to take access from the motorway. The minimum requirements are that MSA operators should ensure that:—

- free short term parking for all types of vehicle, free toilets (in sufficient quantity to cater reasonably for the traffic flow on the motorway) and a picnic area are available, and fuel is on sale, 24 hours a day every day of the year;
- access is allowed for up to two hours for those carrying out emergency repairs to broken down vehicles;
- all facilities are available to disabled people; and
- there is no sale or consumption of alcohol on the site.

11. Enforcement of these minimum standards will be achieved through a formal signs agreement between the relevant Department and the MSA operator under which signs from the motorway to the MSA will be permitted and maintained so long as the operator continues to meet the minimum requirements in full. Before entering into signs agreements the Departments will need to be satisfied that planning permission has been obtained, that the proposed MSA is capable of meeting all the minimum requirements and that it is acceptable in traffic, safety and spacing terms.

12. While it will in future be for the private sector to initiate MSA proposals, the Department will maintain their strict policy of restricting access to the motorway to junctions with other roads, MSAs and maintenance compounds. They will not therefore agree to the provision of accesses to the motorway from private developments other than MSAs which meet the standard range of minimum requirements; nor will they permit the development of activities within MSA sites which are unconnected with motorists' use of the road and which would therefore lead to the site becoming a destination in its own right. The Departments will be prepared where necessary to direct refusal of planning applications which would conflict with this principle. To ensure that this policy is maintained it is important that the Departmentss are kept informed of proposals affecting existing and proposed MSAs. Local planning authorities are therefore requested to consult the relevant Regional Network Management Divisions of the Highways Agency, or the Highways Directorate of the Welsh Office, wherever development is proposed of services facilities wholly or partly within 400 metres of the boundary of a motorway. They should consult similarly wherever development is proposed for an area exceeding 2 hectares which includes the provision of fuel and refreshments and lies within 1 kilometre of a motorway junction.

13. The Departments will also be concerned to ensure that MSAs do not come to be used as routes from the motorway through to other nearby developments; that is, as all purpose motorway junctions. At sites accessed direct from the motorway, therefore, the Departments will be reluctant to agree to the provision of rear access roads connecting to the local road network. Where such accesses may be agreed, the Departments will expect to require developers to enter into arrangements to ensure their use is restricted to staff, deliveries and the emergency services. Other onward access will not be countenanced.

14. In considering issues affecting the motorway itself, traffic flow and safety considerations are of great importance and good visibility is essential. Any access provided direct to a motorway would need to conform fully to the Departments' standards. At all MSAs, it will be particularly important to avoid the risk of congestion or slowing on the main carriageway. Advice on these aspects should be sought from the relevant Regional Network Management Division of the Highways Agency, or the Highways Directorate of the Welsh Office.

15. The full cost of any access provided direct to a motorway, or direct to a trunk road at or near a motorway junction, including those elements of the works within the motorway or trunk road boundary, will fall to be met by the developer by means of an agreement with the Secretary of State under Section 278 of the Highways Act 1980. Advice on this is provided in Circular Roads 6/91 and Welsh Office Circular 65/91.

Election Campaigns

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the Government's policy on publishing statistics relating to budgetary restraint within the period of an election campaign; and if he will make a statement on the conventions involved.

Mr. MacGregor: Guidance to officials stresses the need to ensure that statistics are presented in an objective and impartial manner and that care is taken on the timing and announcement of sensitive decisions. The convention is that Ministers, too, seek to defer announcing sensitive decisions during an election period.

Railtrack

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of his officials attended a meeting with members of the Railtrack board on 9 June; who else was present; and what was discussed.

Mr. Freeman: Meetings between the Department and the Government companies and nationalised industries for which it is responsible are frequent, and mostly informal; the substance of any discussions are confidential to the participants. It is not our practice to identify individual officials present at such meetings.

Road-building Contracts

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the 20 contractors who have received the largest share of motorway and trunk road contracts in the financial year April 1991 to April 1992, giving for each contractor the value of the contracts received.

Mr. Key: Since 1 April, responsibility for managing maintaining and improving the national road network in England has rested with the Highways Agency. As the information requested by the hon. Member relates to these responsibilities, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 30 June 1994

You put down a Parliamentary Question for answer by the Secretary of State for Transport asking him to list the 20 contractors who received the largest share of motorway and trunk road contracts in the financial year April 1991 to April 1992, giving for each contractor the value of the contracts received.

As the information you asked for concerns operational matters for which the Highways Agency is now responsible, as promised by the Minister, Robert Key, I am replying to your Question.

The information requested (but excluding contracts below £1m in value for which records are not currently held centrally) is set out in the attached tables.

Traffic Flow Study

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a study of the traffic flow consequences in the United States of allowing car drivers to proceed through red lights in order to turn right at specified junctions provided there is no car approaching the green light at that junction and the junction is not displaying a no right turn red sign; and if he will consider a further study of the traffic flow implications in the United Kingdom of allowing drivers in the United Kingdom to cross a red light to turn left in the equivalent circumstances.

Mr. Key: Differences in operating conditions between junctions in the United States and United Kingdom—particularly the use of vehicle-actuated signals in the United Kingdom—mean that, at best, only small improvements could be gained in junction efficiency by allowing drivers to turn left against a red light, and only at the risk of an increase in the number of accidents. We shall continue to monitor United States experience as it is reported.

Motorway Use

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made as to trends in lane discipline on motorways.

Mr. Key: Poor lane discipline on motoways is a long-standing problem. Last autumn I discussed it with representatives of the police, the motoring organisations, commercial interests and others. It was agreed that our policy on lane discipline should remain broadly the same.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports;

(2) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government;

(3) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them;

(4) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament; and if he will list them;

(5) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory basis; and if he will list them;

(6) if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport has two active advisory non-departmental public bodies, the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee and the Street Works Advisory Committee. Both committees are required to make annual reports to the Secretary of State. Neither is required to lay them before Parliament. There is no requirement for the Government to consult them on legislation proposals and they are not required to publish their advice. The DPTAC has a statutory basis under the Transport Act 1985. The SWAC is a non-statutory body.

Cycle Routes

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce more cycle routes in (a) London and (b) the royal parks.

Mr. Norris: Responsibility for the provision of cycle routes in London rests primarily with the 33 London local authorities. The Government are supporting provision of the 1,000 mile cycle network in London which is being developed by the London Cycling Forum. Approximately a third of the network is in existence or in preparation. We are also supporting Sustrans' promotion of a "Thames cycle route" between Hampton Court and Dartford.

The royal parks are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Fatalities)

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatalities resulted from persons being struck by reversing heavy goods vehicles in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Key: The information is shown in the table.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (ii) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Norris: None. My Department will examine the scope to use recycled paper.

EDUCATION

Private Health Insurance Schemes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines he has issued in respect of the use of education funds for payment of contributions to private health insurance schemes for staff members and their families by colleges of further and higher education.

Mr. Boswell: It is for individual colleges to decide what they will pay their staff, within the resources available to them and within the framework of the Government's policy on public sector pay.

Access Funds

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects the results of the monitoring requirement contained in the Higher Education Funding Council for England circular "Access Funds: Terms and Conditions for Payment" and notes of guidance for the academic year 1993-94 to be published.

Mr. Boswell: There are no plans to publish the results of the monitoring returns from higher education institutions on their use of discretionary access funds in 1993-94. In issuing revised guidance on access funds annually, my Department takes into account the report it receives each year from the funding council on the results of its monitoring exercise.

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education why the publication of the Higher Education Funding Council for England circular "Access Funds: Terms and Conditions for Payment" and notes of guidance for the academic year 1993-94 was delayed until April.

Mr. Boswell: In sending guidance on access funds to the Higher Education Funding Council for England in November 1993, we advised that an amendment was likely to be required following the European Economic Area agreement. The funding council decided to delay issue of its circular until details of the amendment were received, at the end of January 1994, so as to incorporate them. The council then issued its circular as soon as the high priority work on the 1994-95 funding allocations allowed. It is its intention that allocations and conditions circulars for 1994-95 will be issued at the beginning of the new academic year.

New Schools

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will state the names and location of recently completed secondary schools, without sixth form provision, of eight or more form entries per year, distinguishing between (a) county schools, (b) voluntary-aided schools, (c) grant-maintained schools and (d) city technology colleges together with their costs, exclusive of site.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on capital projects since 1987 indicates that the only secondary school, without sixth form provision, of eight or more forms of entry to have recently been completed is Tanbridge school —a county comprehensive—in Horsham, West Sussex. The cost of the school, exclusive of site, was £12·1 million.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what account he takes of the likely proportion of statemented children attending newly built schools to which his cost and other regulations apply.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend judges each case for a new school on its merits. Before approving new accommodation, the Secretary of State takes into account the extent to which the accommodation is consistent with his building guidelines and whether, in the case of accommodation for pupils with special educational needs, it is appropriate for those needs. The need for special accommodation for pupils with statements of special educational needs may form part of that consideration.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Forth: The most recent staff attitude survey carried out in my Department took place in 1991. A copy of the findings was placed in the Department's library. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Efficiency Grants

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance he has given to the Higher Education Funding Council for England to protect research resources in the allocation of planned efficiency grants.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 24 June at column 339.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his latest estimate of the cost (a) to public funds and (b) to private funds of the city technology colleges.

Mr. Robin Squire: Total spending on city technology colleges by the Department since 1987-88 and projected expenditure to 1994-95 are shown in the following table. This includes both capital and recurrent expenditure, the latter is broadly equivalent to that incurred in other secondary schools.

Financial Year	DFE expenditure Cash (£m)
1987-88	1
1988-89	14
1989-90	30
1990-91	58

[1]1993-94	50
[2]1994-95	52

[2]plans.

Private sector contributions received by city technology colleges amount to £36·8 million.

Voluntary-aided Schools

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what arrangements are in place to enable a school to which he grants voluntary-aided status to repay private loans made to enable urgent capital works to be undertaken before his decision on the school's voluntary-aided status application was announced;

(2) what discretion he has to make loans to voluntary aided schools in respect of initial capital expenditure; what discretion he has to make loans to schools applying for voluntary aided status where applications are regarded by his Department as viable and deserving approval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no power to provide a loan to promoters of proposed new voluntary aided schools to assist with costs incurred on capital work carried out before the decision on the statutory proposals has been made.

If proposals to establish a new voluntary aided school are approved, the promoters may apply for a loan under section 105 of the Education Act 1994 to assist them with their share of capital costs to provide the site or buildings for the new school. The site and buildings project plans and costs, which would be scrutinised by the Department's architects, would require the prior approval of the Secretary of State. A loan may be granted subject to availability of funds, the approval of building plans and the acceptance of a statisfactory loan agreement.

Teacher Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide figures on admissions to courses of initial teacher education starting in autumn 1994, broken down by gender for primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on these courses will not be available to the Department until next year.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the admission targets for initial teacher education for 1994, 1995 and 1996, for school based and non-school based training; and what difficulties are expected in meeting the targets.

Mr. Robin Squire: The following recruitment targets for higher education institutions were notified to the Higher Education Funding Council for England—HEFCE—in January 1993.

Primary	12,930	12,115	10,855
Secondary	16,050	17,000	17,935
TOTAL	28,980	29,115	28,790

In addition, some 460 places are expected to be provided on approved courses of school-centred ITT—SCITT—in 1994-95. The targets are based on the best available information about the needs of the system and are reviewed annually.

Targets for 1995-96 and later years will be reviewed and notified to the Teacher Training Agency—TTA—in the autumn, subject to the passage of the Education Bill. It will be for the TTA to determine the allocation of places, both on SCITT courses and those in higher education institutions.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Forth: The Department's policy is to use recycled paper wherever possible. It is used for all headed paper, enveloped, file covers and forms. For printing purposes recycled paper is best suited to conventional printing processes and not to high speed electronic machines. The Department's press releases and written answers are printed using high speed electronic machines using environmentally friendly—chlorine free—paper.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list pupil to teacher ratios, average class sizes and the percentage of classes with more than 30 pupils for each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to tables 3 and 7 in "Statistical Bulletin 8/94" published in June 1994, a copy of which is in the Library.

Class Sizes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what evidence his Department has on the relationship between class size and pupil attainment.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has no evidence of a link between class size and pupil attainment in the United Kingdom. The Government agree with the authors of "Curriculum Organisation and Classroom Practice in Primary Schools that quality of teaching is of paramount importance.

Teacher Statistics

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the gender profile, average length of service and average age of the teaching profession.

Mr. Robin Squire: The tables show the distribution by gender, the average age and the distribution by length of service of full-time teachers in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools sector in March 1992. It is not possible to calculate accurately the average length of service.

Parents Charter

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he intends to take to correct mistakes in the parents charter relating to parents' legal duty to provide education for their children; what additional cost will be incurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The updated parents charter is a brief introduction to the operation of the school system, and explains many of the important changes that have taken place. It is a popular summary for parents and the general public as a whole, not a definitive guide to the law. My right hon. Friend sees no need to issue a correction in respect of parent's duty to provide education for their children.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about teachers' pay in 1994-95.

Mr. Patten: I have today laid before Parliament a pay and conditions order bringing the provisions of the school teachers' pay and conditions document 1994 into force from 1 September 1994. Copies of this order are being sent to local education authorities, the chairmen of governors of grant-maintained schools and the teachers' and employers' associations.

The school teachers' pay and conditions document 1994 was published on 6 June following detailed consultation with the teachers' and employers' associations and representatives of the governors of voluntary schools and grant-maintained schools. The document sets out the statutory pay and conditions of service for teachers in maintained schools in England and Wales which will apply from 1 September.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Debt Forgiveness

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which financial year Her Majesty's Government began including debt forgiveness in relation to officially supported export credits in the United Kingdom's total official development assistance figures.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1988-89. The country involved was Mali.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the World Health Organisation about the adequacy of its services in sub-saharan Africa; and what undertakings he has received about improvements.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World Health Organisation's activities in Africa, in common with its activities elsewhere, are examined each year by the WHO executive board, of which the United Kingdom is a member.

At World Health Assembly and WHO executive board meetings, we have supported WHO's efforts to improve the health conditions of the people in sub-Saharan Africa. At the May 1994 assembly, we supported resolutions requesting WHO to give special assistance to the peoples of Rwanda, and to continue its assistance to the peoples of Lesotho, Namibia and Swaziland and to those countries in sub-Saharan Africa affected by drought.

In reacting to a United Kingdom-chaired working group on WHO's response to global change, the organisation has undertaken to review the role of its country representatives —a matter of particular relevance to sub-Saharan Africa.

Aid Contributions

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of gross national product in rank order was contributed in aid by each member of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's development assistance committee in 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is as follows:

Net Official Development Assistance as a percentage of Gross National Product—1979

DAC countries in rank order	Percentage
Sweden	0·94
Netherlands	0·93
Norway	0·93
Denmark	0·75

Sudan

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part of the further tranche of the £15 million provided for relief aid to the Horn of Africa will be spent in those areas under the jurisdiction of the Sudanese Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks) on 29 April, Official Report, column 368. The funds are available to meet emergency humanitarian needs in rebel and Government-held areas.

Statistics

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 322, what was the source or sources of the information that (a) Britain's overseas aid expenditure in 1992 on basic needs was 10 per cent. of bilateral aid and (b) the United Kingdom is better than the average of all donors in that area; and if he will place the relevant statistics in the Library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: (a) The 10 per cent. figure is an estimate based on 1992-93 figures and is calculated as follows:

	Expenditure £ million
Water and Sanitation[1]	25·8
Health and Population[1]	48·9
Block Grants to Non-Governmental Organisations[1]	12·8

	Expenditure £ million
Grant to International Planned Parenthood Federation[1]	8·0
Basic Education[2]	15·8
Total	111·3

[1] Source: British Aid Statistics 1988-89 to 1992-93, a copy of which is available in the Library.
[2] Estimated 15 per cent. of total education spending.

This represents 10·7 per cent. of ODA's bilaterial aid to developing countries. A more useful measure is aid for basic needs as a percentage of aid which is allocable by sector, estimated to be 16 per cent. in 1992-93. Neither estimate includes £150 million of bilateral emergency aid, most of which goes to meet basic human needs in times of crisis. In addition, much of the 46 per cent. of United Kingdom aid which is channelled through multilateral agencies is for basic needs.

(b) The average percentage of bilateral aid for human priorities among 15 development assitance committee countries was 7 per cent. between 1989 and 1991.

Statistics on aid for human priorities can be found in table 4.4 of the "Human Development Report 1994", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 253, what was the source or sources of the information given (a) that Britain has one of the best records among the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's development assistance committee donors of allocating aid to the poorest countries and (b) that in each of the past five years between 80 per cent. and 85 per cent. of Britain's bilateral aid which is allocatable by income group has been spent in low-income countries defined as those with an income per capita of less than $765; and if he will place the relevant statistics in the Library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: (a) The source of this information is table 37 of the development co-operation 1993 report published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. This shows that the United Kingdom ranks fourth among DAC donors in the percentage of total aid to low income countries.

(b) This information is taken from Table A2 of "British Aid Statistics 1988-89 to 1992-93", published by the ODA.

Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Service League Tables

36. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans the Government have to provide more league tables to assess the standards of public service.

Mr. David Davis: Publication of comparative information on the performance of schools and colleges is already well established. The first national tables on the performance of hospitals and ambulance authorities have just been published.

Later this year, the revised passengers charter will be published containing comparative information on the performance of railway routes. This will supplement the information on local performance already displayed monthly at each station.

Next year, the first national tables on the performance of local authorities, including the police, will be published.

Japan (Co-operation)

38. Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to increase co-operation with Japan in science and technology.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am happy to say that I visited Tokyo on 13 June where I signed a formal science and technology agreement with the Japanese Foreign Minister. This marks a further step in our excellent science and technology co-operation with Japan.

Charter Mark Winners

39. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what charter mark winners are doing to help advance charter principles in the public sector.

Mr. David Davis: Charter mark winners are a constant example to others in the public sector of the successful application of the citizens charter principles. The eight winners in Kent have been particularly helpful in acting as an inspiration to other organisations to implement the charter principles and improve services.

On a national basis, I am pleased to be able to say that 520 applications have been received for this year's charter mark scheme.

Government Expenditure

40. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made through his Department's initiatives in obtaining best value for money in central Government expenditure.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department co-ordinates a wide range of initiatives to improve value for money across Government, including the citizens charter, next steps, and competing for quality programmes. They have played their part in achieving a reduction in civil service numbers of nearly 30,000 since 1990, with savings of £150 million now estimated from the competing for quality initiative alone.

Citizens Charter

41. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what he estimates to be the total cost of the citizens charter initiative.

Mr. David Davis: The citizens charter initiative applies to all public services, and this is reflected in their individual expenditure programmes. Centrally, the cost of the charter unit between the inception of the citizens charter and 31 March 1994 was £8,005,980.

Duchy Benevolent Fund

42. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total of charity donations made within the County Palatine from the Duchy Benevolent Fund during the last financial year.

Mr. Waldegrave: For the Duchy year ending 29 September 1993, donations from the Duchy Benevolent Fund made within the County Palatine totalled £127,444.

Market Testing

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest assessment of the progress that has been made in the Government's market testing exercise; and what are his plans for the future.

Mr. Waldegrave: On the basis of the provisional information which is currently available, I am able to estimate that approximately £1·3 billion of activities have been market tested or otherwise examined. Annual savings from the competing for quality programme will be at least £150 million. I expect to report in more detail in the autumn.

Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance was sought from his Department, and what advice was given, in regard to the request made by the Financial Times for details of decisions taken by qualified majority vote at ministerial meetings of the Foreign Affairs, Internal Market, Social Affairs and Agriculture Councils since 1989, under the EU code of conduct on public access to information.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government have argued in the Council that the response to the Financial Times should be as helpful as possible. This position took account of advice provided by the Cabinet Office.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department does not at present use recycled paper for press releases or written answers. However, in accordance with Government policy to use recycled and environmentally friendly paper wherever this is available, of adequate quality and where it represents value for money, all copy paper used by the Department is environmentally friendly. That includes paper used for the issue of press releases and for written answers.

Electronic Data

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will outline work which is currently within his Department to ensure that all Government Departments and their agencies maximise the use of electronic data interchange.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department recognises the significant benefits afforded by electronic data interchange, especially where those can improve the efficiency and quality of public services. The OPSS has been actively promoting the use of electronic data interchange through the activities of CCTA, the Government Centre for Information Systems. That work encourages Departments to use EDI as a strategic business tool.

The CCTA has recently published a best practice guide called "EDI in Government: the Business Opportunities" which draws on the experience collected from the Government interest section run jointly with EDI Association. I hope my hon. Friend will endorse its contents.

Ministerial colleagues and I are actively considering further ways to exploit the use of EDI in order to maximise the benefits to public service.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the implications of the open government initiative in relation to the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie.

Mr. Waldegrave: The open government initiative does not override or disturb the existing arrangements for disclosure in legal proceedings.

DEFENCE

Aviation Medicine

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the RAF Institute of Aviation Medicine;

(2) what are his plans for the future of the speciality of aviation medicine;

(3) if the RAF Institute of Aviation Medicine will continue with its present range of activities with particular reference to the full extent of its research work.

Mr. Aitken: In March this year, I endorsed a decision to bring together under the management of the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency all elements in the Ministry of Defence dealing with human factors research, including the RAF Institute of Aviation Medicine.

The RAF speciality of aviation medicine will continue under the control of the Director General of Medical Services (RAF).

The DRA has formed these elements into a new centre for human sciences which will seek to preserve the already well-established reputation and skill of establishments including the Institute of Aviation Medicine and build on these to offer a comprehensive and expert service to customers both inside and outside my Department.

These activities remain vote funded by my Department and staff conditions of service remain unchanged. It is planned, however, that by 1 April 1996 at the latest, all human factors research will be formally absorbed into the DRA's trading fund and under this regime it is for customers ultimately to decide what research they are prepared to pay for, although a strong demand and continued support of current activities is anticipated. No decisions have yet been taken about the final location of such work, although staff will be fully consulted before any changes are made.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States Department of Energy informed his Department in advance of its intention to release information on 27 June that it had used reactor-grade plutonium imported from the United Kingdom in a test nuclear explosion conducted in 1962 at the Nevada test site.

Mr. Aitken: My Department was consulted about the announcement by the United States Energy Secretary on 27 June that the United States had conducted in 1962 a nuclear test explosion using reactor-grade plutonium of British origin. We agreed to this information being released.

Our general policy is not to release information on the use of nuclear material for weapons purposes nor to comment on the details of any tests that may have been carried out. The 1962 test confirmed the technical feasibility of constructing a nuclear explosive device using reactor-grade plutonium. This fact was declassified by the United States in 1977. There are, though, significant technical difficulties which would complicate the manufacture and storage of any weapon based on reactor-grade plutonium.

It remains our policy that all grades of plutonium should be rigorously protected, and in accordance with our international non-proliferation obligations, stringent controls are applied to all forms of plutonium.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from the United States Government regarding the use to which plutonium exported to the United States under the United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement on atomic energy matters dated 1958, as amended in 1959, has been put since 1964 according to information provided by the United States Government.

Mr. Aitken: The assurance given in 1964 by the United States Government to the United Kingdom Government, that plutonium produced in United Kingdom civil reactors and supplied to the United States under the 1958 agreement would not be used for weapons purposes, remains valid. No such restrictions apply to plutonium originating from the United Kingdom military reactors at Calder Hall and Chapelcross. The use to which this plutonium has been put is a matter for the United States Government.

Departmental Accommodation

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vacant dwellings are owned by his Department in each parliamentary constituency in Devon and Cornwall.

Mr. Hanley: As at 31 March 1994, my Department owned the following vacant dwellings in each parliamentary constituency in Devon and Cornwall:

	Service married quarters	MOD civilian houses	Former married quarters in the process of sale	Total
North Devon	27	0	0	27
Exeter	7	0	0	7
Honiton	14	0	3	17
Plymouth Devonport	182	5	17	204
Plymouth Drake	52	0	0	52
Plymouth Sutton	54	0	0	54
Torridge and West Devon	11	0	0	11
North Cornwall	173	0	0	173
St. Ives	83	0	0	83
South East Cornwall	6	0	0	6

A large number of the vacant married quarters were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation or were already allotted to service families due to move in shortly.

Royal Marines

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to move the Royal Marines from Seaton barracks in Plymouth to Chivenor in north Devon; and when he expects to make an announcement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department is currently considering alternative defence uses of the Chivenor estate, including possible use by units of the Royal Marines. We hope to make an announcement soon.

Boarding School Allowance Scheme

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reduce funding for the boarding school allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are no current plans to change the rules concerning eligibility for my Department's boarding school allowance scheme. The rates at which the allowance is paid are reviewed annually. The hon. Member will be aware that service career and manpower structures and terms and conditions of service are the subject of an independent review which I announced on 30 March, Official Report, column 752.

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer of 21 June, Official Report, columns 111-12, how many of the 850 job losses announced recently by the management of Devonport dockyard his Department estimates were due to efficiency measures.

Mr. Aitken: Employment levels at Devonport dockyard are primarily a matter for Devonport Management Ltd.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Hanley: It is departmental policy for recycled paper to be used wherever it can be obtained at reasonable cost and is adequate to the task. Press releases and written answers are almost invariably printed on recycled paper.

Procurement Contracts

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the annual value of defence procurement contracts placed into small and medium-sized enterprises since 1979 expressed in constant 1994 prices;

(2) what percentage of defence procurement contracts were placed by his Department with small and medium sized enterprises in each year since 1979.

Mr. Aitken: I regret that the information could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department intends to take to increase the number of defence procurement contracts placed into small and medium-sized enterprises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Our aim in placing contracts is to secure best value for money for the defence budget. My Department's defence suppliers service has a specific remit to advise smaller firms on how to sell their products and services to the MOD.

Haymes Garth

Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further information he has on the total cost of rebuilding and refurbishing Haymes Garth near Cheltenham, the official residence of the Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief, RAF Personnel and Training Command, Innsworth.

Mr. Hanley: A detailed internal investigation of the recent refurbishment of Haymes Garth has been carried out. This has shown that the total cost of the restructuring and refurbishment programme is likely to be some £387,000 during the two financial years 1992-93 and 1993-94, not £260,000 as indicated in my previous answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 732. The exact figure will be dependent on the final settlement of some minor bills still outstanding. In addition, in 1993-94, some £9,000 was spent on routine maintenance. I very much regret that the figure given to the House in my earlier answer was incorrect; the full figures had not been reported to me at the time.

The circumstances in which the expenditure was authorised, incurred and notified have yet to be fully clarified. A high-level independent external investigation has been commissioned to look urgently into the apparent failure of the financial control system and to recommend appropriate action to ensure that there is no repeat.

We have also set in hand a separate audit of expenditure on official service residences to ensure that in other instances financial control mechanisms have functioned as they should.

I intend to make a full report to the House on the conclusions of all this work, and any action found necessary, as soon as possible after the House returns in the autumn. At the same time, I will reort to the House on the wider question of official service residences.

Danger Areas (Air Space)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the (a) statutory requirements and (b) requirements set out in service orders, for the operating authorities of military firing ranges and training areas to report infringements of danger area air space.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members currently appointed to the advisory council for the Royal Navy engineering college, Manadon.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1994]: The members of the advisory council for the Royal Navy Engineering College are as follows:
Professor Sir Hermann Bondi KCB FRS (Chairman)
R. J. Bull BSc FCCA
Dr. J. Daniel
Professor M. G. Farley CEng FRAeS FIMechE FIProdE DBIM
Dr. A. F. Frodsham CBE
Professor W. Gosling DSc FIEE FInstD
Sir Richard Morris CBE
Sir Alistair Pilkington FRS
Professor G. S. Sims OBE MSc PhD DSc LID FIEE FCGI FEng

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members currently appointed to the Armed Forces Pay Review Body.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 3 February 1994]: The current members of the Review Body are as follows:
Gordon Hourston (Chairman)
Michael Bolton
John Cox CBE
John Crosby
Baroness Dean of Thornton-le-Fylde
Dorothy Venables
Air Chief Marshal Sir Roger Palin KCB OBE

WALES

Unemployment (Alyn and Deeside)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to find work for the long-term unemployed of Alyn and Deeside.

Mr. Redwood: The North-East Wales training and enterprise council and the Employment Service provide a range of services to help the long-term unemployed of Alyn and Deeside back into work. These include the training for work programme, which offers the widest-ever range of measures available and focuses specifically on providing help to the long-term unemployed.

My Department and the Welsh Development Agency also provide a diverse range of measures aimed at combating unemployment through stimulation of the local economy.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take to deal with those councils which are using council reserves to undertake a general regrading of local authority staff in advance of consideration of staff transfer orders for the new unitary authorities elected under the local Government (Wales) Bill [Lords].

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Shadow Staff Commission for Wales is consulting local authorities about a draft circular on regrading in the period before local government reorganisation. If the commission decides to issue advice on this matter after Royal Assent to the Local Government (Wales) Bill [Lords], it would be open to my right hon. Friend to direct authorities to comply with the advice.

I informed the Association of District Councils at its conference on 29 June that my right hon. Friend and I are concerned about the marked increase in use of reserves by Welsh local authorities. Use of reserves is a matter for councillors. We do not propose to give special help to any new authority which finds that it has inherited only limited reserves from its predecessors.

Parents Charter

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet representatives of the teaching unions in Wales before drawing up a parents charter for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I are always ready to consider requests from teaching unions for discussions about matters of common interest, but it is not always necessary to meet for views to be made known to us and we always welcome written comments from teaching unions and others.

Agriculture

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 92, if he will now give (i) the number of hectares taken up and (ii) the number of holdings in each county in Wales in 1993 for (a) cereals, (b) potatoes, (c) linseed, (d) sugar beet, (e) horticultural produce and (f) oilseeds.

Mr. Redwood: The requested information, derived from the final results of the June 1993 agricultural census, is shown in the following tables.

	Hectares taken up by:

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the payment rates made per hectare under the arable area payments scheme for (a) cereals, (b) oilseeds, (c) proteins, (d) linseed, (e) set-aside and (f) the simplified scheme paid in (i) the first year and (ii) the second year of the scheme in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Payment rates under the arable area payments scheme in 1992-93 and 1993-94 are as follows:

	1992-93	1993-94
	(£)	LFA (£)	Non-LFA (£)
Cereals	110·28	108·35	168·73
Oilseeds	453·12	445·39	445·39
Protein	286·73	201·22	313·35
Set-Aside	198·50	176·46	274·78
Simplified Scheme	110·28	108·35	168·73

Linseed was not included in the 1992-93 scheme and the rate for 1993-94 is not yet available. The rates payable in 1994 may be reduced if base areas are exceeded and the rate for oilseeds may be adjusted to reflect changes in the reference price.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the take-up of the arable area payments scheme in hectares for (a) the simplifed scheme, (b) cereals, (c) oilseeds, (d) proteins, (e) linseed and (f) set-aside in Wales for 1994.

Mr. Redwood: The estimated take up of arable area payments in hectares for 1994 arable area payments scheme in Wales is as follows:

		Hectares
(a)	Simplified Scheme	22,289
(b)	Cereals	15,231
(c)	Oilseeds	1,365
(d)	Protein	843
(e)	Linseed	2,250
(f)	Set-Aside	3,474

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) the amount of land in hectares in each county, (b) the number of farmers and (c) the cost of the five-year set-aside scheme in Wales in (i) 1993-94 and (ii) 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Payments made to farmers in Wales under the five-year set-aside schemes for the financial year 1993-94 amounted to £349,937. Those payments relate primarily to land set aside during the scheme year October 1993 to September 1994 under 61 agreements covering some 1,936 hectares. Estimated expenditure for 1994-95 is about £286,000 based on 52 agreements for the 1993-94 scheme year covering about 1,608 hectares. The reduction is the result of some farmers completing their five-year agreements and others taking advantage of the option to terminate early in order to join the arable area payments scheme. It is not possible to give a breakdown to county level without disclosing information relating to any particular land or business.

Subsidies and Grants

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of money was paid out by each of his divisional offices for each (a) agricultural subsidy scheme and (b) grant scheme to farmers in 1992-93.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Scheme	Caernarfon £	Carmarthen £	Llandrindod Wells £

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) farmers and (b) holdings there were in each county in Wales in 1993.

Mr. Redwood: The information is shown in the following table.

Farmers and farm holdings in Wales, June 1993

	Farmers, partners and directors[1]	Holdings

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 554, what was the purpose of each of his visits to the Bridgend constituency.

Mr. Redwood: I have made three official and three political visits to the Bridgend constituency since I became Welsh Secretary.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has given to the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency and to the board of the Development Board for Rural Wales concerning the co-ordination of policy and resources management in the present financial year and during 1995-96.

Mr. Redwood: I discuss a wide range of issues with the chairmen and the boards of the Welsh Development Agency and the Development Board for Rural Wales. I have considered with each of them their objectives and priorities and set targets for 1994-95. I will be making a statement about this matter shortly.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with (a) the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation and (b) the Balfour Beatty/Costain consortium in relation to the commencement of construction of the Cardiff bay barrage indemnities sought and given thereto in respect of European environmental infraction proceedings under article 169 of the treaty of Rome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I myself have had no such discussions with either the chairman of the Development Corporation or the Balfour Beatty/Costain consortium.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Redwood: The answers are (a) 100 per cent.; (b) nil. Recycled paper suitable for general use, which includes the preparation of written answers, could not be found at reasonable cost. The position is kept under review.

Bed Provision

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in Wales which have had to refer patients elsewhere because beds were not available during the last year, giving the number of days on which this has occurred and the places to which patients were referred in each case.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally but could be provided by the hospitals concerned.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 516, if he has received information from NHS trusts about changes in the number of people whom they employ.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As there is no requirement on trusts to provide such information, the position across Wales is not known.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the standard spending assessment for each police force in Wales for 1994-95 and for each financial year since 1990, together with the police components of grant-related expenditure assessments for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are no standard spending assessments for police authorities in Wales. The assessments for county councils include provision for police services. Assessments are unhypothecated as were grant-related expenditure assessments. Expenditure on police and other services is determined by county councils in the light of their statutory responsibilities, local needs and available resources.

EMPLOYMENT

National Union of Teachers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, column 450, what are the appropriate qualifications to be an auditor of a return of trade union numbers to the certification officer; and if he will list the names of the auditors used by the National Union of Teachers in its returns in each year since 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Eligibility for an appointment as an auditor of a trade union is set out in the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992. Section 34(1) provides that a person is not qualified to be the auditor, or one of the auditors, of a trade union unless he is eligible for appointment as a company auditor under section 25 of the Companies Act 1989.

Before the commencement of the provisions in the 1992 Act in October 1992, the eligibility qualifications were set out in part I, schedule 2 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act 1974. This provided that a person would not be qualified to be the auditor, or one of the auditors of a trade union unless he is either:

a. a member of one or more specified bodies (ie the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales; the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland; the Association of Certified Accountants; the Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland; and any other body of accountants established in the United Kingdom and for the time being recognised for the purposes of the Companies Act 1985 by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State); or

b. a person who is for the time being authorised by the Secretary of State under the 1985 Act as being a person with similar qualifications obtained outside the United Kingdom.

I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that since 1985 the auditors of the accounts contained in the annual returns submitted by the National Union of Teachers have been Knox Cropper of 16 New Bridge street, London EC4V 6AZ, chartered accountants and registered auditor.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, column 450, in which years each of the late returns of the National Union of Teachers were made; what were the reasons given in each case; and what penalties are imposed on trade unions making late returns.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that the annual returns by the National Union of Teachers were submitted after the due date of 1 June in 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

I also understand from the certification officer that he will consider representations from a trade union where circumstances make it difficult for a return to be submitted, in any year, by the statutory date. However, any reasons given at the time for the delay in making any of the NUT returns are not now available.

Under the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992, any trade union that refuses or wilfully neglects to submit an annual return by the due date is liable for prosecution and, on conviction, a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, column 450, how many of the members of the National Union of Teachers in the annual returns to the certification officer are retired teachers; and what figures his Department keeps on the numbers of people employed as teachers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that information regarding the number of members of the National Union of Teachers who are retired teachers is not available from the annual return submitted to him by that union.

Information on the number of people who are employed in teaching occupations is available from the quarterly labour force survey. Latest estimates from this show that there were 997,000 teaching professionals in Great Britain at winter 1993-94.

It is possible to perform detailed analysis of LFS data by a number of demographic characteristics including region of residence, age, sex and ethnic origin. All this information can be accessed via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Sunday Trading

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of the changes in respect of Sunday trading on the employment rights of workers who deliver food and drink supplies to stores which will open seven days a week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The employment rights of workers who deliver food and drink to stores which will open seven days a week will not be altered by the changes in respect of Sunday trading.

Asbestosis

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the incidence and geographical distribution of deaths from asbestosis and related diseases for the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of death certificates mentioning asbestosis or the asbestos-related cancer mesothelioma in each of the last 10 years is shown in the following table:

Year	Asbestosis	Mesothelioma
1982	128	504
1983	121	578
1984	129	626
1985	140	615
1986	166	703
1987	144	809
1988	152	862
1989	157	899
1990	164	880
1991	163	1,018
Total	1,464	7,494

The geographical breakdown of these deaths was as follows:

Region	Asbestosis	Mesothelioma
North	267	811
Yorkshire and Humberside	155	604
North West	170	839
West Midlands	83	343
East Midlands	50	381
South West	114	704
East Anglia	30	231
South East	380	2,561
Wales	63	217
Scotland	152	803
Total (Great Britain)	1,464	7,494

Exposure to asbestos can also lead to lung cancer. Industrial cases cannot be distinguished medically from lung cancers due to other causes, principally smoking. The total of such cases is estimated from epidemiological evidence to be roughly twice the number of mesotheliomas.

Job Seekers Allowance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the proposed job seekers allowance as it will affect north-east Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: From 1996, job seekers allowance will replace unemployment benefit and income support for the unemployed. It will encourage wider and more effective job search, and bring improvements in the delivery of benefit to unemployed people throughout the United Kingdom.

Employment Service (Alyn and Deeside)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Alyn and Deeside have been placed in work by the Employment Service in the last 12 months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Mr. Barry Jones, dated 4 July 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about how many people in Alyn and Deeside have been placed into work by the Employment Service in the last 12 months. I am replying in the Chief Executive's absence.

There were 2,605 job placings made by the Employment Service in Alyn and Deeside in the 12 month period ending 3 June 1994. 2,300 of these were placings of unemployed people, 341 of which were people unemployed for more than six months and 52 of which were unemployed people with disabilities.

I hope this is helpful.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Government's policy on the implementation of the acquired rights directive, following the recent decision of the European Court of Justice on the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981; and what steps he will take to ensure that the terms of the directive are being complied with when a transfer of work from the public to the private sector takes place.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The directive was implemented by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. Amendments to the regulations in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 had already dealt with all but one of the points in the European Court of Justice judgment of 8 June. The Government are presently considering what changes need to be made in respect of the outstanding issue which concerns consultation arrangements.

Detailed guidance on the application of TUPE to market testing was issued by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in the note entitled "Guidance on the Relevance of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations to Market Testing of Public Services", published on 11 March 1993, a copy of which is in the Library.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In line with Government policy, all the Department's (a) press notices and (b) parliamentary questions are printed on environmentally friendly paper.

HEALTH

Official Secrets Act 1989

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons were bound by, or required to sign declarations relating to, the Official Secrets Act 1989 in her Department and the NHS management executive in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: All employees of the Department, including people seconded into the Department, are subject to the terms of the Official Secrets Act 1989. The amendments made in the 1989 Act mean that employees are no longer required to sign an "Official Secrets Act Declaration". They do sign an acknowledgement that they understand the terms and conditions on which they are employed including the terms of the Official Secrets Act.

Paramedics

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many qualified paramedics there are per head of population in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland, (d) England and (e) the United Kingdom as a whole; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: These figures are not routinely collected centrally, but an informal survey in England showed that there were approximately 4,380 paramedics at the end of 1993—0·91 per 10,000 population. Comparative figures for other countries and the United Kingdom are not available. A target has been set of having an extended trained paramedic on every front-line ambulance by 1995.

Mental Health Task Force

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the mental health task force reported about its work in London; and when she expects to publish its report.

Mr. Bowis: The mental health task force is due to report to Ministers later this summer.

Skin Cancer

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from Dr. Julian Verbov, consultant dermatologist, skin cancer co-ordinator Liverpool and Sefton, Broadgreen Hospital NHS trust concerning skin cancer; when those representations were received; and when she expects to reply.

Mr. Sackville: A number of letters were received from Dr. Verbov this year. A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 8 June which addressed the issues raised by Dr. Verbov.

Surgeons (Guidance)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that surgeons adhere to the guidance issued by the Royal College of Surgeons regarding the training of specialists in minimally invasive techniques.

Mr. Sackville: Chief executives of national health service trusts and general managers of directly managed units are responsible for ensuring high standards of practice within hospitals. District health authorities also have a responsibility, through the contracting process, to ensure that their populations have access to high quality care.

Standards of postgraduate and continuing medical education are the responsibility of the medical royal colleges, which are independent bodies. A representative of the appropriate royal college sits on consultant appointment advisory committees. We have welcomed the Senate of Royal Surgical Colleges' statement on quality assurance. This will provide useful support for NHS management and dovetails well with our current initiative on continuing medical education.

Complementary Medicine Policy Unit

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the role, manpower and budget of the complementary medicine policy unit; when the unit was established; and what work it has undertaken to date.

Mr. Sackville: A complementary medicines unit has existed in the Medicines Control Agency since it was established as an executive agency in April 1989, and before this was part of the former medicines division of the Department of Health. The unit does not have a separate budget, and its staffing varies according to the resource requirements of work being undertaken. Principal tasks carried out by the unit in the past year include the implementation of the EC homoeopathics directive and the introduction of a new registration scheme for homoeopathic products. The unit provides the secretariat to the Advisory Board on the Registration of Homoeopathic Products and it also forms a focus for advice and expertise on questions relating to complementary medicines. Other units within the agency have been responsible for major tasks in recent years, including a review of all herbal medicinal products covered by product licences of right.

National Health Service Managers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish a strategy for training and retraining NHS managers throughout their career.

Dr. Mawhinney: The management development strategy for the national health service was launched by Sir Duncan Nichol in 1991, and copies are available in the Library.

Comfrey

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to review the ban on the sale of comfrey products;

(2) what recent representations she has received concerning the ban on the availability of comfrey products; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans at present to reconsider the withdrawal of certain comfrey products. We are currently considering the results of a survey received recently from the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy.

Pharmaceuticals

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that practitioners will adhere to the guidelines published in conjunction with the association of the British pharmaceutical industry regarding economic evaluation of pharmaceuticals; and how national health service purchasers will be trained to ensure that they can distinguish good from bad practice in economic evaluations of pharmaceuticals.

Mr. Sackville: If claims are made about the cost-effectiveness of a pharmaceutical product any doctor may call on the company to produce the full study justifying those claims. If they remain dissatisfied, they may refer the matter to the Prescription Medicines Code of Practice Authority, which has agreed to take note of the guidelines. The Department has established a centre for reviews and dissemination at the university of York whose functions include maintaining a register of quality assured cost-effectiveness studies and communicating the results to relevant audiences, including national health service purchasers. In addition, purchasers are able to seek advice on the availability and quality of research through regional research and development networks facilitated by regional directors of research and development.

Research and Development

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were employed directly or indirectly to administer research and development in the national health service in 1992-93 and 1993-94; and what was the cost of employing these staff.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available centrally.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many civil servants were employed in the administration of her Department's research and development programme in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92, (c) 1992-93, (d) 1993-94 and (e) at the latest available date; how many contract staff were employed in research and development administration in each of those years; and what was the expenditure on these staff in each year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The numbers of civil servants and contract staff employed in the Department's research and development division, and the expenditure on these staff are as follows:

Year	Civil Servants		Contract staff
	Number	Cost £ million	Number	Cost £
1990-91	56	1·18	1	4,165
1991-92	70	1·68	1	16,827
1992-93	85	2·04	4	83,105
1993-94	78	2·32	3	40,523
Current year	76	[1]2·36	2	9,050

[1] Planned spend for 1994-95.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health service researchers are funded by (a) departmental and (b) national health service research and development expenditure; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No central record is kept of the number of researchers engaged in health service research across the 230 contracts of the Department's centrally commissioned programme of health and social services research. Some 57 health service researchers are currently involved in national health service executive centrally funded research and development projects under the national health service research and development programme. No central records are kept of the number of health service researchers employed by the national health service itself.

Cancer Treatment

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the evidence supporting the conclusion that the creation of specialist centres for cancer treatment produce better outcomes than non-specialist centres.

Mr. Sackville: The recommendations set out in the consultation document "A Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services" produced by the Chief Medical Officers' expert advisory group on cancer, were based on the knowledge and experience of the advisory group members and research findings, published and unpublished. Copies of the framework document are available in the Library.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of her Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Sackville: The Department's policy is to use only paper manufactured by elemental chlorine free—ECF—and totally chlorine free—TCF—processes, from countries who operate a tree farming policy, that is, planting two trees for every one used to make paper. All paper used for the Department's press releases and written answers is ECF.

Letterhead stationery is produced on pure recycled paper.

Confidentiality

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue guidance to ensure that case material and photographs gained by pathologists are subject to the same rules of confidentiality as medical records.

Mr. Sackville: All health information held by the national health service, including case material and photographs, is confidential and must be treated as such by all NHS personnel.

Patient Transport

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what vetting procedures are operated on the staff of taxi firms which operate patient transport services.

Mr. Sackville: The purchaser of any patient transport service should satisfy itself that the private contractor will employ staff who are sufficiently qualified and of good character. The competence required of staff can be specified in the contract conditions. Further guidance is in the code of practice for private ambulance operators—EL(93)109—and revised guidance on market testing in the national health service—EL(93)55. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accidents have occurred involving patient transport services operated other than by ambulance services.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specialist training is given to staff of non-ambulance service passenger transport services.

Mr. Sackville: The purchasers of non-ambulance service patient transport services should identify their requirements and satisfy themselves that the staff providing the service are suitably trained to meet the standard expected. The Department's code of practice for private ambulance operators—EL(93)109—copies of which are available in the Library, gives further guidance to prospective purchasers.

London Ambulance Service

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what effect the overtime ban in the passenger transport operations of the London ambulance service is having on the ability of the service to meet contractual targets;

(2) how much money the patient transport operations of the London ambulance service received for new vehicles in each of the last three years; and how many vehicles were purchased in each year;

(3) what is the annual cost of management accommodation for the London ambulance service; what new buildings have been bought or leased in the last 12 months; and what was the cost of each building or lease.

Mr. Sackville: South Thames regional health authority has management responsibility for the London Ambulance Service. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. William Wells, chairman of the authority, for the information required.

Car Parking

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance she has issued or intends to issue on the matters national health service trusts and health authorities should consider before introducing car parking charges;

(2) what the policy of her Department is regarding the introduction of charges for car parking at hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: Charges for car parking on national health service premises are a matter for local determination in the light of local circumstances, including the needs of patients, visitors and staff and the availability and cost of providing such facilities.

Community Nurses

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the current staffing plans for community nurses for each self-governing trust in the Greater London area for 1994-95, broken down by occupation of district nurses, health visitors, school nurses and community psychiatric nurses.

Mr. Sackville: Trusts are responsible for the deployment of staff to meet their contracts.

Transport

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has carried out on the modes of transport used by patients, visitors and staff to reach hospitals and other NHS facilities.

Mr. Sackville: The Department funded a research project on "Outpatients and their Doctors", which included a section on transport arrangements, and was published by HMSO in 1993. Copies of the project are available in the Library.

Breastfeeding

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policy initiatives her Department is undertaking to encourage an improvement in the uptake of breastfeeding; and what plans she has to set targets for rates of breastfeeding at three and six months among mothers of new babies.

Mr. Sackville: The Department continues to support breastfeeding as the best way of feeding a baby. The national breastfeeding working group set up as part of the "Health of the Nation" strategy is working on a number of initiatives aimed to promote and protect breastfeeding including the drafting of guidance to the national health service which is likely to encourage district health authorities to consider setting local targets for breastfeeding rates.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her Department submitted evidence to the Health and Safety Commission in response to the consultative document on proposals to implement the health and safety aspects of the EC pregnant workers directive; and what effect she expects the proposed amendments to the Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations to have on breastfeeding rates among mothers of new babies.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has had discussions with the Health and Safety Executive about the proposals in its consultation document.

We do not foresee that those amendments will have any significant effect on the breastfeeding rates.

Non-medical Income

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total income to the national health service was from (a) car parking, (b) patient television hire and (c) other non-medical services in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The net income received from car parking charges was £1,238,000 in 1991-92, the only year for which figures are available centrally. Information on the net income for patient television hire and other non-medical services is not available centrally.

Transport Infrastructure

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has issued or intends to issue on taking into account the local transport infrastructure when considering the relocation, siting or closure of services.

Mr. Sackville: In considering the location of health services both purchasers and providers are required to consider accessibility to the local population. Guidance is contained in the capital investment manual, a copy of which is available in the Library.

"Making London Better"

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the expected savings in the acute sector in the current financial year from the implementation of "Making London Better"; what increases in resources in the primary health care sector she expects to result in the current financial year; and if she will identify the main categories of spending expected to benefit from the implementation of "Making London Better".

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the breakdown of planned expenditure for the current year between acute and other services is not available centrally. Changes to the pattern of expenditure will depend on purchasing decisions taken locally by health authorities and general practitioner fundholders. As stated in "Making London Better", significant additional investment in primary and community services is taking place, including an additional £170 million capital investment over six years and an extra £7·5 million over three years for voluntary sector initiatives.

Lee Review

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she plans to announce the findings of the Lee review of the Health Education Authority.

Mr. Sackville: An announcement will be made when we have completed our consideration of the report.

Bath Community NHS Trust

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the recent reorganisation of community health services within Bath Community NHS trust, the implications for child protection advice and relations with general practitioner fundholders arising from it.

Dr. Mawhinney: The organisation of services in the Bath area is a local matter.

Hospital League Tables

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to include (a) the hours worked by junior doctors, (b) the number of patients dying on the waiting list for heart surgery, (c) the percentage of patients seen and treated by consultants and (d) the readmission rate after day surgery in the hospital league tables.

Dr. Mawhinney: We will consider what indicators to include in future national health service performance tables in the light of discussions with the professions, the NHS and the general public.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each NHS trust in the former South West Thames region, those chairman and non-executive directors who live outside the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated.

Dr. Mawhinney: Some 131 out of the 154—85 per cent.—chairmen and non-executive directors appointed to national health service trusts within the former South West Thames region live within the boundaries of the district health authorities in which that trust is situated. The names of the appointees who live outside the relevant district health authority boundaries are listed.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each NHS trust in the former Oxford region those chairmen and non-executive directors who live outside the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 1 July 1994]: Some 99 out of the 128—77 per cent.—chairmen and non-executive directors appointed to national health service trusts within the former Oxford region live within the boundaries of the district health authorities in which that trust is situated. The names of the appointees who live outside the relevant district health authority boundaries are listed.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Gravesend Bench

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the breakdown by party political affiliation of members of the Gravesend bench.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The political balance of magistrates on the Gravesham bench, which covers Gravesend, on the latest information available is as follows:

	Number
Conservative	24
Labour	13
Liberal Democrat	6

Pre-trial Issues Working Group

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement concerning the pilot study of recommendation 92 of the inter-agency working group on pre-trial issues.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The pilot study has now been evaluated and the Lord Chancellor, the Home Secretary and the Attorney-General have received a report setting out its results. The inter-agency pre-trial issues steering group, which set up the pilot study, has recommended that the system under which magistrates' courts, when committing defendants to the Crown court for trial, fix a date upon which the case will be listed for a plea and directions hearing in the Crown court should be introduced on a national basis.

We, together with the Lord Chief Justice, welcome the report as a significant step towards a reduction in the number of cases which are listed for trial, with witnesses attending to give evidence, but which are not contested on the day. The percentage of such cases fell from 31 per cent. before the pilot to 18 per cent. during the pilot. The Lord Chancellor's Department is establishing an inter-agency implementation group to carry forward the implementation of the recommendation. Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Courts Service

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce computerisation into the county court service; how many county courts these plans will affect; how many will not be so affected; and what account he will take of whether a court has been computerised in deciding whether it should be closed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I are committed to improving the efficiency of the court system by providing court staff with computer support where appropriate. To achieve this, all county court offices are already provided with some form of computer support in the areas of warrant production and control and of the handling of suitors' cash. Those systems are currently being upgraded. A project is also under way to extend the range of functions to which computer support can be given. The criteria applied in deciding whether it is appropriate to close a county court do not include the existence of computer support.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what criteria he applies when deciding which of the functions of the courts service are appropriate for contracting out and which are not.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The first and paramount criterion is the preservation of the independence and probity of the judicial process. If that is not at risk, general issues relating to the effective and efficient operation and management of the courts in providing a good-quality service to their users and value for money for the taxpayer would be taken into account.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to identify a core of activities of the courts service that are not appropriate for contracting out.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is exploring the matter with the senior judiciary. Each activity will be considered on its own merits, bearing in mind the paramount need to maintain the independence and probity of the judicial process.

TREASURY

Political Parties (Funds)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if funds drawn in the form of either interest or capital from a capital sum held abroad by a political party are subject to United Kingdom taxation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Political parties are chargeable to corporation tax or income and capital gains tax on their profits or gains depending on their status and organisation. Whether sums drawn in the form of interest or capital from a capital sum held abroad are subject to United Kingdom taxation will depend on whether those sums represent profits or gains, and on the particular circumstances in which the sums are drawn.

Visible Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken internationally to reduce Japanese and German surpluses on visible trade.

Mr. Nelson: Trade surpluses reflect, in the main, structural factors, such as Japan's high domestic savings ratio and relative cyclical position. At last year's G7 summit in Tokyo, Japan undertook to implement fiscal and monetary measures to ensure sustained non-inflationary growth contributing to the goal of significantly reducing external imbalances.

Fonds Commun de Placement

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his assessment of the benefit to United Kingdom investors and financial institutions if the tax treatment of fonds commun de placement with undertakings for collective investment in transferable securities certificates is changed so it is practical to market them in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: We have made no such assessment. I understand, however, that fonds commun de placement are mutual funds set up in other member states of the European Union by financial institutions established in those states. It is not clear to what extent changing the tax treatment of those funds to enhance their marketability in the United Kingdom would beneift financial institutions in the United Kingdom as opposed to those of other member states.

Corporation Tax, Northern Ireland

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the yield from corporation tax in Northern Ireland each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not possible to provide a reliable geographical analysis of the yield of corporation tax. The tax is charged on total profits of a company, including income received from abroad. A company may surrender tax losses to another company in the same group anywhere in the United Kingdom and thus reduce the latter's tax charge.

Dividend Payments

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was repaid by the inspector of foreign dividends or his equivalent to foreign holders of United Kingdom dividends, warrants etc. in relation to tax credits or to tax withheld in regard to their dividend payments in each fiscal year since 1985.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 1 July 1994]: Payments to foreign residents of tax credits on United Kingdom dividends under double taxation agreements made either at source by the company paying the dividend or by the inspector of foreign dividends are as follows:

Year	£ million
1986-87	490
1987-88	480
1988-89	510
1989-90	550
1990-91	490
1991-92	480
1992-93	550
1993-94	470

Note:
Excludes payments to sovereign immune bodies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ernst and Young

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what action he has taken against the auditing firm and partners criticised in the inspectors' report on Rotaprint plc; and what has been the outcome;

(2) what action he has taken against the auditing firm and partners criticised in the inspectors' reports on Sound Diffusion; and what has been the outcome.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 4 July 1994, Official Report, column 11.

Electrical Appliances (Plugs)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to make regulations requiring electrical applicances to be supplied with a correctly fused plug; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Regulations under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 will be laid before Parliament shortly, and from 1 February 1995 most domestic electrical appliances manufactured in, or imported into, the United Kingdom must be supplied with a correctly fused plug.

Fatalities and injuries occur each year because of incorrectly fitted electric plugs. These regulations represent an important step forward in consumer safety for the British public.

Slate

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what conveniently available figures he has for the import of slate into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: Information on the topic is regularly published in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Property Misdescriptions Act 1991

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is his assessment of the benefits that the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991 has brought to home buyers;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991; and what plans he has to amend it.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Act was introduced to deter estate agents from making inaccurate statements about property. It has had practical effect only since April 1993, when the Property Misdescriptions (Specified Matters) Order 1992 came into force. It takes time for new legislation to settle and it is too soon to be able to judge how effectively the Act and the order are operating.

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many convictions there have been under the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991;

(2) how many prosecutions have been brought under the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: As of 29 June 1994, the Office of Fair Trading had been notified of six prosecutions under the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991, all of which resulted in convictions.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Henderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many applicants in each region of the United Kingdom have been rejected for regional selective assistance because of a failure to meet new guidelines;

(2) what recent changes have been made in the guidelines relating to the disbursement of regional selective assistance; and from when they took effect.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Teampace Holdings Ltd.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he received the report from the receivers to Teampace Holdings Ltd.; what factors led the Department to decide against further investigations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The administrative receivers' report was received by the disqualification unit on 5 April 1993 and identified as meriting further investigation on 11 May 1993. Because of the need to prioritise the unit's resources, the matter was not taken forward, as I explained in my speech in the House on 29 June 1994, Official Report, columns 920-22.

Patent Office

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what legal advice he has received on the implications of change in ownership of the Patent Office; and if he will make a statement;

(2) which options in regard to the United Kingdom Patent Office have been ruled out; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the option which Price Waterhouse has been requested to provide covering the future of the Patent Office; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how many representations he has received on the future of the Patent Ofice in the last 12 months; how many of them were in favour of the status quo; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will consider making an interim announcement in regard to the Patent Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: We are still considering the report by Price Waterhouse which was commissioned as part of the review of the Patent Office's performance as an agency and of its options for the future. The review covers a range of possibilities from abolition to maintenance of the status quo. It is also required to address the scope for contractorisation or privatisation. The review has thrown up a number of complex legal and policy issues, which we are considering. I should emphasise that no decision on the future of the office has yet been taken. An announcement will be made as soon as the review is complete.

Around 80 representations have been received regarding the future of the Patent Office. These reflect a wide range of issues.

Post Office Workers (Dog Attacks)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post office employees received injuries caused by dog attacks while delivering letters and parcels in 1993; how many work days were lost as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The handling of Post Office staff matters is the responsibility of Post Office management. However, I understand that in 1993 the total number of incidents involving animal attacks on Post Office employees was 6,040, of which 694 were sufficiently serious to require sick leave, amounting to a total of 4,527 working days.

Inspectorate AG and Omni Group

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken, or proposes to take, to investigate the activities in the United Kingdom of subsidiaries or companies related to the Inspectorate AG and Omni Group between 1987 and 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: It is not my Department's policy to comment on the affairs of individual companies. If the hon. Member has information to suggest that an inquiry would be appropriate, my officials would be pleased to consider any information forwarded in the usual manner.

Company Inspections

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if, for each of the investigations authorised under the Companies Acts, where inspectors have been appointed and the investigation is in progress or the final report remains unpublished, he will publish a table showing the cost of to date, the business connections of the inspectors, the manner in which costs have been disbursed to each of the inspectors, the total number of hours for which his Department has been charged and the basis of fees.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The table below covers all current Companies Acts inspections where the inspection has been announced or, if completed, the report has not yet been published or a decision whether to publish has not been taken. Further information on costs is commercially confidential and I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 20 July 1993, Official Report, column 132.

Euroscan

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will appoint inspectors to investigate the liquidation of Euroscan.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I cannot comment on the affairs of individual companies. I am prepared to consider any information the hon. Member may provide in the usual way.

Corporate Communications

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will appoint inspectors to investigate the liquidation of Corporate Communications.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: On the basis of the information currently before me, I am not persuaded that this is an appropriate case for the appointment of inspectors.

Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the amount paid to each of his Department's inspectors for the reports published between 1979 and 1985.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The information requested by the hon. Member is set out in the table. The figures for costs include expenses incurred by the inspectors.

Accounting Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will launch an independent inquiry into the affairs of Coopers and Lybrand following the DTI report on the company;

(2) if he will initiate an independent inquiry into the regulation of the major accounting firms by the Institute of Chartered Accountants;

(3) if he will launch an independent inquiry into the affairs of Grant Thornton following the DTI report on the company.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing by standard industrial trade classification two-digit division the industries whose share of exports by the main manufacturing countries has declined since 1979 as a result of lack of investment in new plant and machinery.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Multi-level Marketing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposal he has for updating legislation in relation to multi-level marketing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are preparing proposals for changes to the present legislation, and hope to publish a consultation paper shortly.

Parcels

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 630, what is the position in relation to VAT exemption for parcels sent via a privatised company by franked or account postage rather than by the purchase of a stamp.

Mr. McLoughlin: This issue is discussed in the Government's Green Paper "The Future of Postal Services" (Cm. 2614) published on 30 June. If the Government decide to proceed with privatisation or part-privatisation of the Royal Mail and Parcelforce, they will consider, in the light of EC law, the appropriate VAT treatment for non-obligatory parcels services provided by the new company. Such services would include those offered on account to commercial companies and other organisations, in competition with services from other parcels carriers.

Unfair Consumer Contracts

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now make it his policy to receive a delegation led by the hon. Member for Macclesfield to discuss the provisions of the European directive on unfair consumer contracts and its implications for British industry.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1994]: If my hon. Friend contacts the Minister for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms, I am sure that my noble Friend will be pleased to meet with him.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 254, when he expects to complete the compliance cost assessment in relation to the European directive on unfair consumer contracts; which trade associations and individual companies have been consulted specifically in connection with that assessment; and if he will list all those provisions likely to prove onerous to industry which his Department succeeded in having deleted from the European directive on unfair consumer contracts.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1994]: A compliance cost assessment is being prepared on the proposals to implement the EC directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts and will be published shortly. All trade associations and companies that received the Department's consultation document were invited to make an estimate of the compliance costs. Provisions in earlier drafts of the directive which were considered likely to be onerous to industry included extension of the scope of the directive to all contract terms, whether negotiated or not; inclusion of a blacklist of terms which would be unfair in all circumstances; and an attempt to harmonise sale of goods legislation.

Universal Postal Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who will make the definition of the exclusive services which will be offered to the operators of the universal postal service, under the proposed reserved services directive of the European Union.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 4 July 1994]: The maximum scope of the reserved area is likely to be defined at Community level, and member states will be free to establish smaller reserved areas if they wish.

EMPLOYMENT

Barnsley/Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current training targets for the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The training and enterprise council's corporate plan for 1994-1997 sets out local targets which it has agreed with key players in education and training, to contribute towards the achievement of the national education and training targets. The TEC's corporate plan is available in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what internationally recognised qualifications are obtainable through the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The qualifications which are obtainable through the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council are nationally recognised qualifications. A second EC directive on mutual recognition of qualifications has been adopted which will give national vocational qualifications and Scottish vocational qualifications currency throughout the Community.

Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what the amount of Government expenditure on training the existing work force has been in each year since 1979 at 1993 prices;

(2) how much Government expenditure has been spent on overall training in each year since 1979 at 1993 prices.

Miss Widdecombe: Expenditure by the Department on training, education, enterprise, employment measures and labour market services in Great Britain is detailed in the table. Information relating to other Government expenditure on training is not available to this Department. The Employment Department group is offering a total of 1·5 million opportunities for unemployed people in 1994-95, the same as 1993-94's record level.

£ million

	Cash	Real terms (1993 prices)
1979-80	878	2,091
1980-81	1,324	2,664
1981-82	1,452	2,663
1982-83	1,645	2,817
1983-84	2,067	3,383
1984-85	2,203	3,433
1985-86	2,420	3,572
1986-87	2,969	4,259
1987-88	3,217	4,381
1988-89	3,137	4,003
1989-90	3,008	3,589
1990-91	2,871	3,170
1992-93	2,692	—

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his most recent estimate of the amount spent on training by (a) private employers, (b) public employers, (c) Government and (d) individuals.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates from the "Training in Britain" study of 1986-87 of the amount spent on training in Great Britain by private sector firms with 10 or more employees, public sector employers, Government and individuals are shown in the table:

	£'000 million
Private sector firms with 10 or more employees	9
Public sector employers (excludes armed services)	5
Government	7
Individuals	8

It is estimated that British employers currently spend over £20,000 million a year on training and developing their employees.

The estimate of Government expenditure includes expenditure by the then Manpower Services Commission on training programmes and the costs of post-compulsory education outside schools. Expenditure in 1992-93 by the Department on training, education, enterprise, employment measures and labour market services in Great Britain was £2,692 million. The estimate of expenditure by individuals consists mainly of earnings forgone by those in post-compulsory education.

Financial Services Industry

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of relative wage levels in the financial services industry in (a) London, (b) Dublin and (c) Luxembourg; and what implications this has for employment opportunities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Reliable information is not available at this level.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees in relation to market testing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 29 June 1994]: As reflected in information already provided to the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee as part of its inquiry into the civil service, during the period 1 April 1992 to 31 December 1993, the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by the Department in relation to market testing was £845,319. The Employment Department group's market-testing programme is being developed within existing resources.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Bilateral Aid

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amount of the United Kingdom's bilateral aid spending is focused on basic needs provision; and if he will set out separately figures for spending on health, primary education and clean water provision (a) in cash prices and (b) as a percentage of the United Kingdom's total bilateral aid spending.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is estimated that a minimum of £111 million of the United Kingdom's bilateral aid was focused on basic needs provision in 1992-93. Some £13 million of this was provided as block grants to non-governmental organisations and £8 million was provided as a grant to the International Planned Parenthood Federation.

The sectoral figures shown in the table are included within the £111 millon:

	1992-93 (£ million)	Percentage of aid allocable by sector	Percentage of total United Kingdom bilateral aid to developing countries
Health and Population	48·9	8·6	3·8
Basic Education[1]	15·8	2·8	1·2
Water and Sanitation	25·8	4·5	2·0

[1] Basic education, including primary education, some teacher training and adult literacy, is estimated to be 15 per cent. of the total ODA spending in the education sector.

In addition, in 1992-93, £150 million of emergency aid was provided. Most of this goes to meet basic human needs in time of crisis.

Nigeria

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 525-26, if he will list those practical initiatives in Nigeria which his Department is funding in support of a democratic transition in that country; if he will indicate the amount of funding for each project; and if he will make a statement indicating specifically what steps his Department intends to take to assist the work of the National Constitutional Conference in Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since April 1993, we have provided office equipment and literature to organisations concerned with democracy and human rights—£40,000—help towards the running of and participation in human rights conferences—£12,000—and support for monitoring of the June 1993 election—£10,000. Further initiatives totalling up to £75,000 in 1994-95 are being considered. In addition, we have helped the work of the National Constitutional Conference by providing its library with books and journals on legal, political and constitutional issues, including copies of the democratic constitutions of several Commonwealth countries—£5,500.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Forensic Pathology

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines to prevent the use of photographic or other material gained in the course of forensic pathology for public entertainment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Prisoners, Northern Ireland

Mr. McNa[illegible]: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Northern Ireland prisoners have received transfers from England and Wales to Northern Ireland since 1 January 1993; and how many were (a) permanent, (b) temporary, (c) male, (d) female, (e) loyalists and (f) republican transfers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since 1 January 1993, three male prisoners have been permanently transferred from England and Wales to Northern Ireland and eight male prisoners have been temporarily transferred. In addition, four male prisoners previously temporarily transferred have been granted further periods of temporary transfer in Northern Ireland. No female prisoners have been either permanently or temporarily transferred during this period, and one of the prisoners transferred was convicted of a terrorist offence. It is our policy not to comment on the past or present political affiliations of prisoners.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the greatest, the shortest and the average length of time between application for transfer and notification of the decision to accept or reject the application for temporary or permanent transfer from England and Wales to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Transfers of prisoners between United Kingdom jurisdictions have been effected since the introduction of the Criminal Justice Act 1961. The information requested could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long a prisoner whose application for transfer from England and Wales to Northern Ireland is rejected must wait before reapplying.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A prisoner may apply for transfer to another United Kingdom jurisdiction at any time. Each application will be considered individually and on its own merits under the criteria announced to Parliament on 23 November 1992.

Colin Ivor Dunning (Appeal)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 May, Official Report, column 456, if he has now considered the representations submitted in February 1994, on behalf of Colin Ivor Dunning, together with earlier representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I regret that our consideration of those representations is not yet complete and it is possible that some outside inquiries may have to be made before a decision is made on whether to refer Mr. Dunning's conviction to the Court of Appeal or to take any other action. I will ensure that the hon. Member is informed as soon as there are any further developments.

Aldington Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases staff shortages at Aldington prison have been the reason for the non-production of prisoners in court in the past 12 months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 5 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of occasions in the past 12 months on which staff shortages at Aldington prison have been responsible for the non-production of prisoners in court.

Aldington is a small prison which receives few requests to produce prisoners for court appearances. Other establishments are advised not to send to Aldington prisoners who will need to be produced at court. Until recently, there has been no system at the prison for recording such requests. It is known that the obligation to produce prisoners for Crown Court appearances has been fulfilled without exception. In the absence of any statistics, however, it is not possible to give any precise figures about productions at Magistrates courts.

A system of recording all requests for production, including the reasons for any cancellations, has now been introduced at Aldington.

Police (Performance-related Pay)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 458, (1) if he will provide the evidence available to him on the extent to which benefits may accrue (a) to the organisation and (b) to the individual; and what assessment he has made of the benefit to the public of introducing performance-related pay;

(2) if he will list the specific benefits that will accrue to the police service as a result of performance-related pay and the defects resulting from the present system which he aims to correct;

(3) if he will list his targets for the improvement in the performance of police officers (a) in terms of specific activities and (b) in terms of improvement sought.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have made it clear on a number of occasions that police pay should be related to overall performance. This does not mean judging performance against crude indicators such as numbers of arrests or crimes cleared up. The introduction of an element in police pay related to overall performance will enable the police service, in a tangible way, to distinguish the especially good performance from the average performance, which is not possible under the current pay system. Together with the other police management reforms being introduced by the Government, performance-related pay will assist in the process of improving quality and increasing efficiency by providing a sensible incentive to police officers and a better basis for managing police pay, which constitutes some 80 per cent. of all money spent on policing.

Blakenhurst Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 627, on how many occasions United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. has received warnings in relation to its management of Blakenhurst prison; what was the nature of the warning on each occasion; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 5 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the warnings United Kingdom Detention Services have received in relation to their management of Blakenhurst prison.

Excluding the occasions mentioned in the earlier reply where default notices have been issued against the contractor and the one occasion where payment was withheld, the Controller has on six occasions required the Director of United Kingdom Detention Services to improve specific areas of service delivery. These warnings related to a number of matters including contingency arrangements, supervision of visits, visits by the Director to the segregation unit, the timely discharge of prisoners with adequate clothing, provison of regime monitoring information, and cleanliness. All the warnings were acted upon by United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd and no further action proved necessary.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current reinstatement value of Blakenhurst prison; how it is calculated; and how often it is reassessed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 4 July 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 5 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the reinstatement value of Blakenhurst Prison.

The current reinstatement value of Blakenhurst Prison is estimated at £91 million. This valuation is based on an estimate of the new replacement cost of the buildings, using current construction costs, from which deductions are made to allow for age and condition. The valuation also includes an estimate of the value of the land in its existing use.

This valuation is in line with the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors guidelines on asset valuations and will be reviewed and adjusted annually.

Immigration Act 1971

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) prisons, (b) detention centres and (c) police stations used to detain persons under the powers of the Immigration Act 1971, as amended; and what is the number of persons currently detained at each individual establishment.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 27 June 1994]: On 29 June 1994, people were detained under Immigration Act powers at the following locations:

Immigration Service	Number
Campsfield House	165
Harmondsworth	95
Gatwick Beehive	16
Queens Building	15

Probation Service

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when it is proposed that probation boards will begin to exercise executive functions and powers;

(2) what appointment procedures will be set in place for constituting the membership of probation boards; and when such procedures will be published.

Mr. Maclean: Primary legislation is required to enact the probation board proposals and the timing of this depends on an appropriate legislative opportunity. Details of the procedures proposed for appointments to boards will be confirmed at that time.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether representatives of voluntary bodies who are either tendering for or involved in partnerships will be eligible to be members of probation boards.

Mr. Maclean: A number of probation committee members have active links with voluntary sector organisations which are, or may be, involved in partnerships with the probation service. Although those links should not be a bar to probation committee membership, it is important that committees have in place procedures to avoid any conflicts of interest which may arise. Similar considerations are likely to apply to probation boards in due course.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which probation services in England and Wales will be reducing staffing levels in the financial year 1994-95; and what will be the consequent effect on probation work loads.

Mr. Maclean: It is for each probation committee to decide how the resources available to it should be used to best effect; and the Home Office does not have information about committees' plans for the remainder of the present financial year with regard to numbers of staff in post.

Third-country Nationals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the free movement of legally resident third-country nationals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government do not support the extension of European Community rights of free movement to third-country nationals and consider that the admission of third-country nationals should remain a matter for individual member states. We are discussing with our European partners a proposal in the draft external frontiers convention which would exempt third-country nationals who are legally resident in another member state from any visa requirement for a short visit. This proposal would make travel within the Community easier but would give no automatic right of free movement to resident third-country nationals.

Seat Belts

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drivers and passengers were summoned for travelling without a seat belt in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There were 10,145 prosecutions for not wearing a seat belt in England and Wales in 1990, 12,156 in 1991 and 11,258 in 1992. Statistics for 1993 are not yet available.

Firearms

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for a firearms licence have been refused in England and Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is published in Home Office statistical bulletin "Firearm Certificate Statistics, England and Wales 1992", issue 23/93, a copy of which can be found in the Library. Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Obscene Publications Branch

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans he has formulated for co-ordination between police forces in the United Kingdom and Interpol in respect of computer pornography and other obscene material if the obscene publications branch at Scotland Yard is closed down.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No proposals about the future of the obsecne publications branch have yet been made, but the Metropolitan police have given assurances that its work will continue whatever the recommendations of the current headquarters and specialist units' review.

Escort and Custody Services

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are currently on court escort and custody service in the Metropolitan police district; and how many staff will be on this service when Securicor is operating all of this service in July 1995.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 29 June 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 5 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of staff currently employed on the court escort and custody service in the Metropolitan Police area and the number of staff who will be employed on this service when Securicor are operating the whole of it from July 1995.

It is not possible to make a simple comparison of this kind because of the difficulty of comparing like with like. The service has hitherto been provided by the Metropolitan Police and Prison Service but not by staff exclusively dedicated to it. Therefore, calculating the overall resources devoted to the work was difficult. To overcome this problem the number of staff so employed was calculated on the basis of full time equivalent posts. It has been calculated that the Metropolitan Police employed 271 full time equivalent police officers and 47 full time civilian staff on court escort and custody work. This excludes the time deployed on the work by more senior officers. Using a similar methodology it was calculated that the Prison Service employed 335 full time equivalent prison officers. These figures exclude time spent by drivers of private hire vehicles, where these are used for escorting.

These staffing levels reflected the level of activity in the 1992-93 financial year. Since April 1993 there has been a 25 per cent. increase in the remand population and this would have resulted in an increase in staff time utilized had the police and Prison Service continued to provide the service.

Securicor intend to employ 815 uniformed staff, consisting of 738 basic grade prisoner custody officers and 77 supervisors. This figure includes vehicle drivers who are certificated prisoner custody officers and who will be carrying out escort duties at court.

The number of staff to be employed by Securicor reflects the increasing number of remand prisoner movements to and from court for which they will be responsible.

The cost of the contract over five years is £96 million or just under £22 million, exclusive of VAT, for a fully operational year. This compares with an estimated annual cost under the previous arrangements of approximately £28 million.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what decisions his Department has taken in respect of TECs over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement with TECs over the same period.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 30 June 1994]: Officials from the Home Office and United Kingdom Passport Agency have had a number of meetings with representatives of the Central London TEC and Investors In People (UK) Ltd. Passport agency officials have also met the TECs for the areas in which the agency's regional offices are located. There have also been meetings between officials of the Immigration and Nationality Department and the South London TEC; the Fire Service college and Gloucestershire TEC; and the Forensic Science Service with Birmingham TEC. All those meetings have been in connection with the Home Office commitment to the Investors in People—IIP—initiative; none of them has involved particular decisions. In addition, there have been meetings between representatives of a number of Prison Service establishments and their local TECs concerning the development of both staff and prisoner non-vocational qualifications, and steps towards IIP accreditation. In the context of developing local policies to help offenders and ex-offenders to find employment, the Home Office has advised chief probation officers to seek agreements with TECs.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will define the role of the private sector forum on market testing, its terms of reference and the criteria used for issuing invitations to attend;

(2) if he will list the names of the individuals and companies of those invited to attend, and those who actually attended, the January meeting of the private sector forum on market testing;

(3) what safeguards exist to prevent those individuals and companies invited to take part as members of the private sector forum from financial gain from contracting out of Government services as a result of their membership of the forum;

(4) if he will list the names of the individuals and companies of those invited to attend the July meeting of the private sector forum on market testing.

Mr. Waldegrave: The role of the private sector forum is to provide a channel of communication on "Competing for Quality" issues between the private sector, central Departments, and other Departments and agencies.

There are no formal terms of reference. The forum will provide an opportunity for the Government and the private sector to exchange experience on the "Competing for Quality" programme and to identify best practice which could be more widely adopted. No specific contracting opportunities will be discussed, and the forum will not provide a means of redress for companies which have failed to win competitions. Those matters must be discussed between bidders and individual Departments in the normal way. Invitations have been issued to a broad and representative range of those industries participating in the "Competing for Quality" programme.

The meeting in January was called to discuss with contractors and consultants the Government's intentions, as announced in the next steps review in December 1993, to publicise prior options reviews of agencies and to invite views from interested parties. Those present were:

John Allen, BET Group
John Barker, Kleinwort Benson
Richard Benton, Capita Group plc
Norman Biddle, Symonds Facilities Management plc
Mark Call, QDM Limited
Charles Cox, Hoskyns Group plc
Peter Farmer, Ernst and Young
Kit Farrow, Merchant Bank Association
Paul Fuller, Touche Ross
Marc Gillespie, 3i Group plc
Peter Holmes, SEMA Group
Richard Nicholls, Serco Group plc
Francis Plowden, Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte
Elizabeth Ransome, KPMG Peat Marwick
Marwan Rifka, EDS-Scicon
Peter Rowley, Grant Thornton
Steven Unsworth, Price Waterhouse and Co.
Vincent Watts, Andersen Consulting
David van den Woude, Mackwood Finance
Mathew Young, Y&S

Of those companies invited, only Owens Associates was unable to attend. There is no prospect of any of those individuals and companies securing financial gain by virtue of their attendance at the forum. Should any of the companies bid for work under the "Competing for Quality" programme, they will do so under the same competitive conditions as other bidders.

The following private sector representatives are expected to attend the private sector forum on 8 July.

Rod Aldridge, Capita Group
Maggi Bell, Manpower plc
Norman Biddle, Symonds Facilities Management plc
Gerry Bunn, Hunting Aircraft Ltd
Tom Butler, EDS United Kingdom
Charles Cox, Hoskyns plc
Ian Downey, Serco Group plc
John Hall, Business Services Association
Peter Holmes, SEMA Group
John Jack, PROCORD Ltd
Brian Neylan, Securicor Group plc
John Owens, Owens Associates

EDUCATION

Parents Charter, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many copies of the parents charter were distributed in Nottinghamshire; and what was the cost of publication and delivery.

Mr. Robin Squire: Every household in England is receiving a copy of the updated parents charter. Figures provided by the Royal Mail show that some 459,200 copies of the charter are being distributed in Nottinghamshire. The total cost of publication and delivery in that area is approximately £46,000.

EC Councils

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the outcomes of the Council of EC Youth Ministers and the Council of EC Education Ministers held on 6 and 21 June, respectively.

Mr. Boswell: The main item of business for the Council of Youth Ministers was the Commission proposal to extend the "Youth for Europe" programme for a third phase. The programme will continue to support a wide range of exchange-based activities for young people and youth workers in the Community, with an emphasis in the third phase on activities for the disadvantaged. The Council of 6 June reached a common position which the United Kingdom could accept. A budget of 105 million ecu, approximately £82 million, over five years—1995-99—was agreed.

The Council of Education Ministers considered the Commission proposal for an EC education action programme, SOCRATES. Ministers reached a common position on the proposal. A budget of 760 million ecu, approximately £580 million, over five years—1995-99—for the programme was agreed. The programme will amalgamate and expand the existing ERASMUS—European Community action scheme for the mobility of university students—and Lingua programmes and will introduce Community activity at school level for the first time, through support for joint projects undertaken by schools in at least three member states. In addition, the programme will support the education of migrant workers', gipsies' and travellers' children and the dissemination of information about the education systems of member states, as well as trans-national co-operation on the in-service training of teachers, open and distance learning and adult education.

Ministers also agreed conclusions on the cultural and artistic aspects of education and discussed a presidency note on the education of the children of migrant workers.

PRIME MINISTER

Stephan Adolph Kock

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason Stephan Adolph Kock has special branch protection; and what other names he uses or has been known by.

The Prime Minister: It is not in the public interest to disclose whether any person has received official protection or not. There is no ministerial responsibility for names by which Mr. Kock is known or has been known.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from relatives of those killed in Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie on the need to make inquiries about the statements attributed to Youssef Chaabane, accused of murdering a Jordanian diplomat in a Beirut court; and what response Her Majesty's Government have made.

The Prime Minister: The Lord Advocate has received one letter from a relative of a Lockerbie victim, inquiring about the Crown Office response to the statement attributed to Chaabane. She has been told that, although it appears that what Chaabane said was very far from being a claim of responsibility for the bombing of Pan Am 103, the Crown Office will pursue any further investigation which may be necessary.

ENVIRONMENT

Landfill Sites

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the landfill sites licensed by local authorities in the United Kingdom that are situated closer than 200 m to human habitations.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment does not keep records of individual landfill sites. That information can be obtained from the waste regulation authorities. The Department gives guidance, in waste management paper No. 27, on the safeguards required for developments near landfill sites. In addition, planning law requires a local planning authority to consult the relevant waste disposal authority about certain planning applications within 250 m of a waste disposal site.

Brixton City Challenge

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the P and O Property Group in relation to its participation in Brixton city challenge projects.

Mr. Baldry: There have been no such discussions with the P and O Property Group. Brixton city challenge has kept the Department informed of developments.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to produce a definition of hazardous waste for use in the United Kingdom which is consistent with the definitions in the Basle convention; and if he will make a statement on progress towards such a definition.

Mr. Atkins: The hazardous waste directive, 91/689/EEC, defines hazardous waste, inter alia, as waste featuring on a list to be drawn up by reference to the annexes to the directive. The annexes are similar to annexes included in the Basle convention. The Council is likely to consider the list in the autumn. The probable revised implementation date for the directive is July 1995.

Water Byelaws

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his proposals for taking action on the replacement of water byelaws by regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It is intended to issue a consultation paper which considers the scope, format and enforcement of provisions to replace the water byelaws during the summer.

Lavatory Cisterns

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from the British Bathroom Council in respect of the retention of byelaws relating to siphons and overflows in lavatory cisterns.

Mr. Atkins: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for the construction industry was briefed on that matter on 16 June at one of his regular fortnightly meetings with the construction industry.

Listed Churches

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he applies in deciding whether to hold a non-statutory public inquiry when notified by the Church Commissioners that they propose to demolish a listed church where reasoned objections to the proposal are given by English Heritage, the Advisory Board for Redundant Churches, the local planning authority or a national amenity society.

Mr. Baldry: Each case is considered on its merits in the light of the information supplied by the Church Commissioners, the views of the Advisory Board for Redundant Churches and English Heritage, and any representations made by local authorities or other interested parties.

Construction Industry

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information known to his Department as to the likely date for completion of the European standardisation programme as it affects the construction industry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Some 2,700 European standards for construction material are currently in preparation by the European Committee for Standardisation. I expect the first harmonised standards to be available early next year and the major part of the current programme to be completed by the end of 1997.

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has in relation to likely increased activity in the construction industry in 1994 as it affects slate products; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Deliveries of slate in the first quarter of 1994 were 11 per cent. higher than in the previous three months and 21 per cent. more than during the same period a year ago. This reflects the recent improvements in the volume of new construction orders. My Department's consultations with the construction industry indicate that a period of modest but sustained growth is expected. The slate industry is well placed to take advantage of that recovery.

Council Tax Banding Appeals

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by council tax collection authority area, the number of outstanding banding appeal cases and the proportion that they represent of all liable properties in that area, as at 1 April.

Mr. Curry: I am placing in the Library a list that shows, for each billing authority in England, the number of outstanding council tax banding appeals as at 31 March 1994 and the percentage of dwellings in each area this represents.

Tributyl Tin

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration has been given to extending the ban on the use of tributyl tin on small craft to include all vessels.

Mr. Atkins: Tributyl tin use on large vessels is an international concern which is being addressed by the marine environment protection Committee of the International Maritime Organisation. Members agreed in 1990 to consider appropriate ways of prohibiting totally, in the future, the use of tributyl tin compounds in anti-fouling paints for ships and the need for this was confirmed at the intermediate ministerial meeting of the North Sea Conference in December 1993. At the March 1994 meeting of the MEPC, however, the Committee recognised that at the present time alternative systems were not available whose cost could be justified by the benefits.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what measures are being taken to protect marine wildlife from the effects of tributyl tin;

(2) what plans the Government have to restrict the use of tributyl tin.

Mr. Atkins: Controls introduced in the United Kingdom in 1987 preventing the use of anti-foulants containing tributyl tin compounds on small boats and aquaculture equipment have resulted in significant improvements in water quality. Monitoring suggests that even the most sensitive species, the dogwhelk, is beginning to recover in many areas. Dockyard operations involving removal and application of anti-fouling paints containing tributyl tin compounds will become subject to integrated pollution control and require authorisation by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution from 1995.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been carried out on the effects of tributyl tin on shellfish and marine wildlife.

Mr. Atkins: The Government have undertaken a substantial amount of work since 1982 on the effects of tributyl tin compounds used in anti-foulants, both within their own laboratories and through contracts with the Natural Environment Research Council and other organisations. Initially, the research was aimed mainly at establishing the nature and extent of toxic effects in non-target organisms and the results justified the regulation of anti-foulants containing tributyl tin compounds in 1987. Subsequent research has monitored the effectiveness of the regulations by assessing levels of contamination in, and the recovery of, commercially important shellfish and other components of the marine ecosystem including the dogwhelk, the most sensitive species.

Slate

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department is planning in 1994 to limit imports of inferior quality slate; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: It is not appropriate to limit imports of slate products directly. However, slate used in the United Kingdom should be suitable for our climatic and atmospheric conditions as well as for their specified purpose. The appropriate requirements are set out in a British standard, BS680, satisfaction of which will ensure compliance with building regulations where applicable. My Department is seeking to ensure that the benefits of the British standard are carried over into harmonised European standards.

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures of export assistance his Department will undertake in 1994 to help the slate industry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: In conjunction with the DTI, my Department maintains building materials exports task forces for France, Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands, the Nordic countries and North America. My Ministerial colleagues and I plan to have taken export missions to eight countries this year. All those activities are open to the United Kingdom slate industry. I would be happy for them to discuss any specific needs with my officials.

Canada Geese

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations underlay the issue of licences for the killing of Canada geese in London parks; which parks these licences are valid for; and what methods are permitted.

Mr. Atkins: Section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 provides that licences to control birds may be issued for reasons which include conserving wild birds, preserving public health or public safety. It was for these reasons that licences have been issued for the control of Canada geese numbers in London parks. Information that would identify the applicant for a licence is normally regarded as confidential. Licences provide that birds may be killed humanely using any method not prohibited by the 1981 Act.

Ecolabelling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set out the evidence which led the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board to arrive at the conclusion that no other EU country considers animal testing should be part of ecolabelling; and if he will list all those EU members who have taken a public position on this issue;

(2) what factors led the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board to conclude that there is no basis for agreement in the United Kingdom about including animal testing in ecolabelling; what percentage of the organisations consulted by the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board on this issue were not environmental or animal welfare groups; and what percentage of the organisations consulted were opposed to inclusion of animal welfare in ecolabelling.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board was established under the European Communities Act 1972 to administer and promote the EC ecolabelling scheme in the United Kingdom. These questions are matters for the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board and I have, therefore, asked the board to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by his Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 29 June 1994]: As at March 1994, the total cost of external consultancy fees paid by the Department and its agencies in relation to market testing amounted to approximately £1,177,000.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 4 July 1994]: My Department is committed by its green housekeeping policy statement to preserve natural resources and so, where possible, press notices are sent to media outlets by electronic mail. Those hard copies which are required and all written answers are printed on recycled paper with the exception of the press release header page which is printed on paper from managed forests.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration has been given to the implications of the publication by the United States Department of Energy on 27 June of details of the use of United Kingdom origin reactor grade plutonium in a nuclear test explosion in 1962, on Her Majesty's Government's policy of not commenting on the details of any nuclear weapons tests which may have been carried out.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 4 July 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement, Official Report, 4 July, column 82.

Fire Consultants

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last consulted with the Association of Professional Fire Consultants.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 4 July 1994]: My Department has become aware only recently of the Association of Professional Fire Consultants. The association made representations to the inter-departmental scrutiny on fire legislation and enforcement. The association will be included in any future consultation on building regulation fire matters.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory basis.

Sir John Wheeler: A list of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments which have a statutory basis is as follows:

Advisory Committee of the Therapeutic Professions Allied to Medicine
Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland
Central Dental Advisory Committee
Central Medical Advisory Committee
Central Nursing Advisory Committee
Central Personal Social Services Advisory Committee
Central Pharmaceutical Advisory Committee
Clinical Engineering and Medical Physics Services Advisory Committee
Clinical Imaging Services Advisory Committee
Committees for the Employment of Disabled People
Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board for Northern Ireland
Distinction and Meritorious Service Awards Committee
Drainage Council for Northern Ireland
Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland
Laboratory Services Advisory Committee
Northern Ireland Water Council (NIWC)
Poisons Board
Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights (SACHR)
Statistics Advisory Committee

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult prior to legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Sir John Wheeler: The Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights is consulted when legislative proposals affecting human rights are published; a formal response by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is issued when the Commission's annual report is laid before Parliament.

The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland is required to consult the Drainage Council for Northern Ireland before its legislation proposals. However, it is not required to publish its response to any advice supplied by the council.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports;

(2) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested can be obtained from the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1993", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Sir John Wheeler: The Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland is required to publish its final recommendations, which are laid before Parliament by the Secretary of State. The Northern Ireland Higher Education Council and the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights are each required to produce an annual report, which will ensure that the outcome of the advice to Government is made widely available.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Sir John Wheeler: Only one advisory body has been set up by the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993"—the Geological Survey of Northern Ireland Advisory Panel.

Police Authority

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements have been made for the appointment of a new Police Authority for Northern Ireland following the expiry of the term of office of the previous authority on 28 June; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have appointed Mr. David Cook as chairman, Mr. Pat Armstrong CBE as vice-chairman and 18 members of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, for a term of three years from 29 June 1994. In making the appointments I have, as required by statute, consulted organisations and persons representative of the community in Northern Ireland. I welcome the positive response that was made by almost all those consulted. As a result, the authority's members are drawn from a wide cross-section of the community, including the district councils, voluntary organisations, agriculture, industry and commerce. Continuity is provided by the reappointment of many individuals for a second term.

The police authority has a vital task to perform in securing the maintenance of an adequate and efficient police force. It also has a very important role to play in enhancing the relationship between the police and the public whom it serves. The authority has the additional challenge of helping to develop new structures for policing in Northern Ireland. I believe it will make a significant contribution in all those sectors.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Wernher Rey

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches have been made to him by the Swiss authorities in relation to Mr. Wernher Rey and the affairs of Omni Corporation, Inspectorate AG and related companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that the Swiss authorities contacted our embassy in Berne in 1991, to inquire about Mr. Rey's nationality. I am not aware of any other approaches.

Nigeria

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the inauguration by the Nigerian authorities of a National Constitutional Conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following the inauguration of the National Constitutional Conference in Nigeria on 27 June, proceedings were adjourned until 11 July. We look forward to expressions of intent by the Nigerian authorities being translated into real progress towards civilian rule.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the recommendations of the Commissioner for Social Affairs as contained in his communication on immigration and asylum to the European Parliament and the Council 1994 that the member states ratify the international convention for the protection of rights of all migrant workers and members of their families, adopted by the United Nations on 18 December 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

The Government deposited their explanatory memorandum on the communication on 25 March. We have considered this convention carefully, but are unable to sign it, as it goes beyond our existing international commitments on access to labour markets and measures necessary to secure the interests of migrants working here.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 523, which foreign states the Sudanese Government have accused of being behind the plot in which the former President Sadiq al-Mahdi is alleged to have been involved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The officially controlled Sudanese media have referred to foreign states and intelligence agencies, but have not provided more specific details.

China

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he gives to United Kingdom business men, travellers and tourists who are considering flying internally in China.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: British nationals are advised of those internal Chinese airlines which are believed to meet international standards of maintenance. It is for the traveller to decide which air carrier to use.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitments of (a) troops and (b) logistical support have been made by countries supporting the French-led United Nations initiative in Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: By 30 June, Senegal had contributed 40 troops to the French-led intervention force in Rwanda. A medical team from Mauritania, 20 observers from Egypt, 100 troops from Guinea Bissau and a Belgian military liaison officer are also expected to arrive shortly.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Western European Union role in supporting Operation Turquoise in Rwanda; and what has been achieved so far.

Mr. Heathcoat Amory: A number of WEU member states, including the United Kingdom, have expressed their readiness to assist and support the French humanitarian operation in Rwanda, primarily through the provision of logistic resources, which might be co-ordinated through the WEU, and humanitarian assistance. The operation is proceeding on the ground, with French troops evacuating civilians from both ethnic communities caught up in the fighting and offering protection to Tutsi refugees near the Zaire border.

Holland

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relationship with the Netherlands; what ministerial visits have taken place to Holland in the past 12 months; what bilateral trade initiatives and contracts the United Kingdom has with that country; and how many official Dutch visits have been made to the United Kingdom in the past year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom enjoys excellent relations with the Netherlands. In the past 12 months, the following ministerial visits have taken place to the Netherlands: the Secretary of State for Defence, the Secretary of State for Employment, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, the Under-Secretary of State for Education, the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland and the Under-Secretary of State for Health. Trade between the two countries last year totalled over £15·8 billion. The Netherlands is the United Kingdom's fourth largest market. There have been a number of visits by Dutch Ministers over this period.

Colombia

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Colombian authorities with regard to political disappearances and killings in Colombia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We are in regular touch with the Colombian Government on human rights. I raised our concerns with President Gaviria during the President's visit to London in July last year. They were also discussed when the Prime Minister met the President. I repeated our concerns during my visit to Colombia in January.

Kuwait

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government of Iraq is co-operating with the Red Cross over Kuwaiti and other prisoners held in Iraqi prisons; and what representations he has made on this matter.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The International Committee of the Red Cross chaired a meeting of the tripartite commission—coalition countries, Iraq and the ICRC—in Geneva on 1 July during which the Iraqi delegation gave its initial response to 71 out of the 609 inquiry files passed to Iraq by the ICRC over 18 months ago. We are demanding that Iraq offer information on the other files very soon. If substantive progress is not made, this matter may have to be referred to the Security Council for further action. A further meeting will be held in two months' time to review progress. We raise the plight of Kuwaiti and other missing persons at the United Nations at every possible opportunity, for example when the Security Council last reviewed sanctions against Iraq on 17 May.

Mercenaries

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are currently known to be actively involved in foreign conflicts as mercenaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no figures available for the numbers of British citizens involved in foreign conflicts as mercenaries. The Government have no control over private citizens going overseas. The recruitment of mercenaries in this country is in some cases unlawful. If any evidence came to light that British citizens recruited as mercenaries were engaged in illegal activities, that evidence would be referred to the relevant authorities.

British Workers Abroad

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom citizens under the age of 25 years are currently known to be working abroad in part-time jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government do not maintain records of British nationals under the age of 25 who are in part-time employment abroad.

Violent Crime

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom citizens were victims of violent crime while being abroad in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1993 there were 194 cases of violent crime abroad against British nationals notified to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The crimes included homicide, rape, assault and kidnap.

Oeno (Rats)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has received from Dr. M. de L. Brooke of the department of zoology at Cambridge university for the removal of rats from Oeno in the Pitcairn Islands group; and what action he is taking.

Mr. Goodlad: Dr. Brooke wrote to me on 17 June with a proposal for the eradication of rats from Oeno island, at an estimated cost of £47,500. We will consider this proposal carefully in the context of the management plan we are drawing up for the neighbouring island of Henderson, and plan to discuss it further with Dr. Brooke.

Mrs. Rekhmat Bibi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for the application by Mrs. Rekhmat Bibi—ref. V94/01052—to the British high commission in Islamabad to visit the United Kingdom to be urgently reconsidered on the basis of correspondence from Bradford law centre forwarded to him by the hon. Member for Bradford, West.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The documents referred to have not yet been received in my office. I have however asked the entry clearance officer at the high commission in Islamabad to let me have a report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the draft comprehensive test ban treaty tabled by the Australian Government in Geneva on 31 March.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: On 31 March, the Australian Government put forward a resource paper, in the form of a draft comprehensive test ban treaty, to aid the work of the nuclear test ban ad hoc committee. This resource paper contains interesting and useful ideas.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the likely duration of negotiations for a comprehensive test ban treaty after the first two sessions of talks at the conference on disarmament; and if he will make a statement on the issues remaining to be resolved.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There has been good progress in the second session of the comprehensive test ban treaty negotiations. We hope that similar progress can be made during the final 1994 session of the conference on disarmament from 25 July to 7 September. It is difficult, however, to assess how much longer the negotiating process is likely to take. The CTB delegations will agree to the treaty as a whole, rather than in sections. Major issues on which negotiations are likely to focus include verification, the organisation, duration, scope, and entry into force.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress being made towards a comprehensive test ban treaty at the conference on disarmament in Geneva.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There has been good progress in the second session of the comprehensive test ban treaty negotiations. Delegations have shown a strong commitment to moving forward towards agreement on an effective, verifiable CTB. The United Kingdom team has been fully involved in the debate, and has made valuable contributions to the work completed during this session. In particular, the contribution by the United Kingdom friend of the chair in the verification working group has been warmly welcomed.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of progress towards preparing a draft comprehensive test ban treaty by the two working groups of the conference on disarmament's ad hoc committee on a nuclear test ban.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The two working groups have made excellent progress. The working group on verification has conducted intensive discussions on the various monitoring techniques which might be deployed in an international verification system. The working group on legal and institutional issues has completed the first or second readings of all main draft articles. Both working groups have produced compilations of draft treaty text to be used as the basis of negotiations in the next session.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the chair of the ad hoc committee on a nuclear test ban treaty at the conference on disarmament in Geneva had not presented an official draft treaty before the end of the second session; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The chairman of the ad hoc group on a nuclear test ban has decided that the composite texts produced by the two working groups—on verification and on legal and institutional issues—should be put forward for the next session as the basis for negotiations. We welcome Ambassador Marin-Bosch's pragmatic attitude in promoting the committee's efforts to develop these composite texts into a rolling text.

Iran

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response was given to an Iranian Government representative's complaints about items concerning the Mashad bombing, broadcast by Spectrum Radio's Persian programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Iranian authorities have told us that they believe that Spectrum Radio's Persian programme is broadcasting subversive material on behalf of the Iranian opposition group, the Mojahedin-e Khalq —MKO. They have not complained about any specific broadcast. We have replied that any organisation enjoys freedom of speech in the United Kingdom as long as it acts within the law. Any breach of the terms and conditions of the broadcasting licence would be a matter for the Radio Authority, which is investigating a separate complaint. We do not support the MKO. We condemn the terrorist attack on the Mashad mosque.

Cyprus

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is Her Majesty's Government's policy that the Cyprus problem must be resolved before the admission of Cyprus to full membership of the European Community.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It would be difficult for Cyprus to accede if the four freedoms—free movement of people, goods, services and capital—were not in force throughout the island, but the Council has confirmed that Cyprus is eligible for European Union membership and the next phase of enlargement will involve Cyprus. The Council will review the situation in January 1995.

Hong Kong

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the election of Mr. John Swaine as President of the Hong Kong Legislative Council on 19 February 1993.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 1 July 1994]: Mr. John Swaine was elected unopposed as President of the Hong Kong Legislative Council on 19 February 1993. Although Mr. Swaine's election took place before all the residual formalities relating to the Hong Kong Letters Patent 1992 and the Hong Kong Additional Instructions 1992 had been completed, we know of no act performed by Mr. Swaine which was invalid as a result of this error.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the errors in the procedural steps in respect of local laws enacted in Hong Kong in 1992 and 1993 including the two budgets; and if he will introduce legislation to rectify those errors.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 1 July 1994]: The Hong Kong Letters Patent 1992 and the Hong Kong Additional Instructions 1992 were published in the Hong Kong Gazette before residual formalities relating to them were completed. This should have no effect on the validity of anything done in Hong Kong before or after the formalities had been completed, but we are considering whether any further action is necessary to remove doubt in this matter.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what date Her Majesty sealed the amendments to the Hong Kong Additional Instructions 1992 and the Hong Kong Letters Patent 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 1 July 1994]: The Hong Kong Letters Patent 1992 were sealed on 15 April 1993 and the Hong Kong Additional Instructions 1992 were signed by Her Majesty on 24 March 1993.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the reasons for the legal formalities not being completed prior to the enactment of the Hong Kong Letters Patent 1992 and the Hong Kong Additional Instruction 1992.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 1 July 1994]: As a result of a clerical error, the Hong Kong Letters Patent 1992 and the Hong Kong Additional Instructions 1992 were gazetted and brought into force in Hong Kong before the residual formalities had been completed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions for cruelty to livestock were brough in each year since 1985; and how many, in each year, were brought by (a) the Government and (b) the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Mr. Soames: The number of prosecutions for cruelty to livestock in England and Wales taken by my Department and the Welsh Office between 1985 and 1993 under the Protection of Animals Acts 1911 to 1988 and the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 are as follows:

	Number
1985	2
1986	6
1987	8
1988	6
1989	4
1990	5

1991	0
1993	2

Prosecutions may also be taken by other parties such as local authorities and the RSPCA. Comprehensive figures on the numbers of such prosecutions are not available.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers in England received arable area payments greater than (a) £100,000, (b) £250,000, (c) £500,000 and (d) £1,000,000 in the last year for which the information is available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Under the integrated administration and control system, applicants must make a single application covering all the land which they farm and some applications cover a number of holdings which are farmed quite separately on a day-to-day basis. The information given below relates to IACS applications, rather than to individual farmers.

Arable Area Payments Scheme: 1992-93

Size Band	Number of Payments
from £1,000,000 to £249,999	599
from £250,000 to £499,999	45
from £500,000 upwards[1]	7

[1] It is not possible to identify separately the number of payments between £500,999 and £100,000 and the number over £1,000,000 for reasons of confidentiality.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of her Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if she will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Jack: The following surveys of views, opinions and attitudes of staff have been carried out within the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and its agencies during the last two years. Summaries of findings made available to staff will be placed in the Library.

Central Veterinary Laboratories—Repertory Grid Survey (assessment of the views of staff on management styles), summer 1993[1]
Intervention Board—Staff Attitude Survey, November 1992
Central Science Laboratories—Survey of the Quality of Administrative Services, summer 1992

[1] A summary is being produced for staff, which will be placed in the Library when ready.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 391, when she expects the 1992 CAP reform agreement to be fully implemented; what benefit of that reform deal has been experienced by consumers in food prices to date; what estimates she has of the costs of the CAP to the consumer in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993; what foodstuffs she expects will cost consumers less; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 4 July 1994]: The 1992 CAP reforms will be fully implemented by the end of the 1995-96 marketing years for those commodities affected. The reforms will result in particular in a reduction in the support prices for cereals and beef of around 35 per cent. and 15 per cent. respectively. Overall, the effect of CAP reform will be to reduce support prices by an amount equivalent to 2 per cent. of retail food prices, the effect being spread over a number of years. However, movements in retail food prices are influenced by a wide range of factors and it is not possible to isolate the impact of any single factor over a particular period.

Estimates of the total cost of the CAP to consumers are not possible without making speculative assumptions about current levels of world prices and the changes in these prices if present policies were abandoned.

SCOTLAND

Nursery Schools

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which rating authorities in Scotland use their discretionary powers to reduce rates leviable on private sector nursery schools.

Mr. Stewart: Details of the policies of individual rating authorities with regard to their granting of discretionary rating relief are not held centrally. However, if a private sector nursery school has charitable status it will be eligible for mandatory rates relief of 80 per cent. in accordance with section 4 of the Local Government (Financial Provisions Etc.) (Scotland) Act 1962, as amended.

Council Tax

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by council tax collection authority area, the number of outstanding banding appeal cases and the proportion they represent of all liable properties in that area, as at 1 April.

Mr. Stewart: The table provides the available information, which relates to all classes of proposal to change the valuation list made to assessors and subsequent appeals.

	Number of properties liable for Council Tax (i)	Proposals/appeals still to be dealt with at 31 March 1994
		Number	As percentage of liable properties

Water Authorities

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 299, what obligation the proposed new water authorities will be under to offer a 25 per cent. single person discount when they charge for their services.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to my second reply to him of 15 June 1994, Official Report, column 469.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory basis;

(2) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports;

(3) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to the Government;

(4) if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993";

(5) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament;

(6) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Lang: The readily available information on advisory bodies sponsored by my Department is contained in the Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies 1993", copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House. The next edition of "Public Bodies", with updated information, will be published in December. Other information on the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the take-up of the enterprise allowance scheme in Fife over the last three years; and what was (a) the number and (b) the total value of awards made in each six-month period.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 June 1994]: Questions relating to the take-up of the enterprise allowance scheme in Fife are a matter for Scottish Enterprise. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Seabird Monitoring Programme

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what support will be provided to the long-term seabird monitoring programme on the Isle of May.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 4 July 1994]: The Institute for Terrestrial Ecology will carry out seabird monitoring on the Isle of May this year on behalf of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. The value of the contract is £9,300. In addition, Scottish Natural Heritage, which owns and manages the island as a national nature reserve, carries out its own monitoring work on the island and has commissioned further monitoring projects to the value of £7,500. Decisions on monitoring projects in future years are matters for Scottish Natural Heritage and the JNCC.

Fox Hunts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of policing fox hunts in each chief constabulary in Scotland during each financial year since 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 July 1994]: Central Scotland police, Grampian, Northern constabulary and Tayside police have not incurred any expense in policing fox hunts since 1990. Details relating to costs incurred by Fife constabulary and Strathclyde police are not readily available. The estimated costs for policing this activity by Dumfries and Galloway constabulary and Lothian and Borders police are as follows:

Financial Year Costs

	1990-91 £	1991-92 £	1992-93 £	1993-94 £
Dumfries and Galloway Constabulary	464·00	476·00	482·00	690·00
Lothian and Borders Police	5,807·00	2,496·00	2,636·00	2,673·00

Scottish Homes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the identifiable (a) capital and (b) revenue or current expenditure by Scottish Homes by regional council electoral division, or on any other geographical basis on which the data are collated or accounted, in each year since 1990; how much in both expenditure categories is (i) legally committed and (ii) planned for 1994-95 and 1995-96; what is the pro rata expenditure in each category for each regional council electoral division, expressed as a percentage of the total capital and revenue budgets measured against their respective populations; if he will rank the regional council electoral divisions in descending order by level of expenditure in both categories; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes does not hold records by regional council electoral division. The information which is readily available is shown in the table and groups district council areas together according to Scottish Homes administrative districts. The figures show capital expenditure on development funding; revenue grants amount to only £6·5 million across Scotland in 1994-95. The programme for 1995-96 will not be decided until after my right hon. Friend announces his expenditure plans later this year.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list for the last five financial years the Department of Transport's staff-in-post figures broken down by grade;

(2) if he will place in the Library the latest staff-in-post figures broken down by grade for each Department of Transport office, including executive agencies.

Mr. Norris: I am placing copies of the information requested in the Library.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute a recruitment ban in his Department and its agencies immediately.

Mr. Norris: No.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for the Manchester travel-to-work area the numbers of (a) casuals and (b) fixed-term appointments in each Department of Transport office.

Mr. Norris: The Department and its agencies have 51 offices in the north-west region, which includes the Manchester travel-to-work area. At present, a total of 35 casual staff are employed at 15 of those offices, and five staff are employed on fixed-term appointments. Details are as follows:

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Norris: The Department has completed two such surveys over the past two years. A third is now under way. The findings are confidential to management and staff so as to avoid drawing civil servants into areas of political controversy. In 1991, the National Audit Office commissioned a survey of staff attitudes within the Department's Vehicle Inspectorate, which was published. A copy will be placed in the Library.

M25

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give by category the total number of residential dwellings, commercial premises and other categories of buildings purchased by his Department within the vicinity of the M25 between junctions 12 and 8 over the last five years, together with the itemised costs and the powers by which those purchases were made.

Mr. Key: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the southern section of the M25 from the Dartford crossing to the M4 interchange will be completely free from road works.

Mr. Key [holding answer 28 June 1994]: This question relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Sir Keith Speed, dated 30 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when the southern section of the M25 would be completely free from road works.

We have a major rolling programme for widening the M25 between Junctions 3 and 11 on the southern section to dual four lanes without the existing highway boundary. This will take several years to complete. Timing will depend on the availability of funds and the competing demands of other parts of the Road Programme, so I cannot forecast at present exactly when this programme will be finished.

We are also considering the provision of capacity beyond dual four lanes for the section of M25 from Junction 10 to the M4 (and beyond). Work on this is dependent on the completion of statutory procedures as well as the availability of funds.

In addition, there will be a need for maintenance works but wherever possible these will be incorporated in the widening schemes to minimise disruption to traffic.

Bridgeworks are also planned between now and the turn of the century. All bridges are being assessed under the assessment and strengthening programme post-tensioned bridges are also being assessed and inspected under the Special Inspection programme which is being conducted nationwide. It is not therefore possible to say at present what strengthening and/or replacement works will be required for these structures.

Every effort is made to keep disruption to a minimum. Experience has shown that limiting the length of individual road works to relatively short sections is less disruptive to traffic than carrying out works over a long distance at one time. This will mean, however, that road works will be taking place on the southern section of the M25 for a longer period than if we had carried out all the works together.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under the citizens charter how much compensation will be paid to the passengers stranded at Royston railway station at 12.30 am on Sunday 19 June, on their way from King's Cross to Cambridge; and how many passengers were affected.

Mr. Freeman: Under the passengers charter, BR offers compensation to the value of 20 per cent. or more of the ticket price paid if passengers are delayed for more than an hour. I understand that 30 passengers have so far requested compensation for the delay at Royston on 19 June and over £500 in compensation has been paid. I am not aware of the number of passengers affected by the delay.

Signal Box Operators

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the criteria for allowing people to operate signal boxes; and what previous experience of specific lines is required by operators of signal boxes on those lines.

Mr. Freeman: There are no statutory criteria against which competence to operate signalling equipment is to be judged. However, the Health and Safety Executive's guidance on the Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994 recommends that the employer should be satisfied that the employees have appropriate training, personal qualities, fitness and qualifications to do the work in question without undue risk to themselves or others and that they are fully aware of the nature of the work. HM railway inspectorate has sampled the effectiveness of the selection process applied by Railtrack and is satisfied that Railtrack is taking the necessary steps to ensure competence. HMRI is continuing to monitor the situation.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the locations at which British Rail staff who do not hold the required certificate of competence operated signal boxes on 22 June.

Mr. Freeman: The Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994 stipulate that those employed on tasks that are regarded as critical to safety must be competent. Certification of competence is not a statutory requirement under the regulations. All staff operating in signal boxes have been assessed and confirmed competent by Railtrack. HM railway inspectorate has sampled the effectiveness of that process and is satisfied that Railtrack is taking the necessary steps to ensure competence. HMRI is continuing to monitor the situation.

Rail Journey Costs

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of a journey by rail from (a) Hounslow to Waterloo and (b) Richmond to Waterloo (i) off-peak return, (ii) standard rate return and (iii) standard rate single for each year from 1979, at current and 1993 prices.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the performance of the Driving Standards Agency since the appointment of the current chief executive.

Mr. Key: The new chief executive has maintained the continuing gradual improvement in DSA's performance.

Buses

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the number of bus passengers carried and bus-miles worked in each metropolitan area outside London in 1985, 1990 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Freeman: Data collected by the Department cannot be released for individual metropolitan areas for reasons of reliability and confidentiality. Financial year estimates of the total number of local bus journeys made by passengers in the six English metropolitan areas outside London, and the corresponding figures for local bus-km worked, are given below. These have been extracted from tables 1.1 and 2.1 of "Bus and Coach Statistics Great Britain 1992-93", which also present data for Scotland as a whole. A copy of this HMSO publication has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson), of 3 May, Official Report, column 466, and to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), of 26 May, Official Report, column 284, if he will show for each separate invoice supplied to his Department by Dewe Rogerson for advice on his Department's marketing strategy for rail privatisation, (a) the date on which the invoice was received by his Department, (b) the date on which the invoice was paid by his Department and (c) the amount contained in each separate invoice, inclusive of value added tax; whether he has now received the final invoice from Dewe Rogerson; which is the total amount inclusive of value added tax, which his Department will have paid to Dewe Rogerson by the time its contract expires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested in parts (a), (b) and (c) is commercially confidential. Dewe Rogerson's final invoice has not yet been received and it is not therefore possible to provide a figure for the total amount. To date, Dewe Rogerson has been paid £566,000, including VAT, for this advice.

Seat Belts

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he intends to publish the full report and findings of his review of the technical and cost implications of fitting seat belts to all seats in minibuses and coaches; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend intends to publish the conclusions of the review before the summer recess and copies of the relevant papers will be deposited in the Library at that time.

Sir Christopher Foster

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date Sir Christopher Foster was appointed as an adviser to his Department; on what date his employment as an adviser was completed; how much he was paid in total for his work as an adviser to his Department; on what date he was invited to apply for the post of board member of Railtrack; on what date he was appointed a board member of Railtrack; who was responsible for (a) recruiting, (b) interviewing and (c) appointing Sir Christopher Foster as a board member of Railtrack; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Sir Christopher Foster was appointed as special adviser to the Secretary of State from 1 June 1992. He was seconded to the Department from Coopers and Lybrand: the Department reimbursed Coopers and Lybrand at the rate of £5,000 per year, amounting to a total of £7,321·43 plus VAT for the period until his resignation on 16 November 1993. On that date, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that Sir Christopher would be appointed as a non-executive member of the Railtrack board on its incorporation as a British Rail subsidiary company in February 1994. His appointment from 1 April 1994 as a director of Railtrack Group plc as a Government-owned company, was approved by shareholders' decision given by the Secretary of State.

Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) of 22 March, Official Report, column 146, if he will show for all consultants and/or other outside organisations or individuals currently or previously employed by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising, (a) the name of the consultancy, organisation or individual, (b) the length of contract offered to each consultancy, organisation or individual, (c) the total amount inclusive of value added tax paid to date to each consultancy, organisation or individual, (d) the total amount inclusive of value added tax expected to be paid to each consultancy, organisation or individual and (e) the services required by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising from each consultancy, organisation or individual; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The principal external consultants retained by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising, the services which it is supplying, and expenditure on them to date are as follows:

Consultant	Service supplied	Expenditure to 30 June 1994 (£000s exclusive of VAT)
Linklaters and Paines	Legal services	987
Brodies WS	Advice on Scots law	8
KPMG Peat Marwick	Accountancy services	599
Samuel Montagu & Co.	Merchant Bank	200
S and G Warburg & Co.	Advice on rolling stock leasing	73
PJR Ltd.	Recruitment and organisational advice	50

Note: VAT at 17·5 per cent. is payable in addition.

Price Waterhouse and Co., accountancy services, Coopers and Lybrand, accountancy services, and Shandwick Consultants Ltd., marketing advice, have also been retained by Opraf, but no payments have yet been made to them. The amount paid in future to those firms will depend on the work done. All those appointments are terminable not later than 31 March 1995.

In addition, Opraf has 20 employees of its own and 15 seconded staff and uses various external firms for such matters as cleaning and maintenance of its premises, the carrying out of minor repairs, staff training, courier services, printing, and the supply of working lunches.

British Rail

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing (a) the total amount spent centrally or in each separate region by British Rail in 1993-94 on legal advice, together with the name of each firm or individual employed and (b) the total amount budgeted to be spent on legal advice in 1994-95 centrally by British Rail and individually by each train operating unit, together with the name of each firm or individual employed.

Mr. Freeman: This is a management matter for the British Railways Board.

Road Schemes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the unadjusted traffic forecasts and year 1 traffic counts for road schemes opened in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. Key [holding answer 23 June 1994]: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average cost-benefit ratio of road schemes for (a) currently under construction, (b) agreed starts for 1994-95, (c) schemes designated priority 1 in the roads review, (d) schemes designated priority 2, (e) schemes designated longer term in the roads review and (f) schemes abandoned in the roads review.

Mr. Key [holding answer 23 June 1994]: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the cost-benefit ratio for the current active road programmes is 2·2:1.

Rail Accident (Greenock)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the railway inspectorate will begin its investigation into the derailment of the 22.45 hours Wemyss Bay to Glasgow train in Greenock on Saturday, 25 June; if the report of the investigation will contain recommendations concerning (a) improvements in the design and construction of electric multiple units and (b) improve safety procedures; if the report will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 4 July 1994]: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate, HMRI, started a preliminary investigation into the derailment shortly after first light on Sunday 26 June. Strathclyde police, assisted by British Transport police, were conducting a scene-of-crime investigation at that time and subsequently announced that it had become a murder inquiry. I understand that two people have now been charged in connection with the deaths. An inquiry under the Regulation of Railways Act 1871 has not been recommended by the chief inspecting officer of railways, given the cause of the accident. The holding of a fatal accident inquiry is a matter for the Lord Advocate.

The HMRI will continue to assist the police in relation to railway technical matters and is also considering what lessons may be learnt to prevent a recurrence. The crash resistance of new rolling stock has been considerably improved above the standards of the train involved in the accident. I have asked the HMRI to let me know its conclusions and I will write to the hon. Member when I have received this information.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many men were in work in 1991 in each of the districts covered by the valleys initiative; and what his latest estimate is of the number of men unemployed in these districts.

Mr. Redwood: The following districts are wholly or partially in the programme for the valleys area:

Blaenau Gwent
Brecknock
Cynon Valley
Dinefwr
Islwyn
Llanelli
Lliw Valley
Merthyr Tydfil
Neath
Ogwr
Port Talbot
Rhondda
Rhymney Valley
Swansea
Taff Ely
Torfaen

The employment and unemployment data requested are available from the NOMIS database, which can be accessed on-line by House of Commons Library staff.

Careers Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his policies for the careers service.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office published a prospectus on 8 June 1994 setting out arrangements for the provision of the careers service from April 1995. A copy of the prospectus has been placed in the Library of the House.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement about his new apprenticeships initiative with respect to (a) Alyn and Deeside, (b) Clwyd and (c) Wales;

(2) what measures he is adopting to encourage the provision of more apprenticeships.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Some £3·6 million has been allocated to training and enterprise councils in Wales for the implementation of modern engineering apprenticeships in the current financial year. That will support a total of 550 apprenticeship places and contribute to the training of some 1,400 people as specialist workplace trainers. Some £2·2 million of the total is being made available to colleges of further education to buy engineering equipment. Allocations have been made on the basis of TEC areas. North East Wales TEC, which includes Alyn and Deeside within its area, has been allocated 50 apprenticeship places, 112 trainer training places and £225,000 for college equipment.

Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his training for work programme with respect to Alyn and Deeside.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The objective of the training for work programme throughout Wales is to help long-term unemployed people to find jobs and to improve their work-related skills through the provision of appropriate training and structured work activity in line with assessed needs. It is delivered in Alyn and Deeside through North East Wales training and enterprise council.

Home Building

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the total numbers of homes built by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the table.

New dwellings completed

	Local authorities	Housing associations[1]
1989	566	1,663
1990	610	1,685
1991	418	2,463
1992	133	2,459
1993	172	2,849

[1] Excludes acquisitions, rehabilitation and hostel spaces.

Live Animals (Transport)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what measures he has taken since 1990 to ensure that live farm animals being transported to the continent are adequately cared for with respect to (a) horses, (b) cattle, (c) sheep and (d) pigs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy concerning the transportation of live farm animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are actuely aware of the great strength of feeling in this country on animal welfare, and are strongly committed to ensuring that the welfare of animals is properly safeguarded. The Government have strict rules to protect animals exported from this country. Where there has been evidence of infringements, prompt action has been taken to rectify the situation and, where appropriate, offenders have been prosecuted.

The EC directive on the protection of animals in transit sets Community standards for the transportation of all animals over 50 km. It requires animals to be fed, watered and rested at appropriate intervals, not exceeding 24 hours. It also required the European Commission to produce a report and, where appropriate, proposals on certain detailed issues, including feeding and watering intervals, rest periods and maximum journey times. Pending adoption of the measures, member states have been able to apply national rules in those areas, and in the United Kingdom the Government are currently applying a maximum feeding and watering interval of 15 hours for all livestock and 12 hours for poultry. For horses, the directive provides for national rules to remain applicable and our national minimum value arrangements continue; there are no proposals at present which affect this.

At the Agriculture Council meeting on 20 June, proposals representing a significant improvement on those which the Government blocked in December last year were put forward. However, it became clear that further improvements could be made and the Commission has committed itself to bringing forward further proposals on journey limits by 1 July 1995.

Air Quality

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of air quality on the A548 Queensferry to Connah's Quay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Monitoring of air quality in the vicinity of the A548 Queensferry to Connah's Quay is the responsibility of the local district council. I understand that Alyn and Deeside district council carries out regular monitoring in the area and that none of its readings to date have exceeded European guidelines.

Water Quality

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the measures taken designed to improve water quality on the beaches of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Dwr Cymru—Welsh Water—is currently engaged in a £230 million investment programme designed to ensure that all bathing waters in Wales identified under the European bathing water directive consistently meet its mandatory bacteriological standards. There has been a major improvement in the quality of the bathing waters on the Welsh coastline and last year 84 per cent. of identified waters met the standards, compared with 48 per cent. in 1986. The majority of the improvement programme is expected to be completed by 1995, with the remainder due to be completed by the end of 1997.

Council Tax

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by council tax collection authority area, the number of outstanding banding appeal cases and the proportion they represent of all liable properties in that area, as at 1 April.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The position in Wales on 1 April 1994 was as follows:

Billing authority area	Outstanding banding appeal cases	Percentage of liable properties
Aberconwy	892	3·6
Alyn and Deeside	896	3·0

Blood Transfusion Service, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority about the closure of the Dominion arcade blood transfusion centre for plasma donors in Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The decision to close the Dominion arcade blood transfusion centre was taken by the board of the authority following wide consultation with donors. Arrangements have been made for them to use the plasma suite at the blood transfusion service headquarters at Rhydlafar.

DEFENCE

Troop Location

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink), of 23 June 1994, Official Report, columns 247-48, if he is now in a position to announce the location for the second additional infantry battalion; and what other plans he has for Army use of the defence estate.

Mr. Hanley: I have now decided that Oakington barracks, Oakington, which is currently the home of the 1st Battalion the Cheshire Regiment, should be retained as a permanent infantry barracks to cater for the second of the two additional infantry battalions announced on 3 February 1993, Official Report, column 320. The Gurkhas will move from Church Crookham to Elizabeth barracks, Pirbright around the end of 1996, not the end of 1994 as indicated in my previous answer of 23 June 1994, Official Report, columns 247-48. Under current plans, the Black Watch will remain in Pirbright until mid-1996. In addition, we have decided that RAF Hullavington, currently being used as temporary accommodation of 9 Supply Regiment Royal Logistic Corps should be retained in the defence estate for the time being as the home of 9 Supply Regiment RLC which will now not move to Aldershot as previously planned.

Ferranti/ISC

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library those reports he has commissioned or received into the effect on the defence interests of the United Kingdom of the collapse of Ferranti/ISC.

Mr. Aitken: No. It is not my Department's practice to disclose internal papers which contain classified or commercially sensitive information.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list and place in the Library a copy of those memoranda and authorisations from Government Departments which preceded and accompanied the merger of Ferranti and ISC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No. Any advice which my Department offers in connection with proposed mergers is confidential.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those charged with offences relating to the Ferranti/ISC fraud; and if he will list in each case the pleas entered and the sentences imposed.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

Merchant Banks

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which merchant bank is the adviser to his Department; and if he will list all the fees and commissions paid to banks by his Department each year since 1988.

Mr. Hanley: My Department does not employ any one merchant bank as a permanent adviser. In fact, since 1988, only one centrally held record exists for the employment of a merchant bank. This was a contract placed with Kleinwort Benson Investment Trust Ltd. for a project in connection with the contractorisation of the royal dockyards in August 1993. To protect commercial confidentiality, the value of this contract cannot be released. It is likely that a number of other, lower-value contracts will have been placed with banks by subordinate budget holders from time to time during the period in question. The details of such contracts are not held centrally, however, and details could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Puma

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedure was adopted for the contract for Puma modifications; and whether royal naval aircraft yard Fleetlands was invited to tender for any part of the contract.

Mr. Aitken: There have been many contracts for the modification of the Puma helicopter to maintain its operational effectiveness since it entered service. Royal naval aircraft yard—RNAY—Fleetlands, which is part of the naval aircraft repair organisation defence agency, is regularly tasked by my Department with embodiment of modification kits into service aircraft, and consideration has been given to RNAY Fleetlands carrying out such work on the Puma helicopter. Fleetlands is permitted to respond to MOD invitations to tender.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the measures which have been taken to clear the Falkland Islands of mines and other lethal debris of war and the extent to which these measures have succeeded.

Mr. Hanley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 8 February, Official Report, columns 239-40.

Training Flights (Plymouth Airport)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the instructions given to MOD personnel involved in training flights from Plymouth airport in the event of engine failure immediately after take-off.

Mr. Hanley: A pilot can take a number of actions in the event of an engine failure immediately after take-off. If there is sufficient space ahead, the pilot will land on the airfield. If, however, there is insufficient space remaining, the pilot will by that time have gained sufficient height or speed or both to enable him to turn towards a suitable clear area to land or to turn back to the airfield to land. The decision as to which procedure is adopted is a matter for the professional judgment of the pilot at the time of the incident. Experienced aircrew, well versed in the engine failure procedure, are on board all training flights from Plymouth airport. The engine failure procedure is also practised regularly as part of routine flying, with the turn-back procedure normally being practised away from the airfield to reduce noisy disturbance. Over its 30 years operating experience at Plymouth airport, the Royal Navy has maintained an excellent safety record.

Defence Bases

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) details, (b) plans and (c) inventories of defence bases have been supplied to Crown Ridge Industries in (i) 1993 and (ii) 1994.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally. In addition to being available from other sources, details of surplus defence bases are widely disseminated by officials to many companies and individuals. As far as can be ascertained, however, no details, plans or inventories have been supplied to Crownridge Industries with the exception of details of Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn supplied to Mr. R. Philipps in his capacity as a director of Crownridge Industries in 1994.

Bases (Sales)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 443-45, if he will list for each base sold, intended to be sold or currently marketed the date (a) on which the decision to close was made, (b) on which the decision to sell the base was made and (c) on which expressions of interest were first invited.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Royal Navy Armaments Depot, Trecwn

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 27 June, Official Report, column 445, on RNAD Trecwn, on what date the decision was made that no further military use could be found for RNAD Trecwn and that the base should be sold.

Mr. Hanley: As part of my Department's normal procedure concerning redundant land, expressions of interest in RNAD Trecwn from other MOD organisations were sought on 28 February 1992. No firm military requirement for the site was identified however, and details of the site were then circulated to some 25 other Government Departments on 13 July 1992. Again, no interest was shown, and the site was declared surplus to requirements on 1 August 1992.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 445, on the supply since July 1991, of information relating to RNAD Trecwn, if he will list individuals or organisations to whom his Department is aware that details at the facilities in RNAD Trecwn were supplied, together with the month in which the material was supplied.

Mr. Hanley: The individuals and organisations to whom my Department is aware that details of the facilities in RNAD Trecwn were supplied are:

Vacant Married Quarters

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a regional breakdown of the numbers of vacant married quarters at the end of March 1992, 1993 and 1994, with an estimate of the proportion of the total that the figures for each region represent.

Mr. Hanley: The regional breakdown of vacant married quarters at 31 March 1992, 1993 and 1994 and the percentage of the total stock which was vacant is as follows:

Region	31 March 1992	Per cent.	31 March 1993	Per cent.	31 March 1994	Per cent.
Yorkshire	596	11·6	532	9·8	427	7·9
Northern	89	13·6	55	8·7	116	16·4
North West	126	13·7	192	19·1	144	15·1
South East	3,684	12·9	3,326	12·6	3,407	13·2
South West	1,594	12·3	1,985	13·5	2,089	14·3
East Anglia	566	10·6	632	12·1	1,145	21·2
East Midlands	707	17·5	638	16·8	670	18·5
West Midlands	322	11·9	342	12·5	389	14·5
Wales	230	9·5	347	14·5	452	18·1
Scotland	954	14·5	765	11·5	736	11·3
Northern Ireland	497	16·4	372	12·5	307	10·2
Total	9,364	12·9	9,166	12·8	9,882	13·9

Many of these vacant married quarters were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work, held for unit deployments or already allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly. In addition, the following vacant surplus married quarters were in the process of being sold:

Period	Number
31 March 1992	1,889
31 March 1993	1,861
31 March 1994	1,519

Unfortunately, these figures are not maintained in a form which enables them to be readily broken down by regions.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what definition of arts and sports his Department is using to decide resourcing from the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: In accordance with section 23 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, the Arts Council and Sports Council will distribute lottery proceeds for expenditure on or connected with the arts and sport respectively. They are responsible for defining those terms, taking into account their existing charter powers.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will include the National Playing Fields Association and Play Wales as consultees with regard to the distribution of national lottery funds.

Mr. Brooke: In accordance with section 26(5) of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, I and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland consulted the bodies responsible for the distribution of lottery proceeds before giving them policy directions under section 26(1) and (2) of the Act. Those bodies will also be consulted before receiving financial directions under section 26(3) and (4). In relation to applications for lottery funds, it will be for the distributing bodies to decide from whom they should seek advice.

Royal Palaces

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, column 346, how much of the figure given for utilities, salaries and ancillary costs of the occupied royal palaces in 1994-95 is spent on utilities; how much is spent on salaries, and for how many staff; and what ancillary costs are involved.

Mr. Sproat: The £6·469 million to be spent on utilities, salaries and ancillary costs at the occupied palaces is broken down as follows:

Utilities	1·573 million
Salary costs of 149·2 staff	3·331 million
Ancillary costs:
Rates	638,000
Other operational costs eg custody guard service, preparation for official functions etc.	225,000
Furniture and equipment	209,000
Fire branch equipment, uniforms etc.	182,000
Training, stationary, computers, recruitment, minor consultancies	153,000
Garden costs, seeds, vehicle and equipment maintenance etc.	144,000
Craftsmen materials	14,000
Total	6·469 million

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish his estimate of the cost of BBC revenues of a 25 per cent. reduction of television licence fees for all single pensioners living alone in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) England, (c) Scotland, (d) Northern Ireland and (e) Wales.

Mr. Brooke: The estimated cost in lost television licence revenue of introducing a 25 per cent. reduction in televison licences for all single pensioners living alone in the United Kingdom would be £63 million. Separate estimates by country are not available.

Spectrum Radio Persian Programme

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will call for a report from the Radio Authority into allegations of attempted interference by the Iranian Government in the Spectrum Radio Persian programme.

Mr. Brooke: No. Under the Broadcasting Act 1990, independent radio stations are responsible for their own programme content and for observing the terms and conditions of the licences issued to them by the Radio Authority. The authority investigates the written complaints that it receives about programming and advertising on independent radio and publishes a quarterly bulletin.

Regulations

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 May, Official Report, columns 12-13, if he will publish a table listing each of the more than 90 regulations grouping them in the seven main sections; with which Department he is considering each regulation; what is the intended modification to each regulation; and what is the estimated target date for each modification.

Mr. Sproat: I shall write to the hon. Member with a list of the 90 regulations which have been drawn to my attention by the tourism industry. The seven areas identified by my inquiries as being of particular concern to the industry, and the Departments with which I have discussed these areas, are:

Food hygiene:
Department of Health
Fire safety:
Home Office and Department of Trade and Industry
EU Package Travel Directive:
Department of Trade and Industry
Electricity at Work Regulations:
Employment Department
Public entertainment licensing:
Home Office
Signposting to tourist attractions and facilities:
Department of Transport
Price indications:
Department of Trade and Industry and Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

In the case of the electricity at work regulations, fresh guidance has been issued for tourist accommodation businesses and in the case of food hygiene, the Department of Health has proposed an improved set of regulations which have been the subject of a public consultation exercise. Consideration has been given, or is being given, to the other five areas and where appropriate proposals for changes in regulations or for improved guidance will be brought forward in due course.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Sproat: There are no advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals, and none to whose advice the Government must publish a response.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Sproat: None of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department is required to publish the advice that it gives to Government.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament.

Mr. Sproat: My Department sponsors only one advisory non-departmental public body, the Royal Fine Art Commission. This produces an annual report, although there is no requirement for it to do so or to lay it before Parliament. The report for the 1993 calendar year has just been published and presented to Parliament.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Sproat: No advisory non-departmental public bodies have been set up under the sponsorship of my Department since publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Sproat: My Department sponsors only one advisory non-departmental public body, the Royal Fine Art Commission. It produces an annual report, although there is no requirement for it to do so. The report for the 1993 calendar year has just been published and presented to Parliament.

Tourism

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many of his Department's officials are engaged in duties relating to tourism; and what is the total salary bill for their employment.

Mr. Sproat: There are currently 18 staff in my Department directly engaged in duties relating to tourism; including one who works part time. The estimated total salary bill for their employment in the current financial year is £476,363.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Sproat: No surveys of this type have been conducted within the Department of National Heritage.

Stolen Cultural Property

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he has taken to prevent stolen antiquities, illegally removed from their country of origin, free access into the United Kingdom; what taxes and import duties are applied to imported antiquities; what investigations were made regarding the legality of the 12-tonne load of antiquities recently taken from an ancient site in Lebanon and sent to a London dealer via Larnaca and Ipswich; and if he will ratify the 1970 UNESCO convention on the means of prohibiting and preventing illicit import, exportation and transfer of cultural property.

Mr. Brooke: The restriction of imports into the United Kingdom is the responsibility of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Taxes and import duties applied to imported antiquities are also a matter for the Chancellor, although there are no import duties at the moment. Any investigation of stolen antiquities in London would be for the police to take forward. In response to our inquiries, neither the Metropolitan police nor the antiquities trade has any knowledge of the Lebanese objects. The Government have no plans to ratify the 1970 UNESCO convention.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he took to prevent the sale at Sotheby of the 17 Century Joachim Wtewal painting, stolen from the east German Schloss museum; if he will condemn Switzerland for giving clear title to stolen goods kept in its vaults for five years; and if he supports European Union regulations on the control of the illegal export of cultural property.

Mr. Brooke: I have no powers to intervene in the sale of alleged stolen objects. This is a matter for the police. The laws governing title to stolen goods vary from country to country and I do not think it would be appropriate for me to comment on those in force in any particular state. I fully support the principles of the European Community directive on the return of cultural objects unlawfully removed from the territory of a member state. That has been implemented via a statutory instrument under the European Communities Act 1972, and entered into force on 2 March 1994.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 29 June 1994]: With regard to external consultants' reports on market testing, as in other matters, my Department follows the principles set out in the code of practice on access to Government information.

Information which could prejudice negotiations or the effective conduct of commercial and contractual activities would not be published.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by his Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 29 June 1994]: Since it was established in April 1992, my Department and its two agencies have to date spent approximately £66,000 on consultancy relating to market testing. Most of this sum was in connection with a scoping study on the strategic contracting out of central services.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 4 July 1994]: My Department uses recycled paper wherever possible and, following unsuccessful tests of samples of recycled paper for computer printing and photocopying, continues to search the market for improved products which would enable items such as press releases and written answers to be produced on such paper.

Amusement Machines

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to make a decision on allowing amusement-with-prizes machines in betting offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

This is under review. Other matters concerning deregulation of betting shops are receiving attention at present. We will then turn to the question of amusement-with-prizes machines in betting shops, but that would require primary legislation and it is not expected that there would be any changes to the law in the short term. However, we will review the policy and announce our conclusions in due course.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Hague: The Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory basis; and if he will list them.

Mr. Hague: The Social Security Advisory Committee, the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board, the Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions and the war pensions committees.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament; and if he will list them.

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the advisory bodies set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Hague: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is required to consult the Social Security Advisory Committee on most proposals to amend social security regulations. If the committee reports on those proposals, my right hon. Friend is required to publish the report and his response to any recommendations if and when the regulations are laid before Parliament.

My right hon. Friend is similarly required to refer most proposals to amend regulations relating to industrial injuries benefit or its administration to the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council for consideration and advice.

Occupational Lung Disease

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his policy in respect of reclaiming previously paid sickness benefits from sufferers from asbestos-related diseases who have won compensation through the courts;

(2) what is the basis (a) for requiring sufferers from asbestosis and mesothelioma have to repay compensation for industrial injury and (b) for not requiring sufferers from pneumoconiosis to do so;

(3) what is his policy in respect of the pursuit of claims for repayment of sickness benefit from asbestosis sufferers after death if they win court cases for damages posthumously.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 21 June at column 147. The value of all relevant benefits, including sickness benefit, should be deducted from compensation awards exceeding £2,500. The provisions also apply to posthumous settlements.

Payments made under the pneumoconiosis compensation scheme are exempted from recoupment because the scheme has been subject to Government funding and it was structured to supplement, rather than replace, social security benefit payments.

Rights of the Child

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list what information in relation to low-income families is available for the statements in the United Kingdom's first report to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child in respect of (a) the right of every child to a standard of living adequate for the child's physical, mental, spiritual and social development, and (b) the level of real disposable income of all types of families with children in 1979 and currently.

Mr. Burt: Information on the social security benefits available for low incomes families described in the United Kingdom report is available in leaflet FB27 "Bringing Up Children?"

A recent research report, "Support for Children, A Comparison of Arrangements in Fifteen Countries", published by this Department in 1993, provides a comparative analysis of United Kingdom support for children against that of other countries.

The latest estimates of changes in the real disposable income since 1979 for various family types can be found in "Households Below Average Income 1979-1990/91", published in June 1993.

Copies of all of those publications are in the Library.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the reasons for the number of disallowances made by the vaccine damage tribunal for each year since 1987.

Mr. Scott: Vaccine damage tribunals which determine appeals are independent of this Department. I am unable to comment on matters for which those independent authorities are responsible.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims were made on behalf of vaccine-damaged children for the vaccine damage payment, who have been accepted as vaccine-damaged but were turned down because their disability was less than 80 per cent., between the passing of the compensation Act and June 1981; and how many parents have applied but have been turned down because of the six-year ruling between these dates.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the vaccine damage payment scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Richard Burden, dated 4 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has aked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many claims were made on behalf of vaccine damaged children for the vaccine damage payment, who have been accepted as vaccine damaged but were turned down because their disability was less than 80 per cent. between the passing of the compensation act and June 1981; and how many parents have applied but have been turned down because of the six year ruling between these dates.

You will be aware from my earlier letter of 24 June 1994 to you about this subject [OR Vol 245 Col 441] that the full range of information requested is not available. This is because statistics relating to claims for Vaccine Damage Payments were not maintained in a form which could identify the specific reason for refusal until June 1981. However, I am able to tell you that in the period up to June 1981 there were 2,742 claims made, the majority being on behalf of Vaccine Damaged children and a small minority being made by self claimants, ie persons over the age of 18 years. Of those claims 2,301 claims were disallowed.

I am sorry that I am unable to be more specific on this occasion but I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what considerations led to the requirement that cheques made payable by the CSA as a refund for overpayment should include the individual's name, address and national insurance number.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 5 July 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the inclusion of clients' names, addresses and National Insurance numbers on girocheques.

National Insurance Numbers are included on girocheques as the Agency uses them as unique reference numbers for clients.

The address is included because girocheques are despatched in window envelopes.

I hope this reply is useful.

Social Fund Loans

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 21 June, Official Report, columns 140-41, when he was first made aware of the problems concerning the checks made to ensure that unemployed claimants do not overpay their loans from the social fund; if he will list the district offices which have been affected; and how many claimants at each office have (a) had a refund or (b) had the overpayment offset against another loan.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State, pursuant to his answer of 21 June, OR cols. 140-1, when he was first made aware of the problems concerning the checks made to ensure that unemployed claimants do not overpay their loans from the Social Fund; if he will list the district offices which have been affected; and how many claimants at each office have (a) had a refund or (b) had the overpayment offset against another loan.

Firstly, I should explain that whilst the Agency is aware that there have been problems with unemployed customers overpaying their loans, statistics have not been maintained to record the number of individuals customers concerned or indeed the Districts involved. To obtain this specific information would require a manual trawl of each Districts records, an exercise which could only be undertaken at a disproportionate cost.

With regard to checks which are carried out, I am pleased to tell you that there is not a problem with the checks I outlined in my previous response of 21 June 1994 [OR Vol 245 Col 140]. The automated and clerical checks are effective and minimise the risk of over-recovery, ensuring that if exceptionally, a customer overpays a loan, a refund is made or that over-recovery offset against another loan.

I am unable to comment about any difficulties that the Employment Services Agency may have experienced where SF deductions are their responsibility. However, I can assure you that there is a regular dialogue between both Agencies where any problems are discussed and resolutions sought. Furthermore, I am confident that the automation of SF recoveries planned for April 1995 will improve matters still further.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

HEALTH

Social Workers (Training)

12. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes have been made in the system of training for social workers.

Mr. Bowis: The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work is reviewing the diploma in social work to keep pace with legislation and best social work practice. Training for social workers should be down to earth, practical and based on sound knowledge of the law.

NHS Staff (Guidance)

13. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guarantees the NHS guidance for staff on relations with the press and media provide against dismissal for any nurse, midwife or health visitor who publicises misconduct or mismanagement within the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guarantees the National Health Service Executive guidance for staff on relations with the public and the media provide against dismissal for any nurse, midwife or health visitor who publicises misconduct or mismanagement within the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The guidance makes it clear that employees who express their views about health service issues in accordance with the guidance are not to be penalised in any way for doing so.

Responsibility for decisions about disciplinary matters lies with each national health service employer.

Hospitals, Buckinghamshire

14. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many major NHS hospital building projects have been carried out in Buckinghamshire since 1979; and at what cost to public funds.

Mr. Sackville: A total of 17 national health service hospital building projects costing over £1 million have been completed in Buckinghamshire since 1979. The approximate cost to public funds was in excess of £70 million. These costs include construction, fees and equipment but information on total cost of schemes is not available. For example, value added tax and land purchase costs are excluded.

General Practitioner Fundholders

15. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of health service purchasing activity in the west midlands is undertaken by general practitioner fundholders.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are now 283 fundholding practices in the west midlands, covering 41 per cent. of the population, and purchasing nearly 10 per cent. of all hospital and community health services.

Embryo Research

16. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her oral answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 166, what consultations she has had with the Human Fertilisation and Embryo Authority about the use of ovarian foetal material in research; and what action she proposes to take until such time as the Human Fertilisation and Embryo Authority reports.

Mr. Sackville: Ministers and officials from the Department meet regularly the authority's chairman, members and executive. The authority's consultation exercise has been discussed at some of these meetings.

Purchasing Authorities

17. Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to develop the role of the purchasing authorities in the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Purchasing authorities have an important role in the national health service and there has been much good work to develop their function. This will be consolidated through the enabling legislation, which will allow district health authorities and family health services authorities to merge and ensure high levels of performance and effectiveness.

Community Care

18. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments she has made of the cost-effectiveness of the recent changes in community care.

Mr. Bowis: It is far too early to draw definitive conclusions about the success of the new arrangements. However, what we have seen so far suggests that the Health Committee was right to conclude last March that "the new funding arrangements provide the potential for a better and more efficient use of public money."

Registered Homes Act 1984

19. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce legislation to amend the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Bowis: None at present.

Dental Services

20. Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made as to the adequacy of the existing situation for NHS dental provision; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are committed to an effective and accessible national health service dental service. There were, at the latest dates, more dentists on the lists of family health services authorities and 3·8 per cent. more registered patients than at 1 July 1992.

NHS Funding

21. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department received the report on the review of the resource allocation working party and the capitation funding formula; when the report will be published; and when her Department will publish its proposals on future funding formulae for the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: The weighted capitation review steering group received in March 1994 the results of a study commissioned from York university. I understand that York university intends to publish its findings in due course.

The steering group forwarded the results, together with its comments, to the National Health Service Executive at the end of April. The executive is still evaluating these.

In-patient Treatment, Rugby

22. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patients were treated by the Rugby NHS trust in 1992-93; and what was the figure for the first year of the trust's existence.

Mr. Sackville: In the first two years of its existence, the number of in-patients treated at Rugby Hospital national health service trust has grown from 12,188 in 1991-92 to 12,478 in 1992-93; this represents a 2·4 per cent. increase.

Statistical Source: Ordinary admissions and day cases, general and acute; figures taken from KP70 returns.

Independent NHS Sector

23. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what definition she uses of the independent NHS sector.

Mr. Sackville: There is no independent national health service sector. NHS trusts are free to make accommodation and services available to private patients provided that there is no significant disadvantage in the exercise of their obligations under any NHS contract.

Regulations

24. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the introduction of trust hospitals has resulted in a decrease in the number of regulations issued by her Department.

Mr. Sackville: No regulations have been issued since 1991.

Health Care Costs, Devon and Cornwall

25. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the impact of tourists on health care costs in Devon and Cornwall.

Mr. Sackville: It is for regional health authorities to make allocations of funds to district health authorities, adapting the national formula for weighted capitation, to take account of the differing health needs of their resident population and particular local characteristics and circumstances.

Strikes (Cost)

26. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the highest annual total of operations deferred through strikes in the health service since 1964; and when this occurred.

Mr. Sackville: Details of the number of operations deferred through strikes are not available.

NHS Expenditure, Yorkshire

27. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will outline the levels of expenditure paid by the Government to the NHS in the Yorkshire region in 1994-95 and in 1978-79 at 1994 constant prices.

Mr. Sackville: Information on levels of expenditure for Yorkshire region in 1978-79 is no longer held centrally. Figures for the Northern and Yorkshire region in 1994-95 are not yet available.

General Practitioner Fundholders, Redbridge and Waltham Forest

28. Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner fundholders there are in Redbridge and Waltham Forest district health authority areas.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are 19 fundholding practices in the Redbridge and Waltham Forest family health services authority, covering 14 per cent. of the population.

Hospital Beds, London

29. Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the required change in the number of hospital beds in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of hospital beds in London will depend, in large part, on the assessment by local health authorities, general practitioner fundholders and hospitals of the future requirement for in-patient, day case and out-patient services to best meet the needs of their patients. Also, more patients from outside London are being treated locally, further reducing the need for hospital beds in London.

Joint Ventures

30. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to encourage joint ventures between the NHS and the private sector.

Mr. Sackville: The National Health Service Executive has an on-going programme of work to promote the private finance initiative and encourage joint ventures between the NHS and the private sector. This has so far involved:

- Issuing clear guidance about procedures to be followed and how to make a business case using appropriate investment appraisal techniques;
- Providing advice direct to private sector and NHS enquirers, and making direct personal contact with NHS and private sector parties;
- Organising "roadshows" for NHS trust finance directors, and others, explaining the Private Finance Initiative and the opportunities in the NHS;
- Ministerial and senior officials' speeches to encourage both NHS and private sector;
- Publishing publicity material—such as the brochure pack "Public Service, Private Finance" (over 1000 copies issued to NHS and private sector contacts, with requests for over 1000 more since launch);
- Setting up and managing the Newchurch Database project, to increase contacts between the NHS and the private sector and encourage people to explore the possibility of using private finance by spreading knowledge of projects that have already been undertaken by NHS trusts and health authorities.
- Setting up the Private Finance Unit. The remit of the Private Finance Unit is to promote the Private Finance Initiative throughout the NHS and to help trusts and health authorities make greater use of private finance.

Deprived Areas

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average primary care deprivation score for each family health services authority in the London implementation group remit.

Dr. Mawhinney: The average primary care deprivation scores for each family health services authority or part-FHSA are:

	Average
City and East London	43·39
Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham	32·23
Camden and Islington	30·96
Eastern Enfield and Edmonton area of Haringey	27·13
Brent (excluding Harrow)	24·93
Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster	23·90
Waltham Forest (excluding Redbridge)	22·42
Greenwich (excluding Bexley but including Thamesmead)	21·76
Ealing, Hammersmith and Hounslow	21·00
Wandsworth (excluding Sutton and Merton)	20·98
Barking (excluding Havering)	20·76
Croydon (North only)	15·72

Note: the scores are calculated as an average of all wards within each FHSA or part-FHSA.

Tuberculosis

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were notified as having tuberculosis in 1990, 1991 and 1992; and how many in each year were from areas where health authorities stopped the school immunisation programme.

Mr. Sackville: The number of children between the ages of nought and 19 who contracted tuberculosis were:

	Number
1990	569
1992	706

District health authorities are responsible for the schools' BCG immunisation programme.

"Making London Better"

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 301, how many of the 425 individuals displaced from London's national health service were assisted to find work in (a) the national health service in London, (b) the national health service outside London, (c) the private health care sector and (d) non-health care work; and how many did not find work despite assistance.

Dr. Mawhinney: The clearing house has assisted displaced staff as shown in the table.

Category	Number
Currently on Clearing House Register being matched to job	218
Matched to National Health Service job in London	134
Matched to National Health Service job outside London	3
Matched to private sector health care job	4
Matched to non-health care job (eg in voluntary sector or social services)	27
Withdrawals	39

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer 23 June, Official Report, column 301, what were the job titles of the 425 individuals who requested help from the clearing house after being displaced as a result of service changes in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: Job titles, by staff group, of those who have requested help from the clearing house are summarised in the table.

Staff group	Number
General Management/Administrative grades	201
Nursing and Midwifery grades	102
Ancillary grades	28

Staff group	Number
Laboratory technicians	27
Allied to medicine grades (paramedical)	18
Clinical Scientists	15
"Other" technical staff	14
Maintenance grades	7
Pharmacists	6
Doctors/Dentists	6
Clinical psychologist	1

Dependency

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered drug addicts there were in (a) York, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) England in each year since 1979.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the number of registered drug addicts for the years 1987-92 is shown in the table. Data for earlier years are not available for district health authorities

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
England	9,633	11,533	13,700	16,163	18,761	22,240
York	17	24	37	49	49	72
North Yorkshire	29	75	69	101	117	185

Note:
North Yorkshire District Health Authority was formed on 1 December 1992 by the amalgamation of Northallerton, York, Scarborough, Harrogate and part of Airedale District Health Authority. Data for 1987-92 inclusive have therefore been estimated by adding data for those DHAs. It is not possible to produce data for the exact statutory boundary of North Yorkshire DHA as part of Airedale DHA is now within Bradford DHA.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of her Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if she will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: A number of surveys have been carried out in the last two years seeking staff views on specific issues. This information is confidential to management and staff.

Patients Charter

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what independent audit is undertaken of the data supplied by hospitals for patients charter standards.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Audit Commission appointed auditors to review the systems used to collect data on patients charter standards published in the hospital and ambulance services comparative performance guide for 1993-94, copies of which are available in the Library.

Air Ambulances

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average cost of an air ambulance flight; and if she will make a statement;

(2) how many United Kingdom residents were seriously injured abroad in 1993 and returned to the United Kingdom by air ambulance; how many of these had medical insurance which covered the cost of the air ambulance; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what facilities her Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Sackville: Richmond house has a bicycle rack in the car park where bicycles of visitors can be parked.

Hospital League Tables

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who conducted the survey research for the published hospital league tables; and whether this was put out to tender.

Mr. Sackville: The Central Office of Information commissioned the survey research on the Department's behalf. The research company chosen was BMJ Research and Consultancy Ltd. A full competitive tendering exercise did not take place. This was due to urgent decisions being required on the outcomes of the research to ensure that the critical timetable the Department was working to could be met.

Drug Dispensing

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the criteria for transferring prescription-only medicines to over-the-counter purchases.

Mr. Sackville: Patient safety is the criterion which determines whether or not a medicine can be released from prescription control. Prescription control is determined by the provisions in section 58A of the Medicines Act 1968, which implements EC directive 92/26.

Travel Costs

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial assistance is available to parents to meet the costs of children needing to travel to hospitals and medical centres outside their home area for treatment.

Mr. Bowis: The hospital travel costs scheme provides help with hospital travelling expenses for children who are in families on income support, family credit or low income and for the expenses of a companion where this is medically necessary. To qualify for help under the scheme, patients must be receiving national health service treatment given under the care of a hospital consultant.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to regulate private cosmetic surgery clinics.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) on 17 May, Official Report, column 418.

Immunisations

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many two-year-old children per 100,000 received immunisations against (a) diphtheria, (b) tetanus, (c) polio, (d) whooping cough, (e) measles, (f) mumps and (g) rubella; and how many five-year-old children per 100,000 received boosters for these same categories for each year since 1987.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the tables.

Percentage of two-year old children immunised against diphtheria, tetanus, polio, whooping cough, measles, mumps and rubella.
England 1987-88 to 1992-93

Percentage	[1]1987-88	[2]1988-89	[2]1989-90	[2]1990-91	[2]1991-92	[2]1992-93

[2] Percentage immunised by 2nd birthday.
[3] The combined MMR vaccine was first used in 1988-89.

Percentage of five-year old children receiving booster doses against diphtheria, tetanus and polio[1]
England 1990-91 to 1992-93

	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Diphtheria percentage	83	85	86
Tetanus percentage	82	85	86
Polio percentage	82	85	86

[1] Booster doses are provided only for diphtheria, tetanus and polio.

Clinical Negligence

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of legal fees incurred by national health service bodies as a result of clinical negligence claims in each year since 1990-91.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The total legal costs for national health service bodies in England for 1991-92 was £6,348,335 and for 1992-93 was £4,364,709. Information on such costs for 1990-91 is not available.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each NHS trust in the former North West Thames region, those chairmen and non-executive directors who live outside the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 1 July 1994]: Some 207 out of the 278—75 per cent.—chairmen and non-executive directors appointed to national health service trusts within the West Midlands region live within the boundaries of the district health authorities in which that trust is situated. The names of the appointees who live outside the relevant district health authority boundaries are listed.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 6 July 1994

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Compensation (Non-payment)

Mr. Bates: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions have been brought by the Crown Prosecution Service for non-payment of compensation awarded to victims as a result of court orders in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: Compensation orders made in criminal proceedings are registered in the relevant magistrates' court which then has the responsibility for enforcement through the various powers vested in it for that purpose. The Crown Prosecution Service does not play any part in the enforcement of such compensation orders.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will request the Director of Public Prosecutions to issue a revised map of England and Wales for the annual report of the Crown Prosecution Service so that both Anglesey and the Isle of Wight are depicted.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions will ensure that Anglesey and the Isle of Wight are included with similar maps in future editions of the annual report.

Racially-motivated Crime

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Attorney-General what training is given to prosecutors regarding the racial motivation of crimes.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service runs a number of courses for legal staff which include sessions on various aspects of racial awareness including the racial motivation of crime. I have placed a more detailed description of such courses in the Library.

The nature and substance of the racial awareness training provided by the CPS is currently being reviewed with a view to introducing further improvements where appropriate.

DEFENCE

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities his Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Hanley: Although no facilities are provided outside our buildings in the Whitehall area specifically for visitors' bicycles, facilities could usually be provided if they were requested.

Rio Declaration

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the precise provisions of principle 24 of agenda 21 of the Rio declaration of June 1992; what is his policy in respect of implementing those provisions; and what specific guidance is given to the armed forces in respect of those aspects of principle 24 which commit signatories to fighting only environmentally friendly wars.

Mr. Hanley: As with other Governments participating in the Rio summit, the United Kingdom supports the broad principles enshrined in the Rio declaration, including principle 24, which says that states should respect international law providing protection for the environment in time of armed conflict. It is my Department's policy that the armed forces should act at all times in accordance with United Kingdom national and international law. Training in the law of armed conflict is given to all members of the armed forces.

Access to Environmental Information

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many requests for environmental information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992 have been received by his Department; how many were answered within two months; how many were refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has received four requests for environmental information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992; all received an answer within the specified two months; and none were refused.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Secure Accommodation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations which have made representations to him opposing the Government's plan to introduce secure accommodation for juveniles.

Mr. Maclean: In March 1993, the Home Office invited views and comments from interested organisations on the details of the proposals which were then being developed following the statement by the then Home Secretary my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) on 2 March, Official Report, columns 139-42. Subsequently, more than 60 sets of written comments were received; and a range of meetings were held at both ministerial and official level. Although a substantial number of respondents were opposed to the introduction of a new secure training order, there was a very wide measure of agreement on the need for the courts to have a power to order the detention in secure accommodation of those juvenile offenders for whom it is clear that community penalties would be neither effective nor appropriate.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to ensure that the quality of education provided in the secure accommodation units run by private contractors is of a sufficiently high standard.

Mr. Maclean: Contractors will be required under the terms of their contracts to provide education and training for trainees to an agreed standard based on the requirements set out in the operational specification for a secure training centre. The contract terms will be underpinned by minimum standards laid down in secure training centre rules. Copies of the operational specification and an administrative paper setting out proposed rules have been placed in the Library of the House.

In addition, education standards in secure training centres will be subject to inspections arranged by Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools.

Buggery

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of non-consensual buggery of men were reported in the United Kingdom in (a) 1983 and (b) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Information is readily available centrally only for England and Wales and Northern Ireland. The information for England and Wales given in table 1 is for those prosecuted. The 1993 data are not yet available. Information on cases reported during 1992 in Northern Ireland is given in table 2.

Refugees

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign nationals, displaced by violent conflicts are currently seeking refuge in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not separately identifiable from the statistics.

Fire Officers (Injuries)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fire officers were injured in the course of their duty in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Figures are not yet available for the number of fire officers injured in the line of duty in 1993. However, in England and Wales in 1992, three fire officers were killed and 861 were seriously injured in the line of duty. Serious injuries are defined as those which result in absence from duty for at least one month or two weeks or more of hospitalisation.

Channel Islands

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what complaints his Department has received over the past five years relating to defects in the Channel Islands legal system or the failure of the Jersey legal system to deal promptly with crimes of fraud, violence and miscarriages of justice.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 23 June, Official Report, column 257.

May Report

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Sir John May's final report on the Guildford and Woolwich case.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence) on 30 June 1994, Official Report, column 653.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are expected to make successful claims under the criminal injuries compensation scheme in each of the next six years.

Mr. Maclean: It is not possible to forecast how many successful claims will be made in any particular year as claims are not necessarily settled in the year in which they are made. However, for the purpose of some recent judicial review proceedings, it was estimated that the number of awards made in the next six years will be of the following order:

	Number
1994-95	46,900
1995-96	57,700
1996-97	60,300
1997-98	68,300
1998-99	74,800
1999-2000	76,400

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of those eligible to claim under the criminal injuries compensation scheme did so in (a) 1991-92, (b) 1992-93 and (c) 1993-94;

(2) how many crimes were committed in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 which involved a victim eligible for compensation under the criminal injuries compensation scheme;

(3) to what extent he expects the proportion of people eligible to claim who actually do claim under the criminal injuries compensation scheme to change over the next six years.

Mr. Maclean: We have no information about numbers of people who might be eligible to claim compensation under the criminal injuries compensation scheme.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assumptions have been used to estimate the likely future cost of the criminal injuries compensation scheme if his Department's proposals for reform were not implemented.

Mr. Maclean: Based on average trends over the 10 years to 1993-94, it was assumed, for this purpose, that numbers of applications received and cases resolved would continue to increase by 9 per cent. annually, and that the average award would continue to increase annually by 5 per cent. more than gross domestic product inflation. It was also assumed that the number of resolved cases attracting an award would remain between 62 per cent. and 65 per cent.

Market Testing

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94 market tests have been discontinued.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Ten market tests in the 1992-93 Home Office market testing programme have been discontinued. No market tests in the 1993-94 programme have been discontinued.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by his Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 29 June 1994]: From 1 April 1992 to 31 May 1994, expenditure by my Department including the Prison Service on external consultancies in respect of market testing is estimated to be approximately £930,000.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what interim proposals Ernst and Young has made as part of the expenditure review concerning (a) market testing, (b) unit costs and (c) the funding of voluntary organisations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: During the course of the review a number of topics were considered for more detailed work. These included exploring a method of achieving equivalent savings to market testing without going out to competition, the development of better use of unit cost information and examination of the effectiveness of Home Office scrutiny of proposals for grants to the voluntary sector.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Prison Service functions have been contracted out and (b) in-house jobs have been lost as a result of the (i) 1992-93 and (ii) 1993-94 Prison Service market testing programmes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 6 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many Prison Service functions have been contracted out and in-house jobs lost as a result of our 1992-93 and 1993-94 market testing programmes.

The 1992-93 programme led to contracts being let for court escort and custody services in the East Midlands and Humberside area, for the management of Blakenhurst prison and for prison education. These have resulted in a net reduction of 78 full time equivalent Prison Service posts in relation to the court escort service. Because Blakenhurst was a new prison and education was not previously provided by in-house Prison Service staff, neither of these resulted in a loss of posts. Also, as a result of the in-house team winning the competiton for warehousing and distribution, 82 full time equivalent Prison Service posts were lost.

From the 1993-94 programme the court escort and custody services in the Metropolitan Police District and the management of Doncaster prison have been contracted out. The net reduction in the number of Prison Service posts as a result of contracting out the court escort service is 250. Because Doncaster prison is a new prison, contracting out has not reduced the number of existing posts in the Prison Service.

Management Training Seminars

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff have attended management training seminars run by Padgett Thompson in the last 12 months.

Mr. Michael Howard: Three members of staff have attended seminars run by Padgett Thompson.

Research

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he will publish research into (a) intensive community sentences and (b) reconviction rates;

(2) when he will publish comparative European research into ethnicity and crime;

(3) when he will publish his Department's research into the experiences of (a) refugees, (b) persons granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom and (c) Vietnamese refugees;

(4) when he will publish research involving (a) criminal justice agencies' response to the Criminal Justice Act 1991 and (b) the Bail Act 1976;

(5) when he will publish the research and planning unit programme for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Howard: Neither my ministerial colleagues nor I have had an opportunity to consider reports on four of the studies listed: intensive community sentences; reconviction rates; Vietnamese refugees; and the survey of criminal justice agencies' responses to the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

A report on the settlement of refugees, carried out in collaboration with Salford university, is currently being revised. This study included those granted exceptional leave to remain.

A study of the Bail Act 1976 was published in 1992 —"Offending while on bail", research and planning unit paper No. 65. A follow-up study based on five local initiatives is nearing completion, and the report will be revised to take into account the comments of the five local steering groups and others.

On comparative European research into ethnicity and crime, the Dutch Ministry of Justice is this month publishing a book on an international comparative study on youth and crime, which includes a chapter by Home Office researchers on results in this country. The research and planning unit is preparing a fuller report on the British results, which will include a detailed assessment of the findings by ethnic group.

I expect reports on all the studies listed to be published later in the year, once they have been finalised and arrangements for their publication has been agreed.

The research and planning unit programme for 1993-94 has been published, and a copy has been placed in the Library. The programme for 1994-95 will be published when this has been finalised.

Prison Service (Drugs Survey)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the results of the Prison Service intelligence evaluation unit's drugs survey.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 6 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the results of the Prison Service Intelligence Evaluation Unit's Drugs' survey.

The Intelligence Evaluation Unit recently conducted a survey of nine establishments to gain better information on the extent of the drugs problem in the Prison Service. The results indicated that:

- most of the establishments surveyed regarded themselves as having a significant drugs problem
- most experienced significant problems with drugs other than cannabis
- drug abuse created problems and could lead to bullying and inter group rivalry
- all establishments had found drugs following searches
- most establishments had found visitors trying to smuggle in drugs

All the problems existed despite a range of active measures being taken by the establishments concerned to try and limit the entry of drugs and prevent the problem of drug use.

The Prison Service is developing a central strategy to reduce to an absolute minimum the supply of drugs and the demands for drugs in prisons.

The Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill contains provisions to allow prisoners to be required, in certain circumstances, to undertake drug tests.

Ernst and Young

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the consultants Ernst and Young commenced work on the March 1994 expenditure review.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The review of Home Office expenditure involving Ernst and Young began on 8 April and is due to be completed later this month.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been paid by his Department and its agencies in consultancy fees to Ernst and Young during the last three financial years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: During the last three financial years, the Home Office has paid £856,564 to Ernst and Young for consultancy work.

Prisoners (AIDS)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations govern the notification of a prisoner in the event that he or she is placed in a cell with a prisoner with the AIDS virus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 May 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 6 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about what regulations govern the notification of a prisoner in the event that he or she is placed in a cell with a prisoner with the AIDS virus.

The Prison Service policy on HIV is given in Circular Instruction 30/1991. It emphasises that strict medical confidentiality shall apply to all prisoners' medical information, including information about HIV status. This policy reflects the policy which is adopted in the general community. Consequentially no prisoner would be notified about the health status of any other prisoner.

HIV testing in prison is carried out at the request of prison inmates, or on the advice of a prison medical officer for diagnostic purposes and only with the inmate's informed consent. This practice also mirrors that applying in the community outside prison. As a result the number of prisoners known to have HIV infection in prison is a proportion of the total number of prisoners who may have HIV infection. To provide information about the health status of known HIV positive inmates would breach medical confidentiality, may provide prisoners with a false sense of security in relation to HIV infection, and be counter productive in that it may discourage those people concerned about HIV infection from coming forward for advice, medical care, counselling and support.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Personal Injury Cases

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the measures that he is currently taking to ensure that district judges have a full understanding of the complexities of personal injury claims.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: The Judicial Studies Board is responsible for the training of newly appointed deputy district judges and of experienced district judges. Training on personal injury cases is accorded great importance in both induction and refresher seminars. In addition, all judges who deal with such cases are issued with "Guidelines for the Assessment of General Damages in Personal Injury Cases", which was produced by the Judicial Studies Board and published by Blackstone Press.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult prior to legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government are required to consult the Council on Tribunals when considering rules affecting tribunals coming within the council's supervision but are not required to publish their response to that advice.

There are two rule committees, the Land Registration rule committee and the Magistrates' Courts rule committee, which the Government are required by statute to consult prior to legislation proposals. The Government do not respond specifically to the advice given and, if they did, the response is not required to be published.

Other rule committees are consulted and the committees consider, propose and advise the Government on legislative proposals. The Government do not respond specifically to the advice given and, if they did, the response is not required to be published.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory basis.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is as follows:

The Legal Aid Advisory Committee
The Legal Aid Advisory Committee (NI)
The Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct
The Advisory Council on Public Records
The Council on Tribunals
The Crown Court Rules Committee
The County Court Rules Committee
The Supreme Court Rules Committee
The Magistrates Courts Rules Committee
The Land Registration Rules Committee
The Family Proceedings Rules Committee
The Law Commission

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is as follows:

The Legal Aid Advisory Committee
The Legal Aid Advisory Committee (NI)
The Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct
The Advisory Council on Public Records
The Council on Tribunals
The Law Commission
Each of the 94 Advisory Committees on Justices of the Peace in England and Wales produces an annual report.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is as follows:

The Legal Aid Advisory Committee
The Legal Aid Advisory Committee (NI)
The Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct
The Advisory Council on Public Records, as part of the Annual Report of the Public Record Office
The Council on Tribunals
The Law Commission, where the report is made to the Lord Chancellor who then lays it before Parliament

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Ethiopia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being planned by the United Kingdom, the European Union and other countries to remedy the defects in transport arrangements in efforts to counteract the famine in the Hararghe area of eastern Ethiopia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The rural road network in Hararghe is poor. But British non-governmental organisations operating in the region believe that transport capacity is adequate to distribute available food aid.

Access to Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many requests for environmental information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992 have been received by his Department; how many were answered within two months; how many were refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ODA does not keep records of the number of requests received under the environmental information regulations nor when they were answered. The ODA keeps records of refusals to supply information and the grounds for refusal.

In the period up to 30 June 1994, the Department gave 14 refusals: in 11 cases because no formal environmental impact assessments existed and in one case because the content contained internal advice; in another case, the report had been commissioned by, and was the property of, another Government; and in the other case access was refused on the ground of commercial confidentiality.

EMPLOYMENT

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the proposal of the Commissioner for Social Affairs, in his communication on immigration and asylum to the European Parliament and the Council 1994, to adopt a community code of practice prohibiting racial discrimination in employment.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand that the Commission is currently preparing a draft code of practice on race and employment. The Government will consider their policy on the proposal when they have had the opportunity to study the draft.

Health Professionals (Review Bodies)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are involved in servicing the review bodies on doctors and dentists remuneration and on nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine; how many national health service staff are covered by those review bodies; and what is the annual cost of running those bodies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1994-95 the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration and the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine are expected to be serviced directly by up to eight staff, shared equally between the two bodies and assisted as necessary by other clerical and secretarial staff of the Office of Manpower Economics.

As at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were some 123,000 doctors and dentists and the full-time equivalent of some 512,000 nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine in the NHS. This includes staff employed by NHS trusts, which are free to determine the pay of their staff locally.

The annual cost of running the two review bodies, in respect of the salary costs of the eight staff and the travel and subsistence costs for members—who are otherwise unpaid—and staff is expected to be £299,000 in 1994-95.

Hope Street Theatre, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in objective funding for the Hope Street theatre training scheme in Liverpool.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

No objective 1 projects have been approved. Although negotiations on this Merseyside single programming document have been completed with the Commission, it —with the other United Kingdom objective 1 SPDs—is still waiting for the Commission to complete its internal procedures. Applications for European social funding supported projects such as Hope Street are, however, being invited this week.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will make a statement on the progress of his Committee's deliberations on improving access to the Palace of Westminster for disabled people;

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what further progress has been made by his Committee on improving access to the Palace of Westminster for disabled people.

Mr. Ray Powell: In response to a resolution of the former Services Committee a report containing recommendations for the improvement of provision in the Palace of Westminster for people with disabilities has been submitted to this Committee. Its proposals are being considered in the context of evidence from the Director of Works, a number of organisations representing disabled persons, and English Heritage. The Committee expects to receive further evidence this autumn and to make its conclusions known at the end of the year.

Pending the Committee's final recommendations, approval has been given for a large number of minor and uncontentious improvements to go ahead. A number have already been completed and others have been included in the rolling programme of works. A sum of £250,000 has been set aside for this purpose in the current year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received regarding the warrant issued by the Indonesian Government for the arrest of the human rights lawyer Adrian Buyung Nasution; and if he will make representations to his Indonesian counterpart concerning the human rights situation in Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: Rumours of Mr. Nasution's impending arrest have proved unfounded. The Indonesian authorities are well aware of the importance that we attach to respect for human rights. We draw it to their attention on a regular basis.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to his Indonesian counterpart with regard to the banning of Tempo, Editor and De Tik on 21 June and the confrontation between Indonesian security forces and a peaceful demonstration in Jakarta on 27 June; and if he will make a statement on the current human rights situation in Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: None as yet, but we will seek an early opportunity to make representations on this issue. We welcome the Indonesian Government's efforts over the past year to improve their human rights record. It is, therefore, with surprise and concern that we learned of the banning of the three journals by the Indonesian Government. The decision appears inconsistent with the greater spirit of openness prevailing in Indonesia recently.

British Prisoners Abroad

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) of 16 June, Official Report, column 642, about United Kingdom citizens awaiting trial in overseas prisons; what action he proposes to take to monitor the number of Britains on remand for long periods in Spanish gaols; and if he will make representations on behalf of Colin Salt, currently on remand in Madrid, to press for an early court hearing.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continually monitor all British nationals on remand in Spanish gaols, especially those remanded for long periods. Our consular officers are doing all that they properly can to help those detained and their families. However, we have no standing to intervene in the Spanish legal process itself, and it is for Mr. Salt's lawyer to press for a hearing.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what statements the Nigerian head of state has made recently about the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group forces in Liberia; what action is being proposed by the United Nations to respond to a withdrawal by the Nigerians from the ECOMOG forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In a broadcast on Radio Nigeria on 24 June, President Abacha said that Nigeria intended to pull out of Liberia. In his fifth progress report on the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia, the United Nations Secretary-General noted concerns expressed by the President of Nigeria at the financial burden of participation in ECOMOG. The Secretary-General urged that troops should not be withdrawn precipitately and undertook to endeavour to obtain additional financial support from member states. The United States has contributed about US$30 million, while we have provided US$1 million of humanitarian aid.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitments were made by the Nigerian Minister of Information and Culture when he met recently with the British high commissioner to Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's high commissioner called on the Nigerian Minister of Information and Culture on 17 June. The Minister stated the Nigerian Government's commitment to hand over to a democratically elected Government in the shortest possible time.

TREASURY

Economic Growth

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy in respect of maintaining the long-term growth rate of the economy when world interest rates rise.

Mr. Nelson: The Government will continue to follow domestic policies which create the right conditions for sustainable growth by maintaining low inflation and sound public finances and by a continuing programme of reform designed to improve the efficiency of markets and strengthen the long-term supply performance of the economy.

Contracts

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department has spent on management consultancy contracts in each of the last two years.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 349-51.

Management Reorganisation

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of Treasury staff he proposes to redeploy or make redundant under management reorganisation.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury is currently undergoing a fundamental review of its expenditure. Until the results of this are available, the implications of any management reorganisation will not be clear.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the rules of guidance for profit-related pay schemes drawn up by the Inland Revenue covering (a) the involvement in profit-related pay of schemes not based on companies, (b) restrictions on conversion of existing pay into profit-related pay, (c) the definition and calculation of profit in profit-related pay and (d) other relevant matters.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue publishes two booklets to help employers who would like to introduce a profit-related pay scheme which qualifies for tax relief. These are "Tax Relief for Profit-Related Pay: Notes for Guidance", PRP2, and "Tax Relife for Profit-Related Pay. Setting up a Scheme". I understand that a copy of both booklets is available in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the growth in numbers of profit-related pay schemes, and participants in profit-related pay with a regional breakdown of schemes; and if he will also estimate the revenue forgone in each year of profit-related pay together with the current year.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information is in the table. The data are not centrally available to produce a regional breakdown of schemes. This could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what facilities his Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Nelson: Bicycle parking facilities are available at the Treasury's offices in Westminster and Victoria for the use of staff and visitors.

Research and Development

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the Inland Revenue guidance on capital allowances for research and development; if he will outline the circumstances under which expenditure on the development of a specific product or technique qualifies for such allowance; if he will outline the legal or administrative source for the definition of research and development; and whether the guidance or definitions are currently under review.

Mr. Dorrell: Section 139(1) of the Capital Allowances Act 1990 defines scientific research as covering "any activities in the fields of natural or applied science for the extension of knowledge".

Whether any particular activities fall within this definition will depend on the facts of the case. However, in general terms, activities constitute scientific research if they involve the application of new scientific principles in an existing area of research or the application of existing principles in a new area of research. The essential test is innovation.

Scientific research is generally regarded as including the development of a piece of fundamental research up to the production stage. Expenditure on construction of prototypes, pilot plant and so on qualifies for scientific research allowances if the prototypes are used to test the results of the basic research or the possibility of applying the results of the basic research to manufacture.

The Inland Revenue's main internal instruction books will be published as soon as practicable in accordance with the code of practice on access to Government information. Details of the publication arrangements should be available within the next few weeks.

Unit Trust Industry

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the regulatory organisations and Government Departments which have a role to play in relation to the unit trust industry, with their respective responsibilities.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The Securities and Investments Board is responsible for authorising unit trusts and for product regulation of authorised unit trusts—AUTs. It also oversees self-regulating organisations—SROs—recognised under the Financial Services Act 1986. Trustees and managers of AUTs may be authorised either directly from SIB or through membership of an SRO.

(b) The Investment Management Regulatory Organisation is the SRO for regulation of fund management.

(c) Regulation of retail sales at present falls within the scope of the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation for marketing of AUT products, and the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association for independent financial advisers who offer investment advice to the general public. From 18 July, these functions will fall primarily to the Personal Investment Authority, or in certain instances to IMRO.

(d) Certain professional bodies also recognised by SIB under the FSA (RPBs) regulate the sale and marketing of AUTs through their member firms. The main ones are the various professional accountancy bodies—ICAEW, ICAS, ICAI and CACA—the Insurance Brokers Registration Council and the three law societies.

(e) The Treasury is responsible, under the FSA, for general policy oversight relating to collective investment schemes, including questions of whether responsibility for further functions relating to the investment and borrowing powers of AUTs should be transferred to SIB.

Air Passenger Duty, Basle and Geneva

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rate of air passenger duty will apply to flights to Basle and Geneva airports.

Sir John Cope: Both Basle and Geneva airports are in the unusual position of straddling Switzerland and France and allowing passengers to choose into which country to exit the airport. It would therefore be impossible to charge the higher £10 duty rate, as there is no distinction on a passenger's ticket to indicate whether he intends to enter Switzerland or France, and in any case, the extra £5 would be relatively easy to avoid by leaving the airport through a different exit and crossing a land frontier into Switzerland.

It has therefore been agreed that flights to Basle and Geneva may exceptionally be treated as subject to the lower £5 duty rate.

Alternative Vehicle Fuel

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the use of excise duty and tax rates to encourage the use of natural gas as an alternative fuel for motor vehicles.

Sir John Cope: The rate of excise duty on natural gas used as a road fuel is currently half the rate applied to leaded petrol. When deciding the rates of duty on road fuels, all relevant factors are taken into consideration, including revenue yield, conservation of finite fuel resources and the effects of fuel usage on the environment.

Privatisation Proceeds

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what working assumptions he is now using in his medium term financial strategy for privatisation proceeds over the period 1994-95 to 1998-99.

Mr. Dorrell: The medium-term financial strategy in the 1994-95 "Financial Settlement and Budget Report" assumed privatisation proceeds of £5·5 billion in 1994-95 and £1 billion a year after. The assumption for 1995-96 was raised to £2·5 billion in the summer economic forecast, to reflect the latest assessment of likely proceeds from later instalments from the sale of the Government's residual stakes in the generating companies and from the sale of its other residual equity and debt holdings.

Summer Economic Forecast

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide forecasts of public expenditure in 1996-97 on the same basis as table 2.2 of the Treasury's "Summer Economic Forecast 1994".

Mr. Portillo: The summer economic forecast is a short-term forecast which, for public finances, covers the period up to 1995-96. Medium-term fiscal projections are published only in the medium-term financial strategy at Budget time.

At its meeting on 23 June, Cabinet decided that control total spending should be kept within the cash ceilings announced in the Budget last year. Revised projections of the other components of general Government expenditure will be published in the Budget in November.

Building Societies

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the review of the Building Societies Act 1986.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 27 June 1994]: In January, I announced a review of the Building Societies Act 1986 to explore the scope for a further liberalisation of the building societies legislation. The review, which was to be in two stages, was to look at the main restrictions of the Act, including the wholesale funding limit and procedures relating to mergers, conversions and takeovers.

The initial stage was to be concluded by the early summer and, if the case for making more extensive changes to the legislation needed to be explored, there would be a wider consultation in the autumn, with the aim of concluding the review by the end of the year.

The first stage is now complete and we have reached a number of conclusions:

Building societies have a valuable part to play in maintaining a competitive market in retail financial services.

They should be enabled to continue and develop that role.

The process of steady, orderly rationalisation within the sector should be allowed to continue.

The extension of societies' powers in specific areas needs to be accompanied by improvements in the accountability of their boards to the members.

Smaller societies have a particular part to play in their local communities.

Societies dominate housing finance and personal savings because they offer a high standard of service to their customers. Their low-cost operations represent keen competition for banks and other providers of financial services, to the benefit of consumers. They are among the few major financial institutions based outside London. They provide diversity and choice.

There is, however, a need to improve the accountability of societies' boards to their members. During the first stage of the review, a number of respondents pointed out that directors are under no obligation to inform members of takeover offers from institutions outside the sector. When a suitable opportunity arises, the Government intend to bring before the House legislation to require boards to inform the members, at the next general meeting, of any such non-confidential offers which they have received, in the same way as they must do now for merger bids from other societies.

In order to give societies the opportunities that they need to develop, the gradual process of extending the range of activities which they are permitted to undertake should continue. So I am announcing today a package of specific measures, which we propose to implement by secondary legislation, either under the Building Societies Act or by making use, after its enactment, of the general power in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill currently before Parliament.

The most important changes will be: an increase in the wholesale funding limit from 40 to 50 per cent; the granting of powers to establish subsidiaries to make loans to incorporated bodies that are not secured on land; and the power to own a general insurance company offering buildings and contents, and mortgage payment protection insurance policies. All these changes will be subject to prudential control by the Building Societies Commission.

These changes will introduce a further element of competition into markets where societies have previously not operated, or have operated only as agents of others, and give them much of the additional flexibility which many have told us that they need. To allow societies to continue to play their part in this country's financial life, and to discourage destabilising flows of funds, on the basis of takeover rumours, the Government believe that it will continue to be necessary for there to be stringent statutory controls on takeovers by existing commercial companies —as was Parliament's intention in passing the 1986 Act.

Societies will continue to be carefully monitored by the Building Societies Commission and subject to competition law. The implications of the decision to allow societies to own general insurance companies will also be taken into account in the Government's response—promised for later this year—to the recent report by the Director General of Fair Trading which recommended the implementation of the provisions of the Courts and Legal Services Act relating to tying-in.

The Government have now decided that it would be useful to proceed with the second stage of this review, to examine further how best to promote the process of evolutionary change in the building society sector.

This stage will involve considering ideas for further improving the accountability of directors to members—in particular, whether it should be made easier to allow candidates nominated by the members to serve as directors, while continuing to ensure that boards have the necessary mix of skills and experience to do their job.

Meanwhile the Building Societies Commission will be finalising its new prudential guidance on boards and management and on a new requirement for a greater degree of disclosure in societies' annual accounts.

We will consider, too, a number of other specific changes to the legislation which have been put to us by the Building Societies Association. These include a review of the financial and other limits in the 1986 Act which can be altered only by statutory instrument; clarification of section 18 of the Act, dealing with powers to invest in subsidiaries; facilitating larger distributions of funds to members in a merger; a review of societies' basic lending powers, set out in sections 10 to 13; and giving societies the power to acquire mortgage debts directly, rather than through subsidiaries.

The Government also see merit in giving further thought to whether societies' powers could be more systematically streamlined—for example by replacing the current prescriptive provisions with a more permissive structure. At the same time, we would need to consider what constraints had to be retained to ensure that the main business of a building society remained the provision of residential mortgages, savings accounts and other financial services to its members.

Many of the changes to be considered in the second stage of the review will require primary legislation for their implementation and finding time for this will, of course, depend upon a suitable opportunity becoming available.

The Treasury will be issuing, during the summer, a consultation paper on the issues raised in the second, and final, stage of the review, with the aim of concluding the review, in line with the timetable which I announced in January, by the end of the year.

In pursuit of our policy of more open government, I am placing a copy of the background papers, produced as part of the first stage, in the Libraries of both Houses.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the yield from the uniform business rate in Northern Ireland each year since its introduction.

Sir John Wheeler: I have been asked to reply.

The uniform business rate as such does not operate in Northern Ireland due to the different arrangements for financing local government services. There is a non-domestic rate and in 1994-95 this is expected to raise some £212 million.

HEALTH

Tranquillisers

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in (a) York, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) England were prescribed minor tranquillisers in each year since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information in the form requested is not available.

Drug Dependency

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where are the nearest (a) regional drug dependency unit, (b) drug rehabilitation unit and (c) drug detoxification unit to York; and how many York patients attended each of them in the last year.

Mr. Bowis: The nearest drug dependency unit to York providing in-patient detoxification is in the Leeds health authority at High Royds hospital, Menston, although within York health services trust consultant psychiatrists do offer assessment and detoxification on an in-patient basis, followed by rehabilitation and support as an out-patient. The nearest regional drug dependency units to York are located at the northern regional alcohol and drug service in Newcastle and Drugs North West at Prestwich.

In York, services, including community-based rehabilitation, counselling and aftercare are provided by the following non-statutory agencies:

The York Drug Dependency Clinic, 28 High Petergate, York; and York Drugs Resource Scheme, 15 Bridge Street, York.

A small independent sector service offering residential and out-patient services is available at The Retreat, 107 Heslington Road, York.

Information on the number of York patients who attended the above services may be obtained locally.

Secure Hospitals

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients suffering from mental illness escaped from the care of secure hospitals in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The information is not available in the form requested.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her definition of arrival used in the patients charter indicator for accident and emergency departments; and if the definition used includes any delays waiting to see a receptionist.

Dr. Mawhinney: Arrival in accident and emergency departments is defined as arrival at the point of entry. It does not include any delays waiting to see a receptionist.

Cancer

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional cancer screening programmes are at present under review; when those reviews are expected to be completed; and which agencies or people are carrying out the reviews.

Mr. Sackville: Any introduction of new screening programmes relies on the existence of accurate and evaluated research. Currently, research is being undertaken in a number of cancer screening areas. The Department of Health's standing group on health technology assessment is in the process of commissioning evaluations of screening for colorectal and prostate cancer.

Cycle Helmets

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy on the use of helmets by child cyclists.

Mr. Bowis: There is considerable evidence of the benefits of cycle helmets in mitigating the effects of head injuries to cyclists of all ages.

Waiting Lists

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the estimated cost of reducing waiting lists to under two years; and what estimates she has made of the costs of reducing the waiting lists further.

Dr. Mawhinney: Between 1987-88 and 1993-94, the Government provided £252 million to fund the waiting time initiative. One of the many targets of the initiative was to reduce to less than two years the maximum length of time a patient would wait for hospital treatment. New initiatives to reduce hospital waiting times are constantly being considered.

Obstetric Cholestasis

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will institute discussions with deans of medical colleges to ensure that obstetric cholestasis is adequately covered in their curricula.

Mr. Sackville: No. It is for the university medical schools to determine the curricula for medical education. They do so in the light of recommendations from the education committee of the General Medical Council, which has the statutory authority to determine the extent of the knowledge and skill required for the granting of primary medical qualifications in the United Kingdom.

Gender Identity Disorder

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to allow the amendment of birth register entries to recognise gender identity disorder sufferers in their reassigned roles.

Mr. Sackville: None. The birth register is a record of historical fact; it is not, nor does it purport to be, a record of current status or identity. Corrections to entries in the birth register may be made only where an error is shown to have existed when the birth was registered.

Infertility

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the relationship between her answer to the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Ms Corston) of 18 February, Official Report, column 1041, and her answer to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) of 20 June, Official Report, column 26.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service provides a wide range of treatment for subfertility but information about the services available in specific places is not generally available centrally. It is for individual health authorities to determine priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Rio Declaration

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the precise provisions of principle 8 of agenda 21 of the Rio declaration of June 1992; what is her policy in respect of implementing those provisions; and what specific policies have been adopted by her Department in respect of those aspects of principle 8 which commit signatories to achieve sustainable development through the adoption of appropriate demographic policies.

Mr. Sackville: In common with other Governments participating in the Rio summit, the United Kingdom accepts the broad principles enshrined in the Rio declaration. The Government's commitments to sustainable developments are set out in "Sustainable Development: the UK Strategy", published in January 1994, copies of which are available in the Library. Policies are formed with regard to the well-being of the population —for example in the fields of social, economic and environmental planning—rather than with regard to population size or growth.

Access to Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many requests for environmental information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992 have been received by her Department; how many were answered within two months; how many were refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not keep records of the number of requests received under the environmental information regulations or of when they were answered. The Department does, however, keep records of refusals to supply information and on what grounds.

In the period 1 January 1993 up to 30 June 1994, the Department made no refusals.

Air Pollution

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions her Department has had with the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment concerning reducing air pollution.

Mr. Sackville: The Department's officials have frequent discussions with their colleagues in the Departments of Transport and of the Environment.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies her Department has undertaken in the last three years to investigate the correlation between levels of air pollution and the number of people being admitted to hospital with breathing problems.

Mr. Sackville: The Department funded a research project which examined the effects of the December 1991 air pollution episode in London when the highest recorded peak of nitrogen dioxide occurred. This study included investigations of the increased admissions to hospital and increased mortality occurring during the week containing the episode. An outline of the results of this study has been presented to the British Thoracic Society. As soon as the full report is available, it will be put for comments to the Department of Health's expert advisory Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants.

There are several other studies of the health effects of air pollution that are being funded by other Departments or establishments. When published, the results of the United Kingdom studies are referred to COMEAP and COMEAP sub-groups.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for health what is her Department's estimate of the number of people who are admitted to hospital each year as a result of breathing toxic exhaust fumes.

Mr. Sackville: Hospital admissions are not recorded according to cause of illness and it is not possible, on present information, to make any reliable estimate of the numbers admitted as a result of breathing toxic exhaust fumes.

Disabled People

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will give a breakdown by nature and severity of disabilty of the numbers of disabled people who are currently registered in England and Wales;

(2) how many of those individuals registered disabled in England and Wales experience mobility problems; how many are confined to wheelchairs; and what information she has as to the extent of mobility problems experienced by those registered disabled persons with such mobility problems, but who are not confined to wheelchairs.

Mr. Bowis: The number of persons who are registered as having a physical disability in England at 31 March 1993 by category of disability was published in "Registers of Physically Disabled Persons (General Classes) (A/F/93/19), a copy of which is available in the Library. Information on mobility problems and wheelchair use is not available centrally.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what involvement the British Technology Group has had with the Public Health Laboratory Service on the issues of BSE and Creutzfeld-Jakob Disease; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Public Health Laboratory Service has had no direct involvement with the British Technology Group on these issues.

Dr. Harash Narang

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the suspension of Dr. Harash Narang from the Public Health Laboratory Service.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter between Dr. Narang and his employer, the Public Health Laboratory Service.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, for each NHS trust in the former Mersey region, those chairmen and non-executive directors who live outside the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 June 1994]: Eighty-eight—60 per cent.—of the 146 chairmen and non-executive directors appointed to national health service trusts within the former Mersey region live within the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated. The names of the appointees who live outside the relevant district health authority boundaries are listed.

Sight Tests

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 15 June, Official Report, columns 589-90, what estimates of the total number of NHS and private sight tests have been made for each of the last five financial years; and what estimates of the total number of NHS and private sight tests for 1993-94 have been made by the technical sub-committee of the Department of Health and the ophthalmic profession.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 June 1994]: (a) The number of National Health Service sight tests paid for in the last five financial years for which figures are available in Great Britain are shown in the table.

Number of NHS sight tests paid for by financial year

	Great Britain (millions
[1]1989-90	6·0
[1]1990-91	4·8
1991-92	5·8
1992-93	6·4
[2]1993-94	6·9

[1] From 1 April 1989, NHS sight tests were restricted to certain eligible groups in the population. The figures for 1989-90 included 1·82 million sight tests paid for in 1989-90 but conducted in 1988-89 under the previous scheme. The remaining 4·22 million were conducted and paid for in 1989-90, which does not constitute a full twelve months of the new scheme. The figures for 1990-91, which do represent twelve months under the new scheme, are not therefore directly comparable with those for 1989-90.
[2] This figure is provisional.

(b) From the survey carried out on behalf of the technical sub-committee, it was estimated that the total number of sight tests performed in Great Britain in 1993-94 would be 6·594 million NHS and 6·589 million private.

Research and Development

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been (a) her Department's and (b) the NHS's research and development spend in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92, (c) 1992-93 and (d) 1993-94; what is the planned amount for 1994-95; and how much of these totals is used to fund research.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 4 July 1994]: The information on central research and development expenditure by the Department of Health, including the national health service executive, is collected annually in the "Forward Look of Government-Funded Science, Engineering and Technology". The information for 1990-91 is available in the "1993 Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development". Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Information on NHS research and development commissioned at regional and local level is not collected by the Department.

Police Surgeons

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many police surgeons there were in each of the last five years by local authority and region.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

ENI Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what transactions his Department has had since 1979 with the ENI Group of companies.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department has no record of any transaction with the ENI Group.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to arrange a meeting with the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc to discuss the commercial implications for nuclear reprocessing and the oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield of a delay in the Japanese plutonium fuel re-use policy.

Mr. Eggar: I meet the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc from time to time to discuss a range of issues.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent communications he has received from the United States Department of Energy in regard to the historic use or current disposition of the plutonium from United Kingdom civil reactors exported to the United States since 1964 under the provisions of the Anglo-American agreement on the "Co-operation on the Uses of Atomic Energy for Mutual Defence Purposes" of 1958, Cm. 537, as amended.

Mr. Eggar: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 8 February 1994, Official Report, columns 227-28.

Defence Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) of 22 June, Official Report, column 230, if he will exceptionally give details of the three export licences issued to Argentina for defence equipment, to which the reply refers.

Mr. Needham: The export licences referred to covered sporting shotgun cartridges and humane cattle stunning blanks. None of the goods were covered by the arms embargo.

I cannot give more information for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Oil and Gas, Scotland

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of United Kingdom oil and gas production comes from Scotland at the latest available date; and what was the proportion in 1979.

Mr. Eggar: Nearly all of the United Kingdom's oil and natural gas production comes from the offshore part of the United Kingdom continental shelf. In 1993, this accounted for 97·4 per cent. of production, with the remaining 2·6 per cent. coming from onshore production in England. The corresponding proportions in 1979 were 99·9 per cent. and 0·1 per cent. respectively.

Iran

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further exceptions there have been concerning the Government's export licensing policy towards Iran following his statement of 18 January, Official Report, column 509.

Mr. Needham: As I said in my earlier statement, a number of representations have been received by my Department concerning export business entered into before the moratorium on export licenses was imposed on 17 December 1992. We have identified a second case concerning the completion of a contract for repair and overhaul in the United Kingdom of non-lethal aircraft components.

Given the circumstances, we have agreed to issue a licence for a small number of components to be returned to their owners in Iran unrepaired.

Deregulation

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will announce the membership and terms of reference of the deregulation task force.

Mr. Heseltine: The terms of reference of the deregulation task force, chaired by the right hon. Francis Maude are:

To help the President of the Board of Trade promote deregulation which will enhance the competitiveness of United Kingdom business and the effectiveness of the voluntary sector.

To advise him on action for Government Departments and associated bodies or agencies to take to remove unnecessary regulation or to reduce the burden of necessary regulation. This will include domestic, European and international regulation enforced in the United Kingdom.

The members are:

Tessa Baring (Barnados), David Campbell (Fine Organics), Maurice Denyer (Fowler Bros.), Michael Fallon (Management Consultant), Mike Fisher (Whale Tankers), Teresa Graham (Baker Tilly), George Goring (Goring Hotel), Janet Morgan (Sainsbury Family Trusts), Archie Norman (Asda), Tim Parker (Kenwood), David Parry (Business Consultant), Tony Rammelt (Regis), Dan Wright (Albion Automotive) and Peter Wyman (Coopers and Lybrand).

Other appointments may be made in due course.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 July 1994]: All my Department's written answers are printed on recycled paper. Press notices have to be printed in substantial numbers and are printed, on the advice of the printing machine manufacturers, on environmentally friendly paper manufactured from wood from sustainable sources.

Competitiveness White Paper

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total financial cost of publicising his competitiveness White Paper, including unsolicited letters to companies.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 4 July 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 14 June 1994, Official Report, columns 423-24.

Coal Industry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much subsidy for extra sales of deep-mined coal, as outlined in "Prospects for Coal" was paid out by 31 March; how many contracts this involves; what was the tonnage of coal involved in that contract; and what is his estimate of the financial support that will be paid in 1994-95.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 July 1994]: To date, the Department has paid £3,237,639 of subsidy covering the sale of 361,523 tonnes of additional coal in 1993-94. Of this, £651,966 was paid by 31 March. The remainder was paid in June following receipt of authorisation from the European Commission for payments in respect of production from 1 January 1994 onwards.

Altogether the Department has made six offers of subsidy in relation to seven contracts covering some 2 million tonnes of coal. The total amount of subsidy paid in 1994-95 will depend on how successful British Coal and the private sector are in securing further sales.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimate for the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of (a) the number of absent parents who have been assessed by the Child Support Agency and (b) the proportion of those who have made payments as a result of such assessment.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 6 July 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of people assessed by the Child Support Agency, and the number of people paying child maintenance.

To the end of April 1994, 225,600 absent parents had been assessed by the Agency. I regret that a breakdown of those assessed in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas is not available.

With regard to how many absent parents are paying, the Child Support Computer System records client's details on an individual case by case basis, and it is not configured to produce information on the total number of absent parents paying maintenance.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) deductions from earnings orders, (b) poindings and warrant sales and (c) arrestments of bank and building society accounts the Child Support Agency has pursued in Scotland; and what amounts of money have been recovered in each case.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 6 July 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the deductions from earnings orders issued by the Child Support Agency; the number of poindings and warrant sales pursued; and number of arrestments of bank and building society accounts.

To the end of April 1994, deductions from earnings orders had been carried out in 3,800 cases. I regret that a figure for Scotland is not available separately. It is not possible to provide details of the amount of money collected as this is not identified separately from other receipts.

To the same date, the Agency has pursued no poindings and warrant sales, nor arrestments of bank and building society accounts.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what have been the total amounts recovered by the compensation recovery unit in each year since its formation;

(2) in how many cases since its formation the compensation recovery unit has reclaimed money from the bereaved;

(3) what have been the amounts recovered by the compensation recovery unit in each year since its formation from sufferers of asbestos-related diseases or their surviving relatives.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the compensation recovery unit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 5 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking in each year since its formation (i) the total amounts recovered by the Compensation Recovery Unit, (ii) in how many cases it has reclaimed money from the bereaved, (iii) what amounts have been recovered from sufferers of asbestosis related diseases or their surviving relatives.

The total amounts recovered by the Compensation Recovery Unit (CRU) are as follows:

Period	Amount Recovered £ million
1 April 1990—31 March 1991	3·7
1 April 1991—31 March 1992	25·3
1 April 1992—31 March 1993	51·3
1 April 1993—31 March 1994	81·9

The full range of information for your other questions is not available because this information prior to 1993 is no longer held on the CRU computer system. However, I can tell you that in the period 1 April 1993—31 March 1994 there were 170 recoveries made in cases involving deceased claimants and in the same period £408,665 recovered in relation to asbestosis (the system is not designed to identify asbestosis related diseases).

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Childcare Disregard

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tables similar to those in his Department's 1993 tax benefit model tables, but with rents, council tax, benefits and direct taxes updated to 1994, showing the net weekly spending power of a lone mother with two children aged four and six years, now and after introduction of the childcare disregard for family credit, on the assumptions she is (a) not in paid work, (b) working part time earning the maximum income support earnings disregard, (c) working part time for 16 hours earning £40 per week, (d) working part time for 24 hours earning £60 a week and (e) working full time and earning weekly sums from £100 to £300 in increments of £10 and assuming childcare costs of £25 when working 16 hours a week, of £40 when working 24 hours a week, and of £70 when working full time.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables. The childcare disregard will be introduced in October and will apply to the calculation of housing benefit, council tax benefit and disability working allowance as well as family credit. Up to £40 of childcare costs for children under 11 will be disregarded against earnings, provided that care is arranged with a registered childminder or nursery.

The level of earnings in some of the questions is particularly low and not representative of the average working lone parent. In addition, some of the childcare costs specified are significantly higher than those typically encountered at the level of earning specified. Recent research[1] shows that the average weekly childcare costs of working lone parents are £24·60 per week.

"Families, Work, and Benefit" (Policy Studies Institute, June 1993).

Lone mother with 2 children aged 4 and 6.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what facilities his Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Hague: The Department's HQ offices in Westminster are at Richmond house where the facilities are provided by the Department of Health. Richmond house has a cycle rack in the car park where visitors' bicycles can be parked.

Compensation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what powers the compensation recovery unit has to reclaim money paid through invalidity benefit to people aged over 65 years who win court awards for industrial damage to their health;

(2) what powers the compensation recovery unit has to reclaim money paid through the state pension to asbestosis sufferers who win court awards for industrial damage to their health.

Mr. Scott: Section 82 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 and its supporting legislation requires the compensator to deduct the value of invalidity benefit and other relevant benefits and to pay this sum to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State.

Benefits such as retirement pension, which are not paid in respect of an accident, injury or disease, are exempted from recoupment.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the reasons for his policy in respect of the money of court awards for (a) pain, (b) suffering and (c) loss of income by the compensation recovery unit from asbestosis sufferers.

Mr. Scott: The compensation recovery scheme is underpinned by a set of straightforward rules which are designed to be easy to understand and administer.

Because the vast majority of compensation claims are settled informally without an allocation to separate heads of damages, it would be impracticable to introduce a mechanism for disaggregating awards. The scheme therefore has regard to the total payment of damages. The same arrangements apply to out-of-court settlements and to the one per cent. of cases settled in court.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if a person receiving unemployment or sickness benefit before he has contracted asbestosis has to repay a court award for industrial disease under the rules of the compensation recovery unit.

Mr. Scott: The value of unemployment benefit or sickness benefit should be recovered provided it is paid in consequence of the disease for which compensation is awarded. No recovery would be made of prior benefit payments if these were not attributable to the disease.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the reasons for his policy in respect of providing credit to victims of asbestosis for previous national insurance contributions when the compensation recovery unit reclaims court awards.

Mr. Hague: Individuals suffering from asbestosis are awarded national insurance contribution credits in respect of each week of incapacity for which medical evidence is produced, irrespective of any action taken by the compensation recovery unit to recover amounts of contributory benefits paid. Except where they have been paid in error, current provisions do not allow for the refund of contributions, including those on which an award of contributory incapacity benefit was based, since this could have adverse effects on the individual's future benefit entitlement.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) from what date the compensation recovery unit may reclaim benefits in cases where an asbestosis sufferer wins a court award for industrial disease or damages;

(2) what is the policy of the compensation recovery unit in respect of the length a court claim for damages from an asbestosis sufferer takes to settle and the length of claim back by the unit.

Mr. Scott: The period of recovery commences with the date on which a relevant benefit is first claimed in consequence of the disease and ends on the date of settlement or five years from the date of this claim, whichever is earlier. The period is not affected by the time it takes to settle a case in court.

Social Fund

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, when he intends to publish his annual report on the social fund and the social fund commissioner's annual report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State's annual report for 1993-94 (CM 2598) has been published and laid before Parliament today. The report records that gross expenditure in 1993-94 was £442 million, the highest level of expenditure since the fund was established in 1988. This includes 1·8 million non-repayable grants and interest free loans worth £344 million; and funeral, maternity and cold weather payments worth £98 million. The gross budget allocated to the discretionary part of the fund was £346 million, representing an increase of £29 million—nearly 10 per cent —on 1992-93.

In 1994-95 we have built on the substantial increases of earlier years and the gross discretionary budget now stands at £353 million. Since the social fund's inception nearly 9 million discretionary grants and interest-free loans worth almost £1·6 billion have been made to people on low incomes. Cold weather payments will increase from £6 to £7 from 1 November 1994 and further increase to £7·50 a year later. These increases will enhance safeguards for the most vulnerable in the community such as elderly and disabled people and those with very young children.

The social fund commissioner's annual report has also been published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

WALES

Location Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish the number of companies for each of the last 10 years which have received grants or loans in respect of locating in Wales and which have been subsequently moved from Wales, indicating the year of removal; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish for each of the last 10 years and the total for the last 10 years (i) the total cost to the Exchequer of grants or loans made in respect of companies locating in Wales, (ii) the total cost to the Exchequer of grants or loans made in respect of companies locating in Wales but which subsequently moved from Wales and (iii) the figures in (ii) as a percentage of (i);

(3) if he will publish a list of all companies for each of the last 10 years which have received grants or loans in respect of locating in Wales and which have subsequently moved from Wales.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Redwood: The only advisory body set up in Wales since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993" last December is the Welsh Economic Council.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Redwood: None of the advisory NDPBs sponsored by the Welsh Office is required by statute to publish its advice to Government; however, they may choose to do so and some do. The objective, for example, of the housing management advisory panel is to produce good practice guidance in housing management aimed primarily at local authorities; this guidance is published.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament; and if he will list them.

Mr. Redwood: The list is as follows:

Ancient Monuments Board for Wales
Historic Buildings Council for Wales
Library and Information Services Council (Wales)

In addition, the National Rivers Authority advisory committee for Wales, although not required to do so by statute, does publish an annual report, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Redwood: The following advisory NDPBs sponsored by the Welsh Office are required to produce annual reports:

Ancient Monuments Board for Wales
Historic Buildings Council for Wales
Library and Information Services Council (Wales)
Welsh Committee for Postgraduate Pharmaceutical Education
Welsh Committee for Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education
Welsh Medical Committee
Welsh Dental Committee
Welsh Nursing and Midwifery Committee
Welsh Optical Committee
Welsh Pharmaceutical Committee
Welsh Scientific Advisory Committee

In addition, the National Rivers Authority Advisory Committee for Wales, although not required to do so by statute, does publish an annual report.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory basis; and if he will list them.

Mr. Redwood: The following advisory NDPBs sponsored by the Welsh Office have a statutory basis, as indicated:

National Rivers Authority Advisory Committee for Wales
(Section 6 of the Water Resources Act 1991.)

Agricultural Dwelling House Advisory Committees
(Of which there are 6 in Wales, established under the Rent (Agriculture) Act 1976.)

Ancient Monuments Board for Wales
(First constituted under the Ancient Monuments Consolidation and Amendment Act 1913, now constituted under Section 22 of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979.)

Hill Farming Advisory Sub-Committee for Wales
(Section 32 of the Hill Farming Act 1946.)

Historic Buildings Council for Wales
(Section 3 of Part 1 of the Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments Act 1953.)

Library and Information Services Council (Wales)
(Section 2 of the Public Libraries and Museum Act 1964); Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales (Section 53) of the Local Government Act 1972.)

Welsh Committee for Postgraduate Pharmaceutical Education and Welsh Committee for Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education (Recognised under Section 2(b) of the National Health Service Act 1977.)

Welsh Medical Committee

Welsh Dental Committee

Welsh Nursing and Midwifery Committee

Welsh Optical Committee

Welsh Pharmaceutical Committee and Welsh Scientific Advisory Committee
(All recognised under the NHS Reorganisation Act 1973, Sections 5 and 6 Appropriation Act.)

In addition, the Mental Handicap Advisory Panel has no statutory basis, however I have powers under section 2 of the National Health Services Act 1977 to provide such services as are appropriate to assist me in discharging my duties.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied to them.

Mr. Redwood: There is no statutory requirement to consult any of the advisory NDPBs prior to legislation proposals, however I may choose to do so.

Unemployment, Alyn and Deeside

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many long-term unemployed people there are in the constituency of Alyn and Deeside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: In April 1994, the number of claimants who had been unemployed for more than 52 weeks in the Alyn and Deeside constituency was 920. This is less than half the number in April 1986.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place in the Library copies of the findings.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage in each county of people who find work after "training for work"; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is in relation to the seven training and enterprise council areas in Wales which do not coincide with the eight counties. The information is provided in the following table on those who have found work and remain in employment six months after completing training for work.

Training for work job outcomes

	Percentage in a job
Gwent	43
Mid Glamorgan	44
North East Wales	29
North West Wales	32
Powys	43
South Glamorgan	38
West Wales	44
Wales Total	42
England and Wales	36

Source: TFW Follow-up September 1992 to August 1993.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people in each of the constituencies in Wales have taken up training credits; and what plans he has to extend the scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Figures on the take-up of training credits are not collected on a constituency basis. The table shows the numbers who have taken up the offer of a credit, by training and enterprise council area, for the period since the scheme was launched until 27 March 1994:

	Scheme started	Number of starts
North East Wales TEC	1 April 1991	3,972
Mid Glamorgan TEC	29 March 1993	2,445

Two further training and enterprise councils, South Glamorgan and West Wales, will start offering credits in 1994-95, with North West Wales coming into operation in 1995-96 and Gwent and Powys in 1996-97.

Land and Property

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the acquisition of land and property for road construction.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The general policy is that all land that is needed for trunk road construction is acquired under compulsory purchase. When a scheme is at the public consultation stage or a preferred route is protected for planning purposes landowners can ask that the Department acquire their property under statutory or discretionary powers. They would need to demonstrate that they were unable to sell their property at normal market value because of the impending road scheme. Each case is considered on its merits and decisions are taken on the basis of the level of impact that the road proposals will have.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the management of land and property acquired as a consequence of road construction plans.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Land and property which is acquired in advance of trunk road schemes is managed until it is needed for the works. It is maintained and let where appropriate. Residential property capable of being used for social purposes is offered for short tenancies of a fixed-term nature to housing associations and local housing authorities. Any land or property which is eventually surplus is sold on the open market.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning the disposal of surplus land and property.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department disposes of surplus land and property on the open market at the best price to the public purse, in line with Treasury guidance. Local housing authorities and housing associations are given the opportunity to bid on residential property.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated value of land and property held by his Department as a consequence of actual and proposed road programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The estimated disposable value of land and property acquired in advance of proposed trunk road schemes which is or will eventually be surplus to requirements is £4·5 million. Land and property which is required for operational use is not revalued subsequent to acquisition.

Consultation Documents (Bilingual Form)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 651, what considerations led him to issue "Implications of Local Government Reorganisation in Wales for Health Boundaries and Proposals for Restructuring Health Authorities" in the English language only; if he will make it his policy to issue all consultation documents in bilingual form; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Timing constraints made it impractical to issue a Welsh version. Each case is considered on its merits but whenever possible consultation documents will be made available in English and Welsh.

Access to Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many requests his Department has received for information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992; how many were responded to within two months; how many were refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office does not keep records of the number of requests received under the 1992 environmental information regulations; only refusals are specifically logged. Internal procedures, however, seek to ensure that all correspondence is responded to reasonably promptly, and normally well within the two months specified in the regulations.

Up to 30 June 1994, the Welsh Office refused one request for information under the regulations, on the ground that it was commercially confidential.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has given to the members of the board of the Development Board for Rural Wales concerning the chairmanship of its meetings.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer Monday 4 July 1994]: None. The DBRW board decided that its meetings should be chaired by the senior board member present.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the board of the Development Board for Rural Wales with respect to the reporting instructions and the chain of command pending the appointment of a replacement chairman.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer Monday 4 July 1994]: The normal consultative arrangements between the Department and the DBRW continue to operate. As regards the conduct of its own business, meetings of the DBRW board are chaired by the senior board member present.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Select Committees

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to place in the Library the revised memorandum of guidance for officials appearing before Select Committees.

Mr. Waldegrave: A copy of the revised memorandum of guidance will be placed in the Library shortly at the same time as it is circulated to Government Departments.

Occupational Health Service

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what key performance targets he has set for the Occupational Health Service executive agency for the current year.

Mr. David Davis: The key performance targets for the Occupational Health Service executive agency for 1994-95 are:

to break even in accrual accounting terms;

to turn round 15 days, 80 per cent. of case referrals where no additonal information is required and 58 per cent. within 40 days when additional information is required; to earn customer post-service satisfaction evaluations of 90 per cent. in the two highest categories; to issue at least 90 per cent. of invoices error free.

In addition the Occupational Health Service has cost containment targets the details of which are commercially sensitive.

Contracting Out

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list those central Government information technology outsourcing contracts that have been awarded to private companies since April 1992 and their value, where that company winning the tender has not undertaken previous work for central Government;

(2) if he will list those central Government information technology contracts that have been awarded to private companies as a result of market testing since April 1992, together with their values, the names of the companies to which they were awarded and the names of the companies or organisations that previously provided these services.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the period from April 1992-December 1993, Departments have reported to the efficiency unit that IT support functions worth £291 million were examined under the competing for quality programme.

From Department's reports to the efficiency unit, and contract awards reported in the market testing bulletin in 1994, work in the following areas has been awarded to external contractors.

Department
Ministry of Defence:	Operations West IT processing.
Department of the Environment:	Planning Inspectorate IT Project management.

Department
Export Credits Guarantee Department:	IT operational support.
Department of Health:	Operation and redevelopment of the Hospital Episodes Statistics System (HES).
Inland Revenue:	IT Services.
Department of National Heritage:	IT provision.
Northern Ireland Civil Service:	Data Preparation. Operations of Mainframe computer services. Computer network management.
Ordnance Survey:	Digital Conversion of 1/10,000 mapping. Hardware maintenance. Mainframe services.
Office of Public Service and Science: Recruitment Assessment Services	Computer hardware maintenance. Office automation software support.
Department of Trade and Industry:	Database Maintenance.

Some information on companies winning tenders is in the market testing bulletin, which is in the Library.

For other details of contract values, the companies winning tenders and the organisations previously carrying out the work, I refer the hon. Member to individual Departments.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration has been given to maintaining statistics of the number of live animals exported from the United Kingdom and then returned to Britain for sale; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The maintenance of a wide range of statistics has been considered, but the data in question are not collected.

Rabbits

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her estimate of changes in the rabbit population in the last 10 years, both nationally and regionally; what action she intends to take or has recommended; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Detailed regional surveys of rabbit populations between 1980 asnd 1986 showed a steady increase in the distribution and abundance of rabbits, particularly in eastern and south-eastern England. Nationally, numbers are now estimated to be about 30 per cent. of pre-myxomatosis levels, that is at about 30 million, and are rising at a rate of 2 per cent. per year. In some areas the populations are back to pre-myxomatosis levels.

Section 1 of the Pests Act 1954 places a continuing obligation on occupiers of land designated as rabbit clearance areas to control rabbits harboured on their land. The current Rabbit Clearance Order, issued in 1972, covers the whole of England and Wales excluding the City of London, the Isles of Scilly and Skokholm island.

Where occupiers are failing to meet their obligations under the 1954 Act, Agriculture Ministers have the power, under section 98 of the Agriculture Act 1947, to require action to be taken. These discretionary powers will be invoked where the situation has not been resolved satisfactorily within a reasonable period of time.

The Ministry is aware of the damage that rabbits can cause and keeps its policy on rabbit control under continual review. The Ministry is funding R and D to establish improved methods for cost-effective and humane rabbit control.

Comfrey

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is held by her Department concerning the findings of recent surveys on the safety of comfrey and comfrey products; and whether the findings of those surveys support or contradict the retention of a ban on comfrey products.

Mr. Soames: I have received from the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy a paper entitled "The safety-in-use of comfrey and comfrey products: Research survey". I shall take this opportunity to review the situation. I assure my hon. Friend that whatever further action I take to protect public health will be based on the best scientific advice available.

Access to Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many requests her Department has received for information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992; how many were answered within two months; how many were refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Mr. Jack: The Department does not keep records of the number of requests received under the Environmental Information Regulations 1992, nor when they were answered. The Department does, however, keep records of refusals to supply information and the grounds for doing so. In the period up to 30 June 1994, the Department refused one request for information on the ground that it was commercially confidential to the informant.

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funding her Department has offered to the Public Health Laboratory Service for research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy and Creutzfeldt Jakob disease; and which member of the staff is to carry out the research.

Mr. Soames: None.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the result of the work of the Public Health Laboratory Service about a possible test for transmissible spongiform encephalopathies in animals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Joint work between this Ministry's central veterinary laboratory and Dr. Narang at the Newcastle public health laboratory in which specimens were examined blind by him using an electron microscope technique he had developed, and by the CVL using conventional established techniques, did not indicate that Dr. Narang's technique was any improvement.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports she has received concerning Dr. Harash Narang's work on transmissible spongiform encephalopathies; and if she will place these reports in the Library.

Mr. Soames: MAFF is co-funding research with the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council designed to repeat independently the procedures used by Dr. Narang and to assess his reported observations. These studies are being undertaken with the co-operation and involvement of Dr. Narang.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made by Government-funded institutions towards a test for bovine spongiform encephalopathy and other transmissible spongiform encephalopathies in animals and humans.

Mr. Soames: Government-funded research aimed at developing a diagnostic test for BSE in live cattle is in progress. The results of this research will be published when the work has been completed.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Quality

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which high-profile sites in need of water quality improvements in addition to EU directive requirements will be included in the Director General of Water Services' review of price limits for water companies;

(2) what provision is being made for protecting river sites of special scientific interest from deterioration due to sewage effluent during the 1995-2000 investment programme for Water Services plc.

Mr. Gummer: We have informed the Director General of Water Services that, in addition to spending required to meet existing obligations including those imposed by European Community directives, we consider that in the period 1995 to 2000 a further £522·3 million of spending specifically to improve the quality of rivers should be enabled to proceed, including in Wales. He has told me that he will take this spending into account in determining the new price limits which he is to announce on 28 July. The distribution of the additional spending between sewerage company areas is as in the table. It represents guidance on the extent to which the National Rivers Authority will, in the period 1995 to 2000, require additional expenditure by water and sewerage plcs by tightening sewage works discharge consents so as to bring about further improvements in river quality, over and above improvements which will result from the existing obligations arising from European Community and domestic legislation. It will be for the NRA in consultation with the companies to determine the most cost-effective use of this expenditure. I expect, however, that it will include, inter alia, priority schemes to continue the improvement of water quality in the Mersey basin, the Aire and Calder catchment, the Norfolk Broads, and the Worcestershire Stour; and schemes to improve other rivers such as the Tame to the north-east of Birmingham, the Surrey Blackwater, the lower Nene, and the Hampshire Avon.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: No such surveys have been conducted across my Department. Small-scale surveys have been conducted in two operational units comprising in total about 500 staff, the results of which are confidential to management and the staff concerned.

"Using Water Wisely"

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he gave to the usage of valve flushes in his consultations in respect of his paper "Using Water Wisely".

Mr. Atkins: The consultation paper suggested that new research is necessary. Tenders have recently been invited for a research project on water economy which includes an evaluation of various flushing devices including flushing valves.

Bridleways

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make a statement about progress on the Pennine bridleway.

Mr. Atkins: The Countryside Commission submitted to the Secretary of State its supplementary report outlining revised proposals for the bridleway on 1 July last year. Following further necessary consultation, I am presently considering the matter and I expect to anounce my decision shortly.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to ensure that droveways fall within the right of way in common law known as bridleways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I am not convinced that legislation is either necessary or appropriate. At common law, not every droveway is also a bridleway, and not every bridleway is also subject to the right to drive beasts. Where there is a public right of way for vehicles, bridleway and droveway rights would normally be included. However where, for example, old maps show a route as a "droveway", or "driftway", it is not to be assumed from that alone that a public right of way for vehicles also exists. In all cases where the correct classification of a public right of way is in issue, all available and relevant evidence must be considered to establish the exact nature of the rights the public have acquired.

Bathing Water

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been commissioned by his Department on the possible link between dirty beaches, seawater and children's health.

Mr. Atkins: The four-year study into the health effects of sea bathing, commissioned by the Department and others, and published in January this year included children's health. In the main part of the investigation, 52 per cent. of swimmers and 31 per cent. of paddlers studied in the beach surveys were children of 5 to 14 years.

Access to Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many requests for information his Department has received under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992; how many were answered within two months; how many were refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Mr. Atkins: My Department does not keep central records of the number of individual requests it receives for information. We do, however, look very carefully at every case of refusal.

In the period up to 30 June 1994, the Department refused 13 requests. One refusal arose from the Department's inability to respond within the two-month time limit. The remaining refusals related to the following grounds—some refusals covered more than one ground: commercial confidentiality (3), international relations (1), national security (1), legal or other proceedings (4), requested information not held (1), request considered manifestly unreasonable (1), incomplete documents (2), confidential deliberations (2) and internal communications (2).

Pollution (Structural Damage)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has undertaken in the last three years to assess the damage to buildings by vehicle exhaust fumes.

Mr. Atkins: My Department is currently reviewing and assessing what future research on the effects of air pollution on materials is required. Following the recommendations of a consultancy undertaken by the University of East Anglia for the Department, a workshop is being held later this month in London with leading United Kingdom researchers in the field. It is envisaged that priority areas for future research on materials will be identified in this workshop.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to undertake further studies to assess the damage to buildings by vehicle exhaust fumes.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has funded research at the Building Research Establishment, Middlesex university, Queens university Belfast and University of Manchester institute of science and technology. Such research has, for example, examined the soiling of materials and the erosion effects from NOx, nitrates and SO_2 on materials. A consultancy was also undertaken by the University of East Anglia which reviewed current United Kingdom research into the effects of air pollution on materials.

Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Luff To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes were made to the external finance limits for the urban development corporations in 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: Changes were announced in my answers of 8 June 1993, Official Report, column 196 and 1 November 1993, Official Report, column 5. In addition amendments were made during 1993-94 to the external finance limits for the Plymouth, Black Country and Birmingham Heartlands development corporations.

These comprised a £1,000,000 reduction for Plymouth development corporation arising from unavoidable project delays and corresponding increases of £400,000 for a relocation project at Birmingham Heartlands development corporation and £600,000 towards the Moxley-Lunt link road project at Black Country development corporation.

Overall there has been no change in the funding of the urban development corporation programme.

Conservation

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the draft Conservation (Natural Habitats, &c.) Regulations would amend planning legislation.

Mr. Curry: The planning aspects of the draft regulations which were laid before Parliament on 4 July 1994 implement the assessment and decision-making requirements of the habitats directive in respect of the land use planning system in England and Wales and in Scotland.

The main amendments made to planning legislation by the regulations are to:

(a) restrict the granting of planning permission for development which is likely significantly to affect a Special Protection Area (SPA) designated under the Birds Directive or a Special Area of Conservation (SAC) to be classified under the Habitats Directive;

(b) require the review of existing planning permissions which have not been fully implemented and which are likely significantly to affect a designated SPA or an SAC when it is classified, and if necessary the taking of appropriate action;

(c) prevent the General Development Order (and the General Permitted Development Order in Scotland) granting permitted development rights which will adversely affect the integrity of an SPA or SAC;

(d) prevent other existing and future development orders, simplified planning zone schemes and enterprise zone schemes from granting permission for development which is likely significantly to affect an SPA or SAC.

The regulations are not a new departure for planning so much as a reinforcement of our existing approach. We have a firm and well-established framework for safeguarding the natural heritage, which has been strengthened significantly in recent years. This framework enables us to protect nationally and internationally important sites in terms that are broadly consistent with the habitats directive. The regulations will ensure that we comply fully with its requirements.

We will provide advice on the regulations in the planning policy guidance note on nature conservation for local planning authorities in England. The PPG will be published after Parliament has approved the regulations. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales will be providing separate advice for local planning authorities in Scotland and in Wales.

Under the provision referred to at (b), it is possible that a local authority might exceptionally need to make an order to modify or revoke a planning permission or discontinue a use of land. We expect any such orders to be rare, because of the protection already afforded to important nature conservation sites, and because an order would be needed only if a development would adversely affect the integrity of the site and a satisfactory planning obligation could not be reached. An order would take effect when served, but would be subject to confirmation by the appropriate Secretary of State. The existing entitlement under planning law to compensation in connection with modification, revocation and discontinuance orders would apply, as would the liability on the local authority to pay it. The Government would, however, consider reimbursing a local authority if the compensation costs were high and the action taken was no more than was necessary to overcome the adverse effects of the planning permission. It would not meet the costs of an authority which unreasonably served an order which was not subsequently confirmed by the Secretary of State.

We are grateful to those who responded to the consultation paper on amending the General Development Order—see (c)—which we issued last year for England and Wales. Copies of their responses have been placed in the Department of the Environment library, and a summary and list of them have been deposited in the Libraries of the House of Commons and House of Lords. The amendments in the draft regulations would mean that permitted development rights would not be available for any development which was likely significantly to affect an SPA or SAC, unless the local authority had decided that it would not adversely affect the integrity of the site. A developer who was uncertain about whether a proposal would be likely to have a significant effect on an SPA or SAC would be able to obtain an opinion from English Nature or the Countryside Council for Wales. The consultation paper also covered our proposal to remove permitted development rights for development requiring environmental assessment under the 1988 EA regulations; we will be announcing our decision on this separately.

As well as amending planning legislation, the draft regulations amend highways legislation to achieve similar results to (a) and (b) above for road construction or improvement projects proposed by the Secretary of State. They also amend the Pipe-lines Act 1962, the Electricity Act 1989 and the Transport and Works Act 1992 to make similar provisions in relation to the construction of generating stations and the installation of electric lines above ground; the construction and diversion of pipelines; and the construction of transport systems, inland waterways and works interfering with rights of navigation.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further announcement about the implementation of the Local Government Commission's recommendations for the establishment of four unitary authorities in Cleveland following the High Court judgment on 28 June.

Mr. Curry: The High Court judgment has now been given on the legal challenges by Avon, Somerset and Cleveland county councils against the Local Government Commission and the Government in respect of the Commission's recommendations for new local government structures in Avon, Somerset and Cleveland. I hope all authorities will study it closely before embarking on any further litigation.

The delay caused by this case has led me to reconsider the timing of the establishment of unitary authorities in Cleveland. In an answer on 11 May, column 170, I said that our intention to transfer county functions to unitary districts in Cleveland on 1 April 1995 was subject to the outcome of the judicial review case. At that stage we did not know when the judgment was likely to be made. I am mindful of the need to ensure a smooth transition, with an adequate time for the planning of change. It is of paramount importance that there should be no risk to the delivery of essential services in the areas concerned. In view of the relatively short time that would be available between the making of an order and a start date for unitary authorities of 1 April 1995, I have decided that it would be in the best interests of the inhabitants of Cleveland to establish the four unitary authorities as from 1 April 1996, with elections to be held in May 1995, for councillors who will plan for change and then become councillors of the unitary authorities once they are established. I will very shortly send the local authorities in Cleveland a draft order, incorporating these revised dates, for comment.

SCOTLAND

Disabled People

13. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement regarding the future financing of blind and disabled workshops.

Mr. Stewart: As indicated when I met the hon. Gentleman and delegates from Blindcraft, the National League for the Blind and Disabled and Strathclyde social work department recently, the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill includes provision for the transfer of property, assets, liabilities and obligations to the relevant successor authority. We propose that any obligations which a local authority has in respect of workshops for blind and disabled people will be transferred to the appropriate new authority from 1 April 1996.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of ENABLE to discuss issues affecting disabled people; when he next plans to meet them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 July 1994]: Scottish Office officials met representatives of ENABLE to discuss a range of issues in September 1993. My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State expects to meet an all-party group on disability and disablement in the next few weeks.

Regional Councils

15. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the present regional council administrations in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: New regional councils were elected in Scotland in May to serve for two years until the two-tier system of local government is replaced in 1996 by a single tier of all-purpose authorities.

Forestry

16. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make public the findings of the review group appointed in March 1993 and established to look at the ownership and management of woodlands; and if he will make a statement on the development of forestry policy.

Sir Hector Monro: An announcement about our conclusions on the forestry review group proposals will be made shortly.

22. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount of tree clearance currently taking place in the United Kingdom; and what is the annual rate of replanting.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission fells and replants about 8,000 hectares of woodland each year. Last year the Commission gave approval for 13,000 hectares of privately-owned woodland to be felled over the next five years. Practically all the woodlands which are felled will be replanted.

Investment

17. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had this year with the Scottish Trades Union Congress relating to the level of investment in the Scottish economy.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has arranged to meet the STUC general council on 22 July. It is expected that the level of investment in the Scottish economy will be discussed at that meeting.

Employment

18. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss employment and the Scottish economy.

Mr. Stewart: At the meeting on 22 July to which I referred earlier, employment and other matters related to the Scottish economy will be discussed by my right hon. Friend and the STUC.

Speed Limits

19. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for 20 mph zones have been received by his Department; and how many have been granted approval.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office industry department has received six applications from local roads authorities requesting my right hon. Friend's consent to allow them to make 20 mph speed limit orders. My right hon. Friend has authorised four of them to date.

Ambulance Service

20. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future of the Scottish ambulance service.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish ambulance service has applied to become an NHS trust in order to improve further the services that it provides to patients. Its application is at present subject to public consultation which will be completed by 18 August. A decision on the application will be taken thereafter by my right hon. Friend on whether to approve NHS trust status in light of all the comments received in response to the consultation process.

Drug Education

21. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to monitor drug education in schools.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Her Majesty's inspectors of schools include drugs education within their normal programmes of school inspection. They also hold regular discussions with education authorities about health education, including drugs education, policies. Responsibility for the content of the school curriculum rests with education authorities and individual head teachers.

Local Government Reorganisation

23. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the reform of local government in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend continues to receive a range of representations about the Government's proposals for local government reform in Scotland. Since January, I have met 27 hon. Members who accompanied delegations.

36. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Confederation of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss changes in Scottish local government.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend last met the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on 28 January 1994. The convention did not raise any issues relating to local government reform at that meeting.

Education (Funding)

24. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has had about the funding of education in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I receive comments from time to time about the funding of education in Scotland from a number of sources. I am satisfied that Scottish education is appropriately funded.

Local Services

25. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Confederation of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss the provision of local services.

Mr. Stewart: As I told the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) on 25 May, Official Report, column 205, my right hon. Friend and I will be meeting COSLA representatives on 22 July as part of the normal consultation on local government finance matters.

Housing

26. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in Scotland since May 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As at end December 1993, over 284,000 houses had been sold to sitting tenants of local authorities and other public sector landlords in Scotland.

Contaminated Land

27. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what priority he gives to clearing up contaminated land when considering financial allocations to Scottish Enterprise and Glasgow development agency.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has made it clear, in his strategic and policy guidance to Scottish Enterprise, that its main priority in environmental matters is the eradication of environmental dereliction; and that there remains the need to tackle systematically and rationally the problems of dereliction and contamination. He expects that schemes which combine environmental improvements with economic gains should generally merit priority; and that schemes which remove health or other hazards should be given priority over comparable projects with no such impact.

My right hon. Friend takes these factors into account, along with others, in making resources available to Scottish Enterprise each year. Day-to-day decisions on the relative priority and resources to be afforded to particular schemes or projects are, however, a matter for Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies, in the light of my right hon. Friend's strategic guidance.

The allocation of resources to Glasgow development agency is a matter for Scottish Enterprise.

Training

28. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of Scottish Enterprise to discuss training.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of Scottish Enterprise on 20 June 1994, when a range of issues, including training, was discussed.

A7

29. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about upgrading the A7 trunk road.

Mr. Lang: Following the routes south of Edinburgh consultation in 1989-90, work on the A7 in Scotland is being taken forward in three sections. From the border to Hawick, a route action plan has been published and two significant road improvement schemes are currently being constructed to provide safe overtaking stretches on the section. From Hawick to Galashiels a report has been prepared by consultants to examine the opportunity to improve safe overtaking provision. North of Galashiels, following views expressed by environmental bodies during the routes south of Edinburgh consultation, consultants have examined whether a new road could be constructed without unacceptable environmental consequences. The consultants work on these latter two sections is now being assessed by my officials.

Grampian Enterprise

30. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of Grampian Enterprise to discuss its role in the local economy.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of Grampian Enterprise at a Scottish Enterprise conference on 25 March 1994.

Defence Spending (Employment Implications)

31. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has had any representations on the effect of defence spending on Scottish employment.

Mr. Stewart: Since the announcement of the "Front Line First" study on 1 December 1993 by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, I have received 145 representations about military establishments in Scotland.

Seat Belts

32. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends introducing Scottish legislation to make safety seat belts compulsory on school buses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for vehicle safety matters throughout the United Kingdom rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. His Department has recently completed a review of the technical and cost implications of fitting seat belts to all minibuses and coaches, and related safety matters. Decisions on the outcome of that review will be announced shortly.

Local Government (Alleged Corruption)

33. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about corruption in local government in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend receives, from time-to-time, representations about alleged corrupt practices by Scottish local authorities. All such representations are carefully considered in the context of the statutory powers available to my right hon. Friend, and complainants are informed of forms of redress available —for example, the courts, the Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland, and the local government ombudsman.

Day-care Facilities, North Tayside

34. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals his Department has received from Tayside health board in respect of day care facilities in north Tayside.

Mr. Stewart: It is for Tayside health board and Tayside regional council to determine the level of day-care facilities required in north Tayside. I understand that the board is considering using Meigle hospital as a base for enhanced community health services which will include:

Extended District Nursing and Health Visiting.

New developments in Specialist Dementia Care and Palliative Care Nurses.

New Direct Access (by GP referral) to Physiotherapy, Occupational Therapy, Increased Dietetic and Foot Care Services.

Possible development of community day services.

It is for Tayside regional council to consider the level and location of social work day-care services.

Unemployment

35. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the trend in unemployment in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: Unemployment is on a downward trend. Since December 1992, the level of seasonally adjusted unemployment has fallen by 17,100 to stand at 232,500 and 9·3 per cent. of the work force in May 1994.

Local Councillors (Payments)

37. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to address the level of payments to local authority councillors.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 22 June 1994, Official Report, column 239.

Higher Education (Access)

38. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department has made of the system of Scottish highers as a means of gaining entry to higher education in relation to systems in other EU countries.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on 23 February 1994, Official Report, column 292. The report to which I referred then has now been published.

Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many requests for environmental information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992 have been received by his Department; how many were answered within two months; how many were refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish Office does not keep records of the number of requests received under the environmental information regulations, nor when they were answered. However, we do keep records of any refusals to supply information and of the grounds on which they have been made.

In the period up to 30 June 1994, there have been no refusals. However, we have had one case where information was given in a manner which did not divulge specific information for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

EC Funds

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish an estimate, on the basis of the criteria operated by the EC, on whether Scotland would be a net contributor or a net recipient of funds in the event of an independent Scotland being a member of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 June 1994]: Estimating whether an independent Scotland would be a net contributor to, or a net recipient from, the EC budget would be a complex exercise which could not be undertaken except at disproportionate cost. In view of the hypothetical nature of the question, such costs would not be justified. In the unlikely event of Scottish independence, Scotland's net position would depend on its terms of membership of the European Union.

Prisoners (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Northern Ireland prisoners have received transfers from Scotland to Northern Ireland since 1 January 1993; and how many were (a) permanent, (b) temporary, (c) male, (d) female, (e) loyalists and (f) republican transfers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 July 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 6 July 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question about the number of Northern Ireland prisoners who have received transfers from Scotland to Northern Ireland since 1 January 1993; and how many were (a) permanent, (b) temporary, (c) male, (d) female, (e) loyalists and (f) republican transfers.

Since 1 January 1993 a total of 5 male prisoners have received transfers from Scotland to Northern Ireland. Of those who were transferred 3 were permanently transferred and 2 were transferred on a temporary basis. No female prisoners have been transferred since 1 January 1993 to date.

I am unable to inform you whether the prisoners transferred were loyalist or republican as prisoners in Scotland are not classified by reference to the political or other motivation of their offences.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the greatest, the shortest and the average length of time between application by prisoners for temporary or permanent transfer from Scotland to Northern Ireland and notification of the decision to accept or reject the application.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 July 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 6 July 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question as to what was the greatest, the shortest and the average length of time between application by prisoners for temporary or permanent transfer from Scotland to Northern Ireland and notification of the decision to accept or reject the application.

Transfers of prisoners between Scotland and Northern Ireland have been effected since the introduction of the Criminal Justice Act 1961. Unfortunately, I am unable to provide you with the information you require as the information could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for how long a prisoner whose application for transfer from Scotland to Northern Ireland is refused must wait before reapplying.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 July 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzel. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzel to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 6 July 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question as to the length of time a prisoner whose application for transfer from Scotland to Northern Ireland is refused must wait before reapplying.

There is no stipulated time which must lapse before a prisoner can reapply for transfer. Each application is considered on its own merits against the set criteria governing United Kingdom interjurisdiction transfers which was announced to Parliament on 23 November 1992.

NORTHERN IRELAND

31 Killinakin Road, Killinchy

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if 31 Killinakin road, Killinchy, County Down is currently classified as a dwelling house; if it is currently occupied; if he has issued any enforcement order to lease the use of this building as a dwelling; and if he will make a statement about the future uses of this building.

Mr. Tim Smith: The property is not classified as a dwelling house and when inspected on 30 June 1994 was unoccupied. No enforcement notice has been issued regarding the use of this building. If the building is used for residential purposes the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, as planning authority, would have to consider whether it would be expedient to initiate enforcement action requiring a discontinuance of that use.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what facilities his Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Sir John Wheeler: There are 40 spaces in the bicycle shed which visitors may use.

Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests for environmental information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992 have been received by his Department; how many were answered within two months; how many were refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Environmental Information Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1993 came into effect on 31 March 1993. Between April and December 1993 a total of 1,221 requests were received by central Government Departments. All were replied to within two months. Six were refused, five on the ground that the information was unavailable and one because it was not defined as within the regulations. Figures for the first half of 1994 are not yet available.

TRANSPORT

Nationality Agreements

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the relationship of European Community regulations or directives to the action proposed by Her Majesty's Government to abolish the current nationality agreements for senior officers on vessels registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: EC directives 89/48/EEC and 92/51/EEC govern the mutual recognition of certain regulated qualifications within the EC. Both permit the competent authority of a member state to satisfy itself that there is an equivalence of standards between its own qualifications and those awarded by the competent authorities of member states. Where there is a substantial difference, a competent authority is entitled to ask the applicant to make up that difference in a number of ways, including an aptitude test or an adaption period.

The proposed EC directive on the minimum level of training for seafarers will ensure that all member states comply with the international convention on standards of training certification and watchkeeping—STCW—and provides that mutual recognition of certificates held by nationals of member states will be subject to the provisions of directives 89/48 and 92/51.

The proposal to relax the current nationality restrictions on senior merchant navy officers, announced on 15 December last by my right hon. Friend will take full account of these developments.

Nudge Bars

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to amend the use and construction regulations for motor vehicles to deal with the construction and safety of nudge bars.

Mr. Key: We have taken steps to identify accidents where a pedestrian has been struck by a vehicle fitted with a bull bar with a view to determining whether bull bars are causing increased injuries. We do not expect to see results from this exercise before the end of 1994. It would not be sensible to legislate before considering those results.

Driving Test Centres (Closures)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that there are no closures of driving test centres in the current and the next financial year beyond the 22 announced already.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. John Ford. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Ford to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 4 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about test centre closures in the current and next financial year.

As I explained in my reply of 20 June to PQ 2552/93/94 there are no driving test centres, in addition to the 22 announced recently, that are currently being considered for closure. The Agency will, however, continue to keep its estate under review and I am unable to give any assurance that no further closures will be considered during the period you refer to.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what facilities his Department provides for the parking of bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Norris: Visitors may use cycle racks in 2 Marsham street and Romney house.

Marine Transport Policy

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications of the European habitat and species directive on marine transport policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The implications of the directive of the United Kingdom including those for marine transport policy, have been taken into account in the framing of draft regulations which have been laid before the House by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Wales and for Scotland.

Railway Lines (Vandalism)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway employees have (a) died, (b) suffered injury or (c) been placed on sick leave as a result of having experienced acts of vandalism or other such criminal activities on railway lines in each of the past 15 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The available statistics show that, from 1 January 1990 to 31 March 1994 no railway employee died as a result of vandals obstructing the line or throwing objects at trains but the following injuries have been suffered as a consequence of these causes:

1990 1 serious and 6 minor injuries
1991 none serious but 2 minor injuries
1992 1 serious and 8 minor injuries
1993 2 serious and 18 minor injuries
1994 none serious but 4 minor injuries (to 31 March)

The other information requested is not available.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway passengers have (a) died or (b) suffered injury as a result of acts of vandalism or other such criminal activities on railway lines in each of the past 15 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The available statistics show that, from 1 January 1990 to 31 March 1994 no railway passenger died as a result of vandals obstructing the line or throwing objects at trains, but the following injuries have been suffered as a consequence of such behaviour:

1990 2 minor injuries
1991 Nil
1992 1 minor injury
1993 Nil
1994 Nil (to 31 March)

Information for earlier years is not available.

British Airways

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had from the chief executive of Manchester airport in regard to the decision made by British Airways to terminate its Los Angeles route from Manchester; what reply he is sending; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 5 July 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has received a letter from the chief executive of Manchester airport concerning British Airway's decision to withdraw from the Manchester to Los Angeles route and will be replying to him shortly.

Railtrack

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all board members of Railtrack, together with their previous occupations and current lengths of contract and remuneration, including all bonuses, fringe benefits, allowances and additional payments over and above basic salary.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 July 1994]: Information available on these appointments, which date from 1 April 1994—other than Mr. Broadhurst's which dates from 1 July 1994—is as follows:

Name	Previous or current occupation	Expiry of appointment	Salary £

[1] Three days per week.
[2] Plus £500 for each Board committee meeting attended.

A bonus scheme for executive members is in preparation. The award of any fringe benefits or allowances is a matter for Railtrack.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) of 3 May, Official Report, column 446, and to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras of 26 May, Official Report, column 284, if he will show for each separate invoice supplied to his Department by Dewe Rogerson for advice on his Department's marketing strategy for rail privatisation, (a) the date on which the invoice was received by his Department, (b) the date on which the invoice was paid by his Department and (c) the amount contained in each separate invoice, inclusive of value added tax; whether he has now received the final invoice from Dewe Rogerson; what is the total amount inclusive of the value added tax, which his Department will have paid to Dewe Rogerson by the time its contract expires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply 5 July 1994]: The information requested in parts (a), (b) and (c) is commercially confidential.

Dewe Rogerson's final invoice has not yet been received and it is not therefore possible to provide a figure for the total amount.

To date Dewe Rogerson has been paid £658,000, including VAT, for this advice.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 7 July 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Provision has been made for spending of £75,000 in the current financial year on subsidised child care for staff at various locations. This will provide 40 nursery day care places for children under five; and approximately 60 play scheme places for children five to 12 years old which are used during the main school holidays. These arrangements generally involve a subsidy of about 50 per cent. of the running costs involved. Subsidised child care provision is provided only if it can be justified on value for money grounds.

The Department does not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" nor make child care vouchers available to staff.

Immigration Appeals

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of running immigration appeals in 1991, 1992 and 1993, measured on a common base.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cost to the Lord Chancellor's Department of running the immigration appellate authorities for the financial years requested, measured on a common base, is as follows:

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
Salaries	1,236,645	1,283,528	1,617,629
General accommodation expenditure	920,585	964,646	1,307,911
Non-running costs[1]	2,539,677	3,134,360	3,472,296
Total	4,696,907	5,382,534	6,397,836

[1] Non-running costs include the full time and part-time judicial officers.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average length of time for an appeal against the granting of a visa to be heard in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The current average time between the immigration appellate authorities receiving a certificate of readiness from a party to the date of a hearing is as follows:

1991—Not available
1992—13¼ weeks
1993—10½ weeks

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only survey of staff undertaken in the last two years has been a review of equal opportunity policy. I am not, at present, able to place a copy of the findings in the Library as the material gathered from the review has not yet been made available to the staff.

Exodus Collective

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the charges recently brought against members of the Exodus Collective near Luton, the outcome in each case and the cost to public funds of the prosecutions.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The following list comprises charges against persons believed to be members of the Exodus Collective, who have appeared before the Crown court at Luton either for trial or on appeal from the magistrates court.

Charges	Result
(1) Violent disorder	Discharged
(2) Violent disorder	Discharged
(3) Possession of controlled drug class A with intent Possessing a controlled drug class A and handling stolen goods × 2	Discharged
(4) Using threatening, abusive or insulting words likely to cause harassment, alarm or distress	Bound over in £250 for 12 months
(5) Using threatening, abusive or insulting words or behaviour with intent to provoke use of violence	Bound over in £250 for 12 months Appeal allowed. Bound over and fine removed
(6) Using threatening, abusive or insulting words likely to cause harassment alarm or distress	Bound over in £250 for 12 months Appeal allowed. Bound over and fine removed

The actual total cost to public funds of the cases listed is not readily available. However, it is estimated to be in the region of £92,000.

In addition, five other persons appeared before Luton magistrates court charged with similar public order offences. The cost of the prosecutions of these further matters is not readily available.

DEFENCE

Target Setting

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the key targets for 1994-95 that have been set for the Hydrographic Office Defence Agency.

Mr. Hanley: The chief executive of the Hydrographic Office Defence Agency has been set the following key targets for 1994-95:

(a) To continue to ensure that all urgent dangers to navigation are promulgated by radio navigational warnings within 20 hours of receipt of the information.
(b) To improve the state of revision of Admiralty navigational charts and publications in waters of UK national responsibility so that at 1 April 1995 82 per cent. will have been revised or reviewed within the previous 10 years and found to need no revision.
(c) To achieve the endorsed and funded Defence programme. In pursuing all of his primary objectives, the chief executive will be expected to strive to deliver optimum value for money.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on key targets for 1994-95 which have been set for the Service Children's Schools (North West Europe) Defence Agency.

Mr. Hanley: The chief executive of SCS (NWE) has been set the following key targets for 1994-95, the agency's fourth year of operation:

(1) For the 42 schools in SCS (NWE), to extend the scope of the local management of schools paralleling, as far as possible, the initiative in the United Kingdom, to include staff costs for locally entered civilians, certain staff costs for United Kingdom-based civilians, building maintenance and utilities.
(2) By 31 December 1994 to launch, and complete, an initial programme of training for head teachers, parents and others serving on school advisory committees so as to develop their advisory role in local school management.
(3) To improve efficiency so as to reduce net expenditure for 1994-95 by 2·5 per cent.
(4) To maintain the overall pass rates in GCSE and A-level grades A to E and achieve a 2 per cent. increase in the percentage of pupils gaining grades A to C in five subjects and achieve an 80 per cent. pass rate in BTEC —first diploma—courses.
(5) During the period of the plan to ensure that 95 per cent. of all teachers meet all the qualifications criteria for their post.
(6) By 31 March 1995, to develop and implement methods for the regular gauging of customer satisfaction with SCS (NWE) schools.
(7) Complete the planned school closure and reorganisation programme in line with the drawdown of British forces in Germany.
(8) Continue to implement the Education Reform Act in accordance with the timetable laid down in the Act and subsequent regulations.

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the chief executives of (a) the Duke of York's Royal Military School and (b) the Queen Victoria School in 1994-95.

Mr. Hanley: The following key targets have been set for the chief executives of the schools in 1994-95:

Duke of York's Royal Military School: Key Targets Curriculum

In August 1994: To achieve at least 97 per cent. of GCSE passes at grades A to G. To achieve at least five GCSE passes at grades A to C for 80 per cent. of pupils. To achieve 85 per cent. of A-level passes at grades A to E. To achieve three A-level passes at grades A to E for 80 per cent. of pupils. To achieve 30 per cent. of A-level passes at grades A and B. To achieve 100 per cent. award rate for BTEC national diploma courses. To implement new timetable in September 1994.

Pastoral

By September 1994: To complete detailed pastoral preparations for co-education. To implement school policy on extra-curricular activities. To update policy on assessing, monitoring and reporting in context of Dearing review.

Finance and Administration

To implement financial measures from pay and conditions review by September 1994. To implement efficiency decisions on management of works services in April 1994. To implement new school clothing system by August 1994. To introduce new software package for administration and finance in September 1994 and to introduce new school billing system. To reduce pupil per capita costs to £11,246 by April 1995.

Development

To review agency framework document by April 1995. To start RAF section of the combined cadet force in September 1994. To achieve 200 applicants for entry in September 1995 by April 1995.

Queen Victoria School: key targets

To achieve at least three standard grade passes at credit and general levels (1-4) for 90 per cent. of S4 pupils. To achieve at least 5 standard grade passes (1-3) for 60 per cent. of S4 pupils. To achieve three higher passes at A-C grades or Scottish Vocational Education Council (SCOTVEC) equivalents for 60 per cent. of S5/S6 pupils. To complete the phased implementation of the national five to 14 programme in line with Scottish Office Education Department (SOED) recommendations. To complete the audit of the school's academic programme in line with the SOED guidelines for school development plans: Scotland: 19 January 1994. To review and where appropriate update curricular guidance (S2/S3) as detailed by the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum: January 1990.

Pastoral

To continue to monitor the effectiveness of the school pastoral policy and organisation document, and specifically to report on parental response on its quality, with reference to "Ethos Indicators in Secondary Schools Scotland: May 1992".

Extra-curricular Provision

To maintain and enrich at least 50 extra-curricular activities, both physical and cultural, involving pupils aged 10-15 in at least three per week and those aged 16-18 in at least two.

Management and development

To complete the audit of all staff functions to maximise educational, administrative and financial efficiency. To commence teacher appraisal and development. To implement the marketing policy so as to reach all eligible families. To implement an effective marketing policy to generate non-public income to the school. To complete planning and begin works services appropriate to the admission of girls for 1996-97 at the latest. To review the school management and committee structure to ensure all major policy decisions are co-ordinated at board level. To complete the implementation of all financial control systems. To identify and implement efficiency measures equal to 2·5 per cent. of the school's budget.

Gibraltar Garrison

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decisions have been reached on the Gibraltar garrison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: As a consequence of the political and strategic changes that have taken place in Europe the size and functions of the garrison in Gibraltar have been under review. That review has now been completed.

The conclusion of the review is that the work of the garrison should concentrate on five core areas which are central to our defence responsibilities in Gibraltar. These are the nuclear warship berthing facilities, access to the airfield, the Windmill Hill signal station and the maritime data centre, the Gibraltar Regiment in its present form, and the maintenance of a headquarters with supporting infrastructure for both NATO and national roles. It will in addition be necessary to maintain ammunition and fuel storage facilities, and the Gibraltar Squadron will remain in being.

All these functions will be supported by a single logistic unit. The Gibraltar Regiment, together with elements of the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force, will assume the responsibility for the day-to-day administration of all service men.

Under a rationalisation scheme already in progress service and civilian manpower levels in Gibraltar were due to reduce to 700 and 950 respectively by 1997. The effect of the review will be to bring these figures to some 500 service men and between 350 and 700 civilians. Precise civilian numbers will depend on how many supporting functions are put out to contract, increasing local employment opportunities. Any reductions in civilian manpower will be phased to avoid putting undue pressure on the job market. Where employees have to be made redundant every effort will be made to retrain and re-settle them.

The Government of Gibraltar have been fully informed of the outcome of the review, which will now be the subject of a process of consultation with the trade unions. The British Government are conscious of the economic implications and are examining wider initiatives to support the Gibraltar economy through the recently formed Joint Economic Forum.

A copy of the consultation document is being placed in the Libraries of the House.

Army Training

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to seek further improvements in the provision of training for the regular Army.

Mr. Hanley: Significant improvements have already been made to the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the Army's training organisation. The structure and content of Army training are constantly re-evaluated to ensure that they meet the present and future operational requirements of the Army. As part of this process, as foreshadowed in my answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 21 June 1994, Official Report, column 108, my Department will now be undertaking a wide review of how and where Army-sponsored training is conducted. This review, which is separate from but consistent with the defence costs study, will be looking at the nature and content of training courses generally as well as at individual areas such as adventurous training, training support, market-testing, catering training, recruit training and training with the adjutant-general's corps.

Individual studies will now be set in hand and the trade unions involved in the normal way. Any proposals for change arising from the studies will be subject to full consultation as appropriate.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the civilian staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has not conducted any general surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of staff during the last two years, although surveys have been carried out within parts of my Department.

Braemar Weather Station

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of upgrading the Meteorological Office weather station at Braemar in Aberdeenshire to enable it to transmit data to the Meteorological Office at Bracknell daily.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Meteorological Office under the terms of his framework document. I have therefore arranged for him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. George Kynoch, dated 7 July 1994:

I am responding to your Parliamentary Question concerning the cost of upgrading the weather station at Braemar.

Braemar is a private observing station which provides data on a voluntary basis to the Meteorological Office at Edinburgh at the end of each month. At present the Meteorological Office has no requirement for the daily receipt of the data. If the need arises the cost of upgrading the station to provide automated transfer of the data to Bracknell will be £2,500; additionally there will be other direct running and replacement costs of about £1,000 per annum. These costs do not include the Meteorological Office overheads necessary to process the data or supply services based upon them. Alternatively the observations could be passed by telephone to our Office at Aviemore for the cost of the telephone calls, from where they would be sent to Bracknell through our communication system; whilst this would avoid upgrade costs, the Office staff time involved in collecting and sending the data to Bracknell would be around £1,500 per annum.

Low Flying

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to follow up the recommendation of the Air Accident Investigation Branch in its aircraft accident report 2/94, that his Department should commission an operational analysis of fast jet low flying training in the United Kingdom to determine whether the use of see and avoid as a primary means of collision avoidance is satisfactory from the point of view of flight safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: As a result of this accident, the pipeline inspection notification system was introduced in October 1993. Further safety measures already in hand include the following:

(i) Hawk training aircraft are being painted black to improve conspicuity. Similar paint schemes are also being considered for other aircraft types.

(ii) Action is in hand to fit all RAF aircraft, not already so equipped, with high intensity stroboscopic lights.

(iii) The feasibility of installing forward facing headlights in tactical aircraft is being examined.

(iv) A technology demonstrator for a collision warning system is currently undergoing trials.

My Department is considering how best to take forward the particular recommendation of the air accident investigation branch in the light of results of the safety measures already implemented.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday playschemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: At present, my Department has seven workplace nurseries and seven holiday play schemes, although a further three nurseries are planned.

Responsibility for the provision of child care facilities is delegated to individual budget holders and subsidy arrangements may vary. In some cases this is restricted to a contribution to capital and indirect running costs such as maintenance, heating and lighting, while in others a contribution is also made to the direct running costs—mainly staff and consumables. The contribution to direct costs varies according to local market rates for nursery places and those using the facility.

My Department does not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions", or make child care vouchers available.

It is our policy to increase the provision of child care facilities wherever possible. Budget holders are encouraged to set up new child care facilities for staff where there is sufficient demand and where they can be justified on value for money grounds.

Sea King Helicopters

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the order for the new RAF search and rescue Sea Kings was placed; and when he expects them to be delivered.

Mr. Aitken: The contract for the six RAF Sea King HAR Mk3A search and rescue helicopters was placed in October 1992. They will be delivered between July 1995 and February 1996.

Proof and Experimental Establishments

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation has been paid to residents living in the vicinity of the proof and experimental establishment at Shoeburyness for reasons connected with noise pollution.

Mr. Aitken: Between 1 January 1992 and 5 July 1994, a total of £13,393·94 has been paid in compensation as a result of damage caused by noise pollution.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work has been transferred from the proof and experimental establishment at Shoeburyness to the proof and experimental establishment at Pendine for reasons connected with noise pollution.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the trade associations and individual customers with whom his Department has had discussions on the implications at the current review of proof and experimental establishments in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: The review covers all test and evaluation establishments, not just the proof and experimental establishments. Discussions were held with the following organisations:

Society of British Aerospace Companies
Vickers plc
VSEL
GKN
Royal Ordnance plc
Rolls-Royce plc

Discussions were also held with a large number of internal customers such as MOD project managers and the Defence Research Agency.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about noise pollution have been received over the last three years from residents in the vicinity of (a) the proof and experimental establishment at Shoeburyness and (b) the proof and experimental establishment at Pendine.

Mr. Aitken: The figures are as follows:

	1991	1992	1993	1994 to date
Shoeburyness	47	218	420	533
Pendine	4	6	5

Shoeburyness's figures are for the calendar year, Pendine's for the period 1 July to 30 June.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what responses he has received from trade associations and individual customers following consultation on the Director General Test and Evaluation review at test and evaluation facilities.

Mr. Aitken: This consultation took the form of discussions. Written responses were neither received nor appropriate.

Ferranti/ISC

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total estimated cost to (a) his Department and (b) the Exchequer generally, of the fraud at Ferranti/ISC; and what assessment he has made of the total number of jobs lost (i) directly and (ii) indirectly in the United Kingdom as a result of this fraud in the subsequent collapse of the company.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no means of assessing what, if any, additional costs it bore as a result of the fraud; the question of any loss to the Exchequer generally is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Nor has my Department any way of isolating the net changes in employment in the company and in other United Kingdom companies as a result of the fraud from the changes brought about by more general trends in the defence and civil markets for the company's products.

RAF Machrihanish

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much money from his Department's vote has been spent since the beginning of 1990 on upgrading RAF Machrihanish;

(2) how much money from his Department's vote has been spent since the beginning of 1990 at RAF Machrihanish on the following: (a) the construction of a new control tower, (b) the construction of underground fuel pipes and pumps, (c) strengthening runway aprons and (d) the construction of new living quarters for service personnel and their families.

Mr. Hanley: The amount of money from my Department's vote spent since the beginning of 1990 on upgrading RAF Machrihanish is £10,060,000. The figure includes:

(a) £407,000 on the construction of a new control tower, representing 20 per cent. of a NATO-funded project;
(b) £2,090,000 VAT payment on NATO-funded construction of underground fuel pipes and pumps;
(c) £2,000,000 VAT payment on NATO-funded airfield pavement improvements, including the strengthening of runway aprons;
(d) £1,807,000 on the construction of new single living quarters.

In the same period NATO has contributed £28,306,000 on upgrading at RAF Machrihanish.

Clothing Organisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current regional distribution of jobs in the MOD clothing organisation; and if he will make a statement on the future location of that organisation.

Mr. Hanley: The recently formed Defence Clothing and Textiles Authority is headed by the director of clothing and textiles, whose headquarters is based in Andover and his staff are currently located as follows:

Location	Total staff employed
Andover	53·5
Bath	23·0
Bicester	101·0
Colchester	135·0
Didcot	134·5
Glasgow	56·0
Harrogate	13·0
Manchester	8·0
Sheffield	8·0

Proposals for the future location of the DCTA are currently being considered by my Department.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: Two employee surveys have been carried out in the Departments and agencies for which I am responsible. I will place in the Library copies of the findings of a survey of staff in Her Majesty's Stationery Office carried out in 1993. The results of a recent survey of staff in the Occupational Health Service have yet to be published.

Women in Science, Engineering and Technology

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when a response will be made to the report of the Committee on Women in Science, Engineering and Technology entitled "The Rising Tide."

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today published the Government's response to this report. We have accepted many of the committee's recommendations, including the central one that a development unit should be established within the Office of Science and Technology. This will work with other Departments and outside bodies to enable women to make the fullest possible contribution to the nation's science, engineering and technology.

Copies of the response have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what facilities his Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Waldegrave: Visitors to my Department's offices in Westminster may use the same facilities for parking their bicycles as those provided for staff. Five sites have been designated bicycle parks; the remaining four have space available to park bicycles upon request.

TREASURY

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Government's policy is that child care assistance must be justified on value for money grounds, and that any child care arrangements must offer the best value for money choice.

On this basis the Treasury participates in the Westminster holiday play scheme which provides child care for children between the ages of five and 12 during school holidays. A 60 per cent. subsidy is provided to staff.

Until the end of July 1994, the Treasury and the Central Statistical Office are offering two places in a Westminster-based nursery for use by staff in emergencies. A 50 per cent. subsidy is given to staff earning less than £25,000 per annum. However, the contract has been terminated because of low usage. The Treasury does not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" or make child care vouchers available.

The Treasury is about to undertake a survey of staff to establish what child care provision might provide best value for money in future.

Local Authority Capital Receipts

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the public sector borrowing requirement is accounted for from the capital receipts held by local authorities.

Mr. Portillo: When a capital asset is sold by a local authority it generates a capital receipt which reduces net capital expenditure and hence general government expenditure. This, in turn, reduces the public sector borrowing requirement. When the proceeds from the sale of a capital asset are spent, net capital expenditure increases which increases general Government expenditure and hence the public sector borrowing requirement.

The table sets out the latest data for local authority capital receipts and the public sector borrowing requirement.

	1991-92 £ billion	1992-93 £ billion	1993-94 £ billion
Local authority capital receipts	2·8	2·6	3·9
Public sector borrowing requirement	13·9	36·6	46·0

Tax Yield

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of Exchequer revenue was raised through (a) direct taxes, and (b) indirect taxes in (i) 1978-79, (ii) 1991-92 and (iii) 1993-94; and what is his estimate of the equivalent figures for 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested, set out in the terms of the national accounts classification of taxes, is shown in the table.

Total taxes and social security contributions

	1978-79	1991-92	1993-94	1994-95[1]	1995-96[1]
	(as per cent. of total taxes and social security contributions)
Taxes on income, capital and social security contributions[2]	59	55	53	54	54
Taxes on expenditure including rates/ community charge/and council tax[3]	41	45	47	46	46

[1]From Treasury summer economic forecast 1994.
[2]includes the independent broadcasting authorities levy before 1993-94.
[3]includes ITC franchise payments from 1993-94.

School Examination Costs

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education concerning extra funding needed to pay the cost of using external examiners in the assessment of key stage 2 and key stage 3.

Mr. Portillo: As a matter of practice, I do not reveal what representations on spending are made to me by colleagues.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government;

(2) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department that are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament;

(3) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory basis;

(4) if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993";

(5) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them;

(6) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Nelson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has responsibility for only one advisory non-departmental public body, the Royal Mint Advisory Committee, although this is not sponsored by the Treasury and is advisory only to the Royal Mint. This body, which was established before 1993, is not required to publish its advice to Government or to produce an annual report. It does not have a statutory basis. The Government are not required to consult this body prior to legislation proposals or to publish their response to advice supplied by this body.

Bank of England

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action the Bank of England is taking concerning the book entry-only accounts opened by Banque Indosuez Aval and American Express for the Central Bank of Kenya in June last year.

Mr. Nelson: The special investigations unit of the Bank of England has conducted inquiries and is in close touch with the governor of the Central Bank of Kenya and the relevant supervisory authorities in France and the United States. It would not be appropriate to comment further while investigations are in the progress.

Financial Instruments

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he, or the Bank of England, has received from the Swiss authorities in relation to United Kingdom financial instruments sold to Swiss and international investors in Polly Peck, Mountleigh, Maxwell Communications and Ferranti/ISC.

Mr. Nelson: Neither the Chancellor, nor the Bank, has received any such representations.

Weapons, Iraq

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the documents received by HM Customs from their Customs counterparts in each European Economic Area country between 1984 and 1992 in relation to the sale of Bofors weapons to Iraq; what meetings were held with each of them and when; and what action was taken as a result on each occasion.

Sir John Cope: I understand that HM Customs and Excise has received no information from its Customs counterparts in any of the EEA countries in relation to the sale of Bofors weapons to Iraq and that no meetings were held with its counterparts on this subject.

EC Finance

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the payments of £1 million or over received from European Community funds, by expenditure programme, in each year since the United Kingdom's accession.

Sir John Cope: The Government receive several hundred individual payments from European Community funds each year. A list of all payments of £1 million or more since 1973 could be produced only at disproportionate cost. Information about the United Kingdom's aggregated receipts is published each year in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments' annual report —prior to 1992-93 in "The Government Expenditure Plans"—and in the annual White Paper "Statement on the Community Budget".

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the United Kingdom's (a) gross contributions to, (b) payments received from and (c) net contributions to the European Community for each year since United Kingdom accession in 1973.

Sir John Cope: Details of the United Kingdom's gross contribution, public sector receipts and net contribution by financial year are published in the "Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departmental Report". Prior to 1992-93 similar information was published in "The Government Expenditure Plans"; these documents contain information on a calendar year basis for earlier years. Information on the United Kingdom's contributions and receipts since 1980, by calendar year, is contained in the annual White Paper, "Statement on the Community Budget".

Economic and Monetary Union

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he favours economic and monetary union as the appropriate aim of the European Union; and what are the reasons for his policy on this matter.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 4 July 1994]: My views on economic and monetary union were set out in my speech to the Konrad Adenauer Foundation in Bonn on 29 June. A copy of the speech has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

SCOTLAND

Birds (Protection)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 28 April, Official Report, columns 316-20, if he will withdraw approval for the use of alphachloralose; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: No. The Advisory Committee on Pesticides has recently reviewed those pesticide products containing 100 per cent. alphachloralose. It concluded that the approvals for these products should continue because they fulfil an important role in rodent control and are used by local authorities and professional pest control agencies. The situation will be kept under review.

Wildlife (Illegal Killing)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what plans he has to amend legislation or procedure in order to improve the detection and conviction rate for offences involving the illegal killing of protected wildlife in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: None. I do not consider that there is any need to amend legislation or procedures in Scotland at present. All necessary powers are available.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what central record is available to the Government of the illegal killing of protected birds in Scotland, other than those killed by poisons.

Sir Hector Monro: This information is not held centrally.

Milk Marketing Schemes

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce his decision on the re-organisation schemes submitted by the milk marketing boards in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Agriculture Act 1993 provided for the ending of the statutory milk marketing schemes. It enabled the milk marketing boards in Scotland to submit proposals to me for their replacement by voluntary arrangements, for the transfer of their assets to specified successor bodies, and for the distribution of the value of those assets to milk producers.

The Scottish Milk Marketing Board, the Aberdeen and District Milk Marketing Board, and the North of Scotland Milk Marketing Board all submitted proposals to me last October following which I conducted a wide-ranging consultation of the various parties with an interest. Subsequently, and in the light of the responses to that consultation, the boards submitted amendments to their reorganisation schemes and I conducted a further round of consultation. I have now concluded that the requirements of the Act have been met and that, having regard to all the circumstances, including in particular the considerations specified in the Act, the schemes submitted by the boards should be approved.

The Act requires that the principles of the approved reorganisation schemes be made public. The principles of the schemes as submitted, and subsequently amended, by the milk marketing boards were set out in the two consultation documents issued by my Department in October 1993 and May 1994. Although some further detailed amendments have been made by the boards to their schemes, the principles as set out in those documents are unchanged. Copies of the documents, together with a note updating them in the light of the further detailed amendments, are available in the Library of the House and can also be obtained from the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department.

Under the approved reorganisation schemes, the existing statutory milk marketing schemes will be revoked on 1 November 1994 (the "vesting" date). As a result producers will be free to sell their milk to whom they wish, whether to the successor co-operatives being established under the board's reorganisation schemes, to other co-operatives or marketing groups of producers, or direct to dairies or to manufacturers of milk products. The price at which untreated milk can be bought will no longer be determined by the existing joint committee arrangements and according to its ultimate end-use but by contract between the purchaser and his supplier.

The Scottish Milk Marketing Board will be succeeded by two separate companies, a producer co-operative, Scottish Milk Ltd. and a commercial company, Scottish Pride Holdings plc. The Aberdeen and District Milk Marketing Board will be succeeded by a single company co-operative, Aberdeen Milk Company, and the North of Scotland Milk Marketing Board by a single co-operative, the North of Scotland Milk Co-operative.

In view of the delay in the vesting date from 1 April 1994 to 1 November 1994, however, milk producers who have already signed a contract with one of the successor co-operatives will no longer be bound by those contracts, and the boards will be writing to them inviting them to exercise their right to withdraw within two weeks; in the case of the Aberdeen board, the board will be cancelling all existing producer contracts with Aberdeen Milk Company and offering a revised contract. I urge all producers, including those who have not yet signed a contract with anyone, to decide as soon as possible to whom they wish to sell their milk from 1 November 1994 and to enter into a contract accordingly so that the necessary arrangements can be put in place for the uplift of their milk from that date.

I am also about to announce today that, following an announcement by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture Fisheries and Food on 16 June that she and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be proposing the establishment of a milk development council for England and Wales, I have decided in the light of the separate consultation I undertook of the industry in Scotland, that Scotland should also be included in this council which will therefore cover the whole of Great Britain. The development council should be operational from 1 November or soon thereafter.

The ending of the statutory milk marketing schemes marks a major step forward in the history of the dairy industry in this country. It will enable competition to flourish in a way not possible before, and the industry will be able to respond better and more quickly to the needs and preferences of consumers.

Kelso Road Bridge

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to approve the necessary capital consents to enable a start to be made on the new road bridge for Kelso.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 July 1994]: The Kelso bridge is part of a local road and any decision relating to the provision of a new bridge are matters for Borders regional council as local roads authority.

The Government set annual block allocations for capital expenditure on roads and transport and any proposals contained in councils' financial plans will be given careful consideration, within the resources available, in setting these levels. Thereafter it is for local authorities to set their own priorities for individual projects, such as a new Kelso bridge, taking account of local needs and circumstances.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Legislation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has had on heritage-related legislation with the Association of Conservation Officers on Bills which have an impact on the heritage.

Mr. Brooke: My Department has not so far introduced any legislation on the conservation of the built heritage and there have therefore been no such consultations. We would, however, expect to consult the Association of Conservation Officers, together with other interests, in the event of such legislation—or proposals for it—being put forward. My Department is always ready to discuss with the Association any particular concerns its members may have about the effect of other legislation on the built heritage.

PRIME MINISTER

Lockerbie Bombing

Q8. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements have been made to co-ordinate policies and operations in relation to the Lockerbie crime involving the destruction of Pan Am 103 between the Foreign Office, the Home Office, the Scottish Office, the Department of Transport, the Intelligence Services, the Attorney-General and the Crown Office; and which is the lead Department.

The Prime Minister: The Crown Office is the lead Department on matters relating to the prosecution of those suspected of the Lockerbie bombing.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is the lead department for international aspects.

These Departments consult others on issues for which they are responsible, as they arise.

Mr. Gordon McNally

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasions since October 1991 he has met Mr. Gordon McNally.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 5 July 1994]: So far as I am aware, Mr. McNally has attended three large functions at which I was also present between October 1991 and March 1993.

Rio Declaration

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement outlining the benefits which will accrue to the manufacturing, construction and retailing sectors of the United Kingdom economy through the acceptance of agenda 21 of the Rio declaration of June 1992;

(2) what assessment Her Majesty's Government have undertaken of the costs (a) to date and (b) by the year 2000, of complying with the Rio declaration of June 1992;

(3) if he will make a statement summarising the information which he has about the extent to which other signatory countries to agenda 21 of the Rio declaration of June 1992, have begun to implement measures in keeping with the agenda which affect their manufacturing, construction and retailing industries.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 July 1994]: The Rio declaration and agenda 21 clearly recognise the importance of economic development to improvement of the quality of life of present and future generations. The Government are committed to the close involvement of the wealth-creating sectors in the preparation of policies to ensure that economic development is sustainable. Acceptance of the principles of agenda 21 by a large number of the United Kingdom's trading partners will help British business to compete on a level playing field, and will create substantial new market opportunities for suppliers of cleaner process technologies and environmental goods and services.

The Government seek to take account of the principles of sustainable development in all policies, together with a wide range of other factors. It is often not possible to separate out the cost attributable to abiding by the principles of sustainable development. However, we aim to consider carefully the compliance cost of all new policies.

The United Kingdom Government have been one of the principal proponents of a system of national reporting on progress in the implementation of measures in agenda 21. Our sustainable development strategy was published this January. We shall continue to urge other countries to follow suit through our membership of the Commission on Sustainable Development. We hope that in due course the commission will be able to publish information based on national reports.

EMPLOYMENT

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of cases alleging unfair dismissal brought before industrial tribunals have disability as their ground; what the degree of success in such appeals is estimated to be; and what estimate he has made as to the extent of the practice of dismissing such employees prior to the minimum term of continuous service which would allow appeals to be brought.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department conducts an annual attitude survey asking staff for their opinions on internal operational issues such as staff appraisal, communications, job satisfaction, equal opportunities and staff development.

Managers use the results to improve the internal operation of the Department. The results of the 1993 survey are encouraging and show a continuing upward trend compared with previous years.

I have arranged to place copies in the Library of a summary already sent to staff of the responses to the Employment Department's staff attitude survey over recent years.

Blind People (Home Workers)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding the future of the home workers' scheme for blind people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Officials are considering the effectiveness of the blind home workers scheme. They are canvassing views from local authority, voluntary body and home worker interest groups on future options for the scheme, and proposals will be put forward in due course.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday playschemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department Group currently supports six workplace nurseries and 49 holiday play schemes. The cost of this support across the group as a whole was £430,000 in 1993-94. This includes net expenditure on nursery places and financial help with additional child care costs incurred through attending training courses or other work-based functions. No part of the group subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" or offers child care vouchers. All child care assistance within the group is subject to meeting value for money considerations.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what creche facilities are available through the Employment Service for single parents attending Government training centres in the area of the Derbyshire, North-East parliamentary constituency; and how they are advertised.

Miss Widdecombe: There are no creche facilities available directly through the Employment Service. Lone parents in north-east Derbyshire on Government-funded vocational training can claim 75p per hour for each child. This is paid by North Derbyshire training and enterprise council, which runs training for work programmes in the area under its "Skillsbuild" banner. The TEC plans to launch an information pack later this month, aimed at women wishing to return to work, including lone parents. It will be circulated widely and be available in our Employment Service jobcentres in the area.

Employment Service Programmes

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to exempt foyer residents from the normal eligibility conditions for employment service programmes.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government have decided to give residents of pilot foyers exemption from the basic eligibility conditions for jobclub, job interview guarantee, job search seminars and work trials. This means that these foyer residents, who have particular disadvantages, can now join these programmes on or after their first day of unemployment. In addition the minimum age for joining these programmes has been lowered to 17 for residents of the pilot foyers. The exemptions for 17-year-olds will apply only after the guaranteed offer of a place on youth training has been made, and their education and training options fully and urgently explored by the local training and enterprise council. These conditions will apply from now to residents of the YMCA's foyers in Nottingham, Norwich, St. Helens, Romford and Wimbledon, and are intended to apply to the foyers being newly built in Camberwell, Birmingham and Salford. The Government will keep the effect of the changes and the extra help they give foyer participants under review.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Radice: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions civil servants or former civil servants have been prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act 1989.

The Attorney-General: No central record is maintained of cases prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act 1989. I understand that the Crown Prosecution Service has authorised two prosecutions under section 4 of the Act relating to civil servants.

Development Grants

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Attorney-General if he gave legal advice to the Secretary of State for Wales concerning the payment of grants from the Welsh Development Agency to the Development Board for Rural Wales.

The Attorney-General: By convention, the Law Officers do not normally disclose whether they have been asked to advise on a particular issue or the substance of any advice that they may have given.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Attorney-General what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: It is the policy of the Law Officers' Departments to provide child care facilities for staff where there is a need and arrangements can be justified on value for money grounds. The Crown Prosecution Service provides a subsidy of up to 50 per cent. for nursery places and holiday play schemes. The service also contributes to extra child care expenses incurred by staff when attending training courses. The Treasury Solicitor's Department provides a subsidy of 50 per cent. for the Westminster holiday play scheme. Both the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office subscribe to "Childcare Solutions". No Department makes child care vouchers available.

TRANSPORT

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when British Rail's rolling stock leasing companies will be sold; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: We have decided that British Rail's passenger rolling stock leasing companies should be sold during 1995.

The three rolling stock leasing compaies were established as subsidiaries of British Rail, as part of the reorganisation of the railways introduced in April this year, to lease rolling stock to British Rail's 25 passenger train operating units. It was made clear at the time the companies were set up that they would be transferred to the private sector as soon as practicable. Detailed leases with each of the train operating units will now be put in place in final form by the end of this year. The companies will then be offered for trade sale as early as possible in 1995.

The privatisation of the rolling stock leasing companies will be a major step in the rail privatisation programme. Freed from the constraints of operating in the public sector, the three companies will be able to bring private sector expertise and commercial practice to the supply of rolling stock to train operators. In particular, they will be free to raise private capital for new investment. I look forward to the development of a thriving competitive market in the provision of passenger rolling stock.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Department of Transport staff have access to nursery facilities in Bristol, Hastings and Swansea. Places at holiday play schemes are available to staff in Bedford, Birmingham, Bristol, Exeter, Liverpool, London, Manchester, Newcastle, Nottingham, and Swansea.

The Department has discretion to provide assistance with child care where this can be justified on value for money grounds, and within overall running cost constraints. The Department's general practice is to assist with start-up or "pump-priming" costs from central funds, leaving local budgets to assist with continuing costs where that is necessary and justified on value for money grounds. Details are not held centrally. The Department does not make child care vouchers available.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in relation to the figures collected by the Royal Automobile Club in relation to carbon monoxide and other noxious car exhaust emissions and the table of different cities in the United Kingdom in order of emission gases concentrations; and if he will make a statement on the effect of noxious exhaust emissions on (a) road users, (b) pedestrians and (c) others.

Mr. Key: I have received no representations on this matter. The Department is liaising closely with the Department of Health on the studies and research now under way into the possible health effects of air pollutants. Future action, in addition to measures already in place or proposed, for reducing motor vehicle pollutants, will be considered in the light of these considerations.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with the Royal Automobile Club in relation to the position of Cardiff in the league table of car exhaust-related emissions of carbon monoxide and other noxious gases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: None.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest research which has been carried out with Government support in the reduction of emissions from motor vehicles.

Mr. Key: The reduction of motor vehicle pollutant emissions remains a major policy objective. My Department spent £830,000 on research on this topic in 1993-94. New vehicle petrol engine pollutant emissions are much reduced and good progress is being made on future reductions for diesel engines. More research is being undertaken to understand the health hazards of particulates from motor vehicle exhausts.

Railtrack

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what objectives he has set for Railtrack and British Rail in the current financial year; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave on 1 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn), Official Report, column 773.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers he has retained to control wage agreements entered into by Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman My right hon. Friend has no powers to control Railtrack's wage agreements. As with any Government-owned body it is, however, expected to follow the Government's approach to public sector pay which was set out clearly last autumn by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Road Construction Losses

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if disciplinary action will be taken against officials in his Department responsible for the losses identified by the National Audit Office in respect of acquisition and management of land and property purchased for road construction.

Mr. Key: The Department and the Highways Agency are giving this report full and careful consideration, but, by convention, substantive comments on National Audit Office reports are not made before the Public Accounts Committee has had an opportunity to take evidence from the Department.

Traffic Area Offices (Running Costs)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the running costs of the traffic area offices for the financial year 1993-94 in (a) total, (b) staffing costs, (c) accommodation, (d) consultant fees, (e) information technology purchases, (f) stationery, (g) works and maintenance and (h) other.

Mr. Key: The running costs of the traffic area offices for the financial year 1993-94 were as follows:

Running costs	£
(a) Total	12,373,007
(b) Staffing costs	6,896,695
(c) Accommodation	2,007,852
(d) Consultant fees	119,455
(e) IT purchases/services	1,147,906
(f) Stationery	114,831
(g) Works and maintenance	202,887
(h) Other	1,883,381

Efficiency Saving Target

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department's 20 per cent. efficiency saving target applies to the DSA.

Mr. Key: I have nothing to add to the answer given on 14 June at columns 510-11.

M11 Link

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory and other environmental bodies were consulted by his Department at the early stage of route development of the M11 link road; and if he will place in the Library a summary of the parts of the advice from the statutory bodies which was not accepted by his Department.

Mr. Norris: This information about the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 link road is available from the inspector's report of the 1983 public inquiry, except that it will not show the instances, if any, where a body had been consulted but not responded. The hon. Gentleman received a copy of the report when it was published in 1985.

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the speech of the chief executive of the DSA to the Scottish Driving Examiners Conference on 28 June in respect of the applicability of his Department's efficiency saving target to his agency represents Government policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: In the context of a presentation to the Scottish Driving Examiners Conference, the chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency acknowledged that the Secretary of State was requiring the Department to find a 20 per cent. efficiency gain, but said that he was not yet in a position to comment on the implications for the agency. That was an accurate representation of the position.

Traffic Generation

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he received a copy of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment report on traffic generation; and when it will be published.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) and the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), on 20 May 1994, at columns 596-99.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish Conservation

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contribution she expects days-at-sea restrictions to make towards achieving the United Kingdom's multi-annual guidance programme target by the end of 1996; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The United Kingdom's days at sea measures were due to be introduced in January this year. The National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations sought judicial review of the United Kingdom legislation and the High Court has referred a number of questions to the European Court of Justice as our legislation was based on Community regulations. The Euroepan Court is unlikely to respond until 1995. In those circumstances, the Government decided to suspend the days at sea restrictions pending clarification of the legal position.

Currently we are moving towards our targets via decommissioning and licence penalties. We are also having discussions with the Commission on the possible contribution to effort reduction from technical conservation measures.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what facilities her Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Jack: My Department provides racks for 20 bicycles in its Whitehall buildings, 25 in its Millbank buildings and 15 in its Albert Embankment building, all of which are under cover. There are free standing areas, too, which can be used. Visitors are welcome to use these facilities during office hours and subject to security checks.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provision her Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday playschemes; if her Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 7 March 1994 to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman), Official Report, column 67, which gave details of child care provision for staff in the Department. Most places are subsidised, but the extent of the subsidy varies according to the nursery or play scheme.

The Department does not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" or make child care vouchers available.

Comfrey

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations she has received from (a) specialist consumer organisations and (b) members of the public concerning the ban on comfrey products since the ban was announced; and how many of these representations supported the ban.

Mr. Soames: I have received roughly 100 similar representations objecting to the trade withdrawal. The Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain supports greater controls on the availability of comfrey products. The National Consumer Council and Consumers Association welcomed the voluntary withdrawal.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultation was held with (a) the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy and (b) specialist consumer groups before the introduction of the ban on comfrey products; what plans she has to review the ban; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: All interested parties were informed at the same time of my intention to seek a voluntary withdrawal of comfrey products on health grounds. Any review of the situation will be based on the best scientific advice available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Indonesia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge the World Bank and the Governments which are scheduled to send representatives to the forthcoming meeting of the consultation group on Indonesia in Paris to postpone the meeting.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have approached the president or any member Governments of the World bank, asking for a postponement of the consultative group on Indonesia meeting in Paris on 7 and 8 July, in the light of the human rights situation in Indonesia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Indonesia's human rights record over the past year has improved. We were therefore surprised and concerned to learn of the recent banning of three journals, a decision which appears inconsistent with the greater spirit of openness that has prevailed in Indonesia recently. But we do not believe the Indonesian action warrants a postponement of this week's consultative group meeting.

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what has been his response to the Commonwealth Institute's relaunch plan as discussed at the board's executive committee meeting on 21 June;

(2) what has been his response to the proposals for the relaunch plans for the Commonwealth Institute, Scotland as discussed at a meeting where his representatives were present on 21 June.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As Her Majesty's Government's representative indicated at the meeting of the executive committee on 21 June 1994, we hope to give our response to the various proposals by the middle of this month.

China

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has on (a) incentives to conform with the Chinese population control programme, including access to land, better housing, reduction in taxes and extra payments and (b) the content of the eugenics laws enacted by Gansu and Liaoning provinces; and what progress has been made in enacting a national Chinese eugenics law;

(2) what information he has on the number and nature of Chinese population control projects sponsored by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities under the memorandum of understanding between China and the UNFPA in 1979;

(3) what reports he has received from Her Majesty's Government's representatives in China concerning the population control programme and in particular the practice of killing children during or immediately after birth;

(4) what information he has on (a) the number of United Nations Fund for Population activities staff present in China and their duties in relation to the Chinese population control programme; (b) how many Chinese personnel involved in the Chinese population control programme have received training from the UNFPA; and (c) how many UNFPA officials based in China work with the Chinese State Family Planning Commission;

(5) what information he has on the steps taken by the United Nations Fund for Population activities to ensure that management information systems and training in programme research and evaluation provided to the Chinese State Family Planning Commission have not and are not being used to enforce birth quotas on the Chinese population;

(6) if he will make a statement on his Department's policy regarding the Chinese national eugenics policy and the forced sterilisation of those regarded as physically or mentally deficient or their partners;

(7) what information he has regarding which Chinese provinces specify the legal insertion of inter-uterine devices into women; and what exemptions are made for women for whom IUDs may not be medically appropriate;

(8) what provision is made in China for couples who are opposed in conscience to artificial contraception, sterilisation and abortion;

(9) what information he has on the levels of fines specified in China for Chinese women in breach of provincial family planning legislation; and how they are related to average rural and urban per capita incomes;

(10) what information he has on the practice of destroying the homes of families in breach of Chinese provincial family planning legislation;

(11) what information he has on the methods used to persuade Chinese women to undergo sterilisation in accordance with provincial laws; and what information he has on the number of Chinese women who have been sterilised;

(12) what information he has on the practice of fining women who refuse to be sterilised in China; and what information he has on the practice in Fuijan province, China, of taking women for forcible sterilisation;

(13) what information he has as to which Chinese provinces do not have laws obliging (a) one member of a married couple to be sterilised or (b) women to use contraception;

(14) what information he has on the practice of making payments to Chinese women for being sterilised;

(15) what information he has on the reasons for the percentage change in the number of sterilisations conducted in China in 1991;

(16) what information he has on the use of ultrasound equipment in China to detect female unborn children;

(17) what information he has on Chinese official rules requiring expectant mothers to present birth authorisation cards before being admitted to hospital delivery rooms in Canton; and if he will make a statement;

(18) if he will seek clarification from his Chinese opposite number about reports regarding the disappearance of female children; and if he will make a statement;

(19) what information he has on the practice of fining or sacking Chinese district and township officials if local family planning targets are not achieved;

(20) what information he has on Chinese early birth shock brigades and their role in forcible abortions;

(21) what information he has on the effects of the 1991 decision by the Standing Committee of the Chinese Politburo to tighten enforcement of the Chinese birth control programmes on the population of China;

(22) if his officials consider data on the numbers of sterilisations and abortions in China before agreeing funds for his budget for the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities;

(23) if he will make a statement on his Department's response to the information contained in the articles by Michael Weisskopf from the Washington Post on the Chinese population control programme deposited by his Department in the Library;

(24) what information he has received on high-tides in the Chinese population programme from Her Majesty's Government's representatives in China; and if he will make a statement;

(25) what information he has on the reasons for the prevalence of third trimester abortions in China;

(26) what information he has on the practices of killing babies (a) during birth and (b) when they are newly born, by doctors in Hohhot, China; and if he will make a statement;

(27) what consideration his Department gives to China's compliance with the right to freely found a family and decide the numbers of children when deciding on the allocation of aid in respect of family planning;

(28) what information he has on the practice of awarding Chinese local officials cash bonuses if they achieve birth targets set by the authorities in Beijing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The hon. Gentleman has tabled 28 questions covering one subject area.

The British Government are concerned about all human rights abuses, whether they occur in China or elsewhere. The Government's views are well known to the Chinese, and we have consistently urged them to conform with internationally recognised standards of behaviour.

Questions 57, 63, 112, 118, 127, 130 refer to Chinese Government policies and their implementation. Questions 111, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 125, 135 refer to provincial population programmes, and the way in which they are implemented at provincial and local level. Questions 59, 119, 120, 121, 124, 126, 129, 131, 132 refer to allegations about practices which have a bearing on reproductive health and population issues, though these are not necessarily the results of central or provincial Chinese government policies.

The issues raised in all these questions are complex. We do not have ready access to the detailed information that would be required to answer the questions raised. Assembling such information would involve a prohibitive cost.

Questions 58, 61, 62 refer to the work in China of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities. My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will write to the hon. Member with the information that we have received from UNFPA. In answer to question 128, the Government take account of the efforts being made by the International Planned Parenthood Federation and UNFPA to promote better reproductive health and children by choice throughout the world, including their efforts in China, when agreeing the level of support they are to receive from the ODA's budget. Both organisations oppose the promotion of abortion as a method of family planning and all forms of coercion in family planning programmes.

Regarding question 134, the Government do not directly finance family planning projects in China. We continue to advocate that all men and women should be able to choose when to have children, and that women, in particular, should be in a position to exercise this choice of their own free will, without pressure of coercion. Those views are well known to the Chinese authorities.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those communications he and his predecessors have received from the Governor of Hong Kong regarding the arms supply and related activities of the Rex Group of companies between 1981 and 1991; and what was reported to him in this matter by Mr. Layton and Mr. Pickin.

Mr. Goodlad: It would not be customary to disclose the contents of communications between the Governor and Ministers. These are conducted on a confidential basis.

European Court

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many judgments handed down by the European Court of Justice have gone (a) in favour of and (b) against each member country.

Mr. Heathcoat Amory: Cases can be brought before the European Court of Justice by various parties under a number of treaty articles. Many cases do not involve member states at all. It would involve disproportionate cost to identify all the cases since the Community was founded which involved member states directly. If the Commission considers that a member state has failed to fulfil its obligations under the treaty, it may take action under Article 169, which can lead to proceedings before the European Court of Justice. Details of judgments issued on cases brought since 1989 under article 169 can be found in the Commission's eleventh annual report on monitoring the application of Community law. A copy of the report is available in the House. The figures for these cases are as follows:

Member state	Number of referrals	Number withdrawn	Number still in motion	Judgment for commission	Judgment for member state
United Kingdom	5	0	3	2	0
Belgium	24	11	4	9	0
Denmark	3	1	0	2	0
France	4	0	2	2	0
Germany	10	0	7	3	0
Greece	17	6	3	7	1
Ireland	13	7	1	5	0
Italy	39	21	10	7	1
Luxembourg	31	18	11	2	0
Netherlands	17	4	7	6	0
Portugal	4	2	0	2	0
Spain	11	1	5	5	0

It should, however, be borne in mind that, even though the Commission may bring a case against a member state based on several complaints, the Commission need only succeed on one complaint for the judgment to be recorded as being in its favour.

Latvia and Estonia

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of relations between Estonia and Latvia; and if he will comment on the implications for the partnership for peace agreements.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome the agreements signed by Latvia and Russia on the withdrawal of Russian troops from Latvia by 31 August, which we hope will form the basis for good relations between the two countries. We are urging Russia and Estonia to conclude a similar agreement. We welcome Estonian, Latvian and Russian signature of the partnership for peace framework document. We look forward, with other NATO partners, to developing closer relations with all three countries through the Partnership for Peace programme.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy in the context of (a) the Council of Europe (b) the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe and (c) the United Nations on the human rights implications for Latvia's Russian population of the recent laws on citizenship.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: President Ulmanis has returned to Parliament for reconsideration the draft citizenship law passed by the Latvian Parliament in June. We are urging the Latvians to incorporate into the law recommendations made by the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe and the Council of Europe.

Per Capita Income

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the latest available data on per capita income in each country; and what data are available on per capita wealth by country.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Per capita income and per capita wealth are not measured separately. Both are represented by the data collected on each country's per capita gross national product. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the "World Bank Atlas 1994", a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library. The atlas gives the latest GNP per capita information on 207 of the world's economies.

Tibet

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) assistance and (b) guidance on human rights issues he gives to British companies considering investing in Tibet.

Mr. Goodlad: Neither I nor the embassy in Peking have been approached by any British companies considering investing in Tibet.

European Council

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement on the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The following meetings are planned:

A: ECOFIN
B: FAC
C: Agriculture
D: Budget
E: ECOFIN
F: Justice

The following subjects are likely to be discussed:

A—11 July: ECOFIN
Follow-up to Corfu European Council
Broad economic guidelines (adoption of)
Commission annual report on fraud and work programme
Special report on European Court of Auditors
Relations with CEE

B—18-19 July: Foreign Affairs Council

First reading of draft EC budget 1995
Supplementary budget 1994

E—27 July: ECOFIN
Agenda not yet available

F—28 July: Justice
Agenda not yet available

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday playschemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The FCO has 10 places for the under-fives at nurseries in London, subsidised by 50 per cent., and 22 places in a workplace nursery for staff working at Hanslope Park. Staff in London may bid for holiday places for five to 12-year-olds through the Westminster holiday play scheme, also subsidised by 50 per cent.

The ODA offers no nursery provision for staff, but provides holiday play schemes for staff working at each of its three sites. In London this is through the Westminster holiday play scheme—the other two play schemes are ODA-administered. These schemes cater for children aged between five and 14 depending on the scheme and are subsidised by up to 50 per cent.

The provision of child care is on a value for money basis and is contained within existing running costs. The FCO does not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" or provide child care vouchers.

International War Crimes Tribunal

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on progress being made by the international war crimes tribunal set up in 1993; and if he will list the judges, giving their countries of origin and background.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The acting deputy prosecutor, Mr. Graham Blewitt, is currently setting up the prosecutor's office. A number of investigatory and prosecutorial staff have now arrived in The Hague. Mr. Blewitt is hoping to start the first trials later this year.

The judges of the tribunal and their nationalities are as follows:

President of the Tribunal, H.E. Judge Antonio Cassese, Italy
Vice-President of the Tribunal, H.E. Judge Elizabeth Odio Benito, Costa Rica
H.E. Judge Georges M. Abi-Saab, Egypt
H.E. Judge Jules Deschenes, Canada
H.E. Judge Claude Jorda, France
H.E. Judge Aldophus G. Karibi-Whyte, Nigeria
H.E. Judge Haopei Li, China
H.E. Judge Gabrielle Kirk McDonald, USA
H.E. Judge Rustam S. Sidhwa, Pakistan
H.E. Judge Sir Ninian Stephen, Australia
H.E. Judge Lal Chand Vohrah, Malaysia

Copies of the judges' curricula vitae have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to introduce enabling legislation necessary for the United Kingdom's ratification of the chemical weapons convention before 18 July.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to introduce implementing legislation for ratification of the chemical weapons convention before 18 July. The legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time becomes available.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is Her Majesty's Government's policy that the United Kingdom will ratify the chemical weapons convention by January 1995.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall ratify the chemical weapons convention as soon as the necessary implementing legislation is in place. No parliamentary time has yet been allocated for this.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the current operation of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) on 4 July at columns 49-50.

Compensation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the amounts of compensation received by (a) asbestosis sufferers who have won court awards which were appealed against by firms and (b) those who received the same award which was accepted by the firm.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the annual running costs of the compensation recovery unit.

Mr. Scott: The costs for the financial year 1993-94 were approximately £2·4 million.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will show the amounts successfully reclaimed by the compensation recovery unit in each year for the past 10 years.

Mr. Scott: Recoveries made under the compensation recovery scheme apply to compensation payments made on or after 3 September 1990 for an accident, injury or disease which occurred on or after 1 January 1989, therefore, the information requested is only available for each financial year since 1990.

I gave the hon. Member this information on 5 July at Cols. 226-27.

Child Support Act

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend phasing in of the provisions of the Child Support Act 1991 to all those with second families.

Mr. Burt: The phasing arrangements apply to all absent parents with a previous court order or written maintenance agreement, who had a second family at the date the new maintenance assessment was made and whose new assessment is more than £20 a week higher than their old liability. We have no plans to extend these arrangements.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the organisations which have made representations to him about the effect of the Child Support Act 1991 on second families.

Mr. Burt: Representations have been received from a number of large organisations: the Child Poverty Action Group, the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, Families Need Fathers, Stepfamily, the National Council for One Parent Families, and the Campaign for Fair Maintenance.

Representations have also been received from a range of smaller and local organisations.

Benefit-dependent Families

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children were living in families dependent on benefit in each year since 1979.

Mr. Burt: Families with children may be assisted by a number of social security benefits, and may receive more than one benefit at a time. Child benefit is available for all children regardless of income and is currently payable for 12·5 million children in nearly 7 million families. The number of children in families receiving the main income-related benefits for each year since 1979 are in the table. The number of children in families receiving widowed mothers allowance are also shown. For the purposes of the information in the table, children are defined as aged under 16 years or aged 16 to 19 years and in full-time education.

Number of children in families receiving the following benefits

Year	Widowed mother's allowance	Supplementary benefit/ Income support	Family income supplement/ Family credit	Housing benefit	Community charge benefit
1979	132	955	184	n/a	n/a
1980	n/a	1,125	n/a	n/a	n/a
1981	119	1,550	226	n/a	n/a
1982	112	1,793	306	n/a	n/a
1983	106	1,868	396	n/a	n/a
1984	111	2,033	428	n/a	n/a
1985	93	n/a	415	n/a	n/a
1986	86	2,227	412	n/a	n/a
1987	81	2,236	457	n/a	n/a
1988	85	2,195	438	370	n/a
1989	81	2,138	656	335	n/a
1990	80	2,151	669	1,807	2,563
1991	78	2,497	736	1,971	2,634

Year	Widowed mother's allowance	Supplementary benefit/ Income support	Family income supplement/ Family credit	Housing benefit	Community charge benefit
1992	80	2,874	829	2,477	3,187
1993	80	3,207	993	n/a	n/a

Notes:
1. Figures are in thousands and are rounded to the nearest 1,000.
2. Families can be receiving more than one benefit at the same time.
3. No information is available for widowed mother's allowance and family income supplement in 1980 due to changes in the way statistics were published.
4. No information is available for supplementary benefit in 1985 because no annual statistical inquiry was carried out due to industrial action.
5. The 1988 and 1989 information for housing benefit and community charge benefit relates to cases without income support.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Iain Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has received on the relationship of housing benefit and the level of pitch rent levied by mobile home site owners.

Mr. Hague: None. Housing benefit is available to help pay reasonable pitch rents in the same way as for the rents of other types of accommodation.

Family Credit

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the Benefits Agency to give a decision in respect of the claim for family credit submitted by Mrs. G. Foster.

Mr. Burt: The administration of family credit is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Robert Maclennan, dated 6 July 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary question, asking about the claim to Family Credit (FC) from Mrs. G. Foster.

You will be aware that Mrs. Foster submitted her claim to FC on 21 January 1994. I can assure you that every effort is being made to resolve this matter and Mrs. Foster will be advised of the outcome in due course. However, due to the complex nature of Mrs. Foster's case, the matter is still under consideration by the Adjudication Officer (AO). AOs are the first tier of the independent adjudicating authorities who decide all claims to Family Credit. The responsibility for interpreting the law and its application in individual cases rests solely with them. No Government Minister or Departmental Official may comment on, or intervene in, matters which are the responsibility of these independent authorities.

The AO will make a decision on the claim as soon as the required information becomes available. However, due to the personal and confidential nature of the case, I have written to you separately and in greater detail to explain this matter.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 7 March at column 38. The extent of subsidy varies according to the nature and location of the child care facilities. About 8,000 staff across the Department have access to the referral services provided by "Childcare Solutions". Child care vouchers are not available.

Contracting Out

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to contracting out.

Mr. Hague: When considering the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981, this Department takes account of the considerations set out in the guidance on the implications for market testing of the regulations issued on 11 March 1993 by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and considers each case on its merits in the light of that advice.

Pensioners

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the percentage change in (a) the state pension, (b) the pensioners price index and (c) the retail prices index since 1979; and what has been the average change in pensioner income.

Mr. Hague: Between November 1979 and April 1994, state retirement pension increased by 147·2 per cent. while the pensioners price index increased by 118·4 per cent. and the retail prices index by 139·4 per cent.

Between 1979 and 1991—the latest year for which these figures are currently available—the average increase in pensioners' income was 42 per cent. above the level of inflation, as measured by the retail price index.

Notes:
1. Percentage figures have been corrected to one decimal place and to whole number for growth in pensioner incomes.
2. The standard rate of basic retirement pension payable to a single person aged under 80 has been used in the calculation.
3. The pensioners price index is a quarterly index; growth has been measured between the last quarter of 1979 and the first quarter of 1994.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Publications

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the weekly bulletin on the contents of recent economics journals, produced by his Department's information and library service.

Mr. Eggar: Following a review of internal publications, the DTI information and library services decided to cease their involvement with this publication and a notification to that effect appeared in the issue dated 3 June 1994.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office has, for many years, undertaken the majority of the printing, publication and sales work on behalf of the Department and it has decided to assume ful responsibility for this publication following the issue dated 1 July 1994. It is now operating in partnership with the universities of Luton and Warwick.

Machine Tools Industry

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the United Kingdom machine tools industry is devoted to (a) armaments production and (b) tools capable of producing armaments; what is the total value of the machine tools industry in the United Kingdom; and what was the total value of machine tools exports from the United Kingdom in the last available year.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom machine tool industry is devoted to producing machine tools, not armaments. Machine tools themselves can usually be used to make a variety of products, depending on the skill of the operator or their computer programming. It is not possible to estimate how many machine tools are used for particular purposes.

In 1992 sales of United Kingdom-made machine tools were £853 million and exports were worth £456 million. Provisional figures for 1993 indicate that the industry ran a balance of trade surplus of £31 million, reflecting a lower level of imports and higher competitiveness. I have written to the Machine Tool Technologies Association congratulating the industry on this achievement.

Telecommunications

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department is giving to the development of telecommunications in central and eastern Europe.

Mr. McLoughlin: The DTI, through promotional events, seminars and ministerial-led trade missions, actively encourages British companies in the telecommunications sector to export to, and invest in, central and eastern Europe. The establishment of joint ventures and the transfer of know-how will encourage the development of, and spread of best practice in, the telecommunications sector in the region. The DTI has appointed an export promoter, a private sector secondee, who deals specifically with promoting trade in the telecommunications sector with central and eastern Europe.

The EU's technical assistance programme, PHARE, has highlighted telecommunications as one of its priority sectors. The United Kingdom is a significant contributor to the PHARE programme. To date PHARE has provided 42·9 million ecu in assistance for the development of telecommunications in the region.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament; and if he will list them.

Mr. Eggar: None, except that the Secretary of State is required to lay before Parliament a copy of the annual report issued by the Director General of Telecommunications and this includes a report by the Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for England.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Eggar: "Public Bodies 1993", published in December 1993, lists non-departmental public bodies in existence at 1 April 1993. The following advisory non-departmental public bodies have been established by my Department since then:

Energy Advisory Panel
Advisory Committee for the Joint Environmental Markets Unit
Advisory Committee on Coal Research

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory basis; and if he will list them.

Mr. Eggar: None, except the Industrial Development Advisory Board and the Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for England.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Eggar: None except the Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for England.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 404, if his Department has other information on investment in increased manufacturing capacity in addition to that published by the Confederation of British Industry in its industrial trends survey.

Mr. Sainsbury: The CBI "Industrial Trends Survey" is the only major business survey which asks respondents about the reasons for increased manufacturing investment.

Office of Fair Trading (Recommendations)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to implement the Office of Fair Trading's recommendations on consumer credit; when he intends to implement the Office of Fair Trading's recommendations on monetary limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department of Trade and Industry and other interested Government Departments are considering the recommendations about monetary limits and other matters in the Director General of Fair Trading's recent report on his review of consumer credit legislation. It is my intention to make a statement in due course.

Overseas Projects Board

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 10, if he will give details of the membership and remit of the Overseas Projects Board.

Mr. Needham: The Overseas Projects Board provides expert advice to DTI Ministers and their officials on issues affecting United Kingdom industry's ability to compete effectively for major projects overseas and serves as a focal point for industry to communicate its views to Government.

I have today placed in the Library of the House a current list of the names and occupations of the members.

Parcelforce

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (i) how many casual workers are currently employed by Parcelforce; and what is that figure as a percentage of the number of the overall work force of Parcelforce;

(2) if he will make a statement in respect of the recruitment procedures for casual employees of Parcelforce.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 30 June 1994, Official Report, column 668.

Access to Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many requests for environmental information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992 were answered within two months; how many have been refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 6 July 1994]: The Department does not record centrally requests received under the Environmental Information Regulations 1992. However, as far as we are aware, DTI has to date answered 191 requests for information under the regulations. Of these, 184 were answered within two months; the remainder were answered as soon as either the information requested had been processed or consultations with affected parties had been completed. A total of 146 requests have been declined: 144 because the Department did not hold the information concerned; and two because the information requested did not come within the terms of the regulations.

Rio Declaration

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the precise provisions of principle 8 of agenda 21 of the Rio declaration of June 1992; what is his policy in respect of implementing those provisions; and what specific policies have been adopted by his Department in respect of those aspects of principle 8 which commit signatories to achieve sustainable development by eliminating unsustainable patterns of production and consumption.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 6 July 1994]: Principle 8 of the Rio declaration on environment and development provides that, to achieve sustainable development and a higher quality of life for all people, states should reduce and eliminate unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and promote appropriate demographic policies. As with other Governments participating in the Rio summit, the United Kingdom accepts the broad principles enshrined in the Rio declaration.

The Government's strategy for reducing and eliminating unsustainable patterns of production and consumption is set out in "Sustainable Development: The UK Strategy", Cm. 2426, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Chapter 20 of the strategy sets out the Government's approach to promoting sustainability in the manufacturing and services sector. Action taken by my Department in support of the strategy will continue to be reported in the Government's annual White Paper on environmental progress and in the Government's "Expenditure Plans for Trade and Industry", published most recently in March 1994, Cm. 2504.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Racial Attacks

15. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to deal with racial attacks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are seeking new powers in the Criminal Justice Bill to deal more effectively with serious racial harassment, particularly where it is persistent. The interdepartmental racial attacks group is currently examining additional practical ways of dealing with the problem including the recommendation of the Select Committee report.

16. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received recently concerning firearms licensing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the oral reply that I gave today to a question by the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing).

20. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the penalties for unlawful possession of firearms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have done so. We have proposed amendments to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill which will significantly increase the maximum penalties for the unlawful possession and acquisition of firearms.

Crime Prevention Programme

17. Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding his programme to tackle crime.

Mr. Howard: I have received many representations from a number of different quarters. The Police Federation has given my programme to tackle crime a particularly warm welcome. It described it as "first class" and said: "It will help tremendously in the fight against crime".

Terrorism

18. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the legislation dealing with terrorism.

Mr. Howard: We will keep the legislation against terrorism in place for as long as the threat from terrorism continues. The Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill contains new police stop and search powers, creates two new offences and improves the legislation relating to the investigation of terrorism.

Secure Training Orders

19. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of secure training orders otherwise than by the Crown court.

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill provides that the secure training order will be available to the youth court as well as to the Crown court.

Identity Cards

21. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce identity cards.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The issue is kept under review. We are currently looking at the technical options for identity cards in the context of a wider study of smartcard applications in Government.

Prison Capacity

22. Mr. Legg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding prison capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department receives many letters from individuals, including Members of Parliament, with reference to prison capacity either in connection with particular prisons or in regard to the future plans of the Prison Service.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

23. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his response to comments on the proposals contained in the White Paper on the criminal injuries compensation scheme.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's response to comments made about reforms of the criminal injuries compensation scheme, described in the White Paper, was made clear in debates in this House on 28 March, and in another place on 2 March and 16 June. There are no plans to publish any other response.

Police (Administrative Burdens)

24. Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding administrative burdens on the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Last year we reviewed the paperwork burdens on the police and accepted 16 proposals for reducing them. The proposals are now being implemented with the co-operation of the police and the Crown Prosecution Service.

Metropolitan Police (Specialist Squads)

25. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress made to date by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis in his review of specialist squads within the Metropolitan police force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that the service restructuring team began its consideration of the specialist detective squads based at New Scotland Yard at the end of May this year. An initial consultation paper, outlining the main issues, is expected to be published towards the end of the summer.

Prison Population

26. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison at the most recent count.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On Wednesday 6 July 1994 there were 48,750 prisoners in Prison Service accommodation and 85 prisoners in police cells, giving a total of 48,835 prisoners in custody.

Video Violence and Pornography

27. Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to limit the accessibility of video violence and pornography to children.

Mr. Maclean: New provisions are contained in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill which, together with changes already made in the Video Recordings Act 1993, will significantly strengthen the present provisions relating both to the classification of video works and their subsequent supply.

Community Policing

28. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about community policing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The aim of local management of policing is that the police provide the service which best meets the needs and wishes of the local community. Mutually supportive partnerships between the police and the public lead to successes in the prevention and detection of crime.

Lenient Sentences

29. Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in extending the Attorney-General's right to appeal against lenient sentences.

Mr. Maclean: On 1 March the Attorney-General's power to refer unduly lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal was extended so as to cover the offences of indecent assault, making threats to kill and child cruelty. All the most serious violent and sexual offences are now within the scope of the power. After the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill has received Royal Assent my right hon. and learned Friend intends to extend the power so that it will also apply to cases of serious fraud.

Indecency with Children Act

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many offenders under section 1 of the Indecency with Children Act 1960 there are in the United Kingdom;

(2) how many people have been convicted of offences under section 1 of the Indecency with Children Act 1960 in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: Information for England and Wales on the number of "known offenders"—those found guilty or cautioned—for offences under section 1 of the Indecency with Children Act 1960 for 1990 to 1992 is given in the table. The Act does not extend to Scotland and Northern Ireland. 1993 data are not yet available.

Number of known offenders—those found guilty or cautioned—for offences under section 1 of the Indecency with Children Act 1960[1]
1990 to 1992
England and Wales

Offence description	Year	Cautions	Convictions	Known offenders
Gross indecency with boys	1990	53	128	181
	1991	41	91	132
	1992	46	99	145
Gross indecency with girls	1990	41	148	189
	1991	40	128	168
	1992	52	129	181

[1] The Act does not extend to Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what figures he has on the incidence of reoffending among offenders under section 1 of the Indecency with Children Act 1960.

Mr. Maclean: Full information on the incidence of such reoffending is not available. Some information has been extracted from two studies which use the offenders index:

(i) In a cohort study of around 50,000 people born in England and Wales in 1953 whose convictions have been followed until the end of 1989, 14 people in the sample had at least one conviction under section 1 of the Indecency with Children Act 1960. Of these, four people had at least one further conviction recorded up until the end of 1989; none of these further convictions were for offences under section 1 of the Indecency with Children Act 1960. Two of the 10 without further convictions had been followed up for less than two years.

(ii) In a study of all people discharged from prisons in England and Wales in 1988 whose principal offence was a sexual offence, 215 people had a conviction under section 1 of the Indecency with Children Act 1960. Of these, 35—or 16 per cent.—had at least one further conviction in the four years following discharge, including 12—or 6 per cent.—who were reconvicted for a further sexual offence of any type.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the guidelines issued to police on the maintenance of records of information on offenders under section 1 of the Indecency with Children Act 1960.

Mr. Maclean: No guidelines have been issued. This is a matter for individual chief constables.

The paedophile unit of the national criminal intelligence service maintains a national database of known paedophiles and assists investigators by developing and disseminating intelligence in respect of those involved in paedophile offences.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Provision has been made for spending of £380,000 in the current financial year on subsidised child care for staff at various locations. This will provide 134 nursery day care places for children under five and approximately 1,000 holiday play scheme places for children from five to 12 years old. These arrangements generally involve a subsidy of about 50 per cent. of the running costs involved. Subsidised child care provision is provided only if it can be justified on value for money grounds.

The Department does not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" nor make child care vouchers available to staff.

Immigration

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is considered a sufficient duration for a common law heterosexual relationship between a foreign national and a person settled in the United Kingdom for immigration purposes.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Each application is considered on its own merits. The duration of the relationship is taken into account along with other factors.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his statement of 4 May, Official Report, columns 823-26, if (a) the absence of children, (b) the inability to have children or (c) the absence of intent to marry are considered detrimental to applications made by foreign nationals in common law heterosexual relationships with persons settled in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Not necessarily; applications for leave to remain from unmarried heterosexual couples are considered on their merits.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 11, whether the statistic provided in this reply relating to common law partners include same sex partners of persons settled in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) of 16 May, Official Report, column 336, whether there are any other circumstances acceptable as grounds for granting leave to remain to the foreign same sex partner of a person settled in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Each application is considered on its own merits. It is not possible to provide an exhaustive list of the circumstances in which leave to remain on the basis of a same sex relationship might be granted.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) of 16 May, Official Report, column 337, how many applications for leave to remain in the United Kingdom made by foreign nationals on the basis of a same sex relationship with a person settled in the United Kingdom have been (a) accepted and (b) rejected since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not separately identified in the statistics.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) of 16 May, Official Report, column 336, what is considered a sufficient duration for a same-sex relationship between a foreign national and a person settled in the United Kingdom for immigration purposes.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Each case is decided on its own merits and it is not possible to say what period would normally be considered sufficient.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total amount of money owed in fines by (a) airlines and (b) cross-channel ferry companies under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As at 31 May, £19·46 million was owed by airline operators and £1·68 million by ferry operators. Action is being taken to enforce the payment of outstanding charges where necessary.

Secure Accommodation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much he estimates each place in secure accommodation will cost per annum.

Mr. Maclean: The cost per place per annum cannot yet be predicted because the design, build and operation of secure training centres will be subject to competitive tender. But the total costs of secure training orders are estimated to be in excess of £30 million a year. This estimate includes running, building and financing costs, as well as the cost of post-release supervision and Home Office administration costs.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate how many local authority secure places have been provided since the enactment of the Criminal Justice Act 1991; and if he will provide a list of their locations.

Mr. Bowis: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 22 April at columns 696-97, which set out a supply plan for the provision by local authorities of an additional 170 secure places for criminal justice purposes.

Community Charge

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been imprisoned in England and Wales in each year since 1990 for non-payment of the community charge, whose principal address was in (a) each district council area in Wales, (b) Wales as a whole, (c) England, (d) Scotland and (e) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maclean: No information is available centrally regarding the principal address of those committed to custody. The available information is for England and Wales and is published annually in "Prison statistics, England and Wales", table 6.3 of the 1992 edition, Cm. 2581. A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House. Provisional information for 1993 shows that 1,157 persons—1,041 males and 116 females—were received into a Prison Service establishment in England and Wales for non-payment of the community charge. Information for Wales, which was based on the numbers sentenced from a court in Wales, by county, has already been given in my earlier reply to the hon. Gentleman on 4 July at column 41.

Drugs

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department has commissioned to estimate the street value of illicit drugs traded annually.

Mr. Maclean: Drug misuse is an illegal and therefore clandestine activity. It is not possible to produce reliable estimates of the street value of all illicit drug purchases traded annually. No such studies have been commissioned, although the scope for fresh research on this question is kept under review.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department has commissioned to ascertain what amount of crime is drug-related.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Secretary recently announced plans to commission a series of studies later this year, to build on previous work assessing the links between drug taking and acquisitive crime.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many burglaries or attempted burglaries of pharmacies there were in (a) York and (b) North Yorkshire in each year since 1979.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from (a) York and (b) North Yorkshire were convicted of possessing or supplying illicit drugs; and of these how many were convicted of possessing cannabis in each year since 1979.

Mr. Maclean: The number of persons who were found guilty or cautioned in the North Yorkshire police force area for those offences in the years 1986-92 inclusive, is given in the table. Information for earlier years could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. It is not possible to show offenders from the city of York separately.

North Yorkshire police force area

Number of persons

Year	Supply	Possession with intent to supply	Possession (all drugs)	Possession of cannabis
1986	18	3	222	196
1987	16	5	281	256
1988	6	2	100	90
1989	17	3	152	139
1990	16	6	147	131
1991	13	11	101	85
1992	15	4	211	176

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many residents of (a) York and (b) North Yorkshire are currently on probation for drug-related offences.

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the North Yorkshire probation service that it is currently supervising 20 offenders under probation orders following conviction for drug related offences, of whom six are being supervised in York.

Staff Surveys

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Howard: The various agencies and business units of the Home Office are not required to notify the central personnel divisions of staff surveys they conduct. However, we are aware of the following surveys which took place in the two years ending 30 June 1994:

Title	Date of survey
Passport Agency Staff Survey	November 1992
Immigration Service (Ports) Staff Survey	December 1992
Fire Service College Customer Satisfaction and Staff Attitude Survey	June/July 1993
Survey of Communications in the Home Office	October 1993
FSD (Finance and Services Directorate of the Immigration and Nationality Department) Quality of Service Programme—Customer Survey	December 1993/ January 1994
Prison Service Staff Survey	January/February 1994

Copies of the results of these surveys will be placed in the Library, with the exception of the FSD survey. The results of the FSD survey were intended to inform local managers and have not been published.

ENVIRONMENT

Cemfuel

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions have so far been drawn by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution from the trials of Cemfuel at Ribblesdale, Lancashire.

Mr. Atkins: Preliminary results show reduced releases of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides. Further work to establish release levels for other pollutants is continuing. Comparative assessments of environmental impacts can be attempted only when all the relevant information is to hand.

Vehicles (Natural Gas)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest research with Government support into the use of compressed natural gas as a vehicle fuel.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply.

The Transport Research Laboratory has recently completed its review of existing research on alternative fuels, including compressed natural gas. This work is being developed in a joint study with the Department of Trade and Industry looking at the wider implications of alternative fuels including production and use. In addition, CNG is to be included in the project referred to in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 28 June at columns 477-78.

Housing (Defence Establishments)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities in relation to the increased demand for local authority housing tenancies from ex-military personnel following the implementation of the Government's "Options for Change" and similar policies.

Sir George Young: My Department has received no specific representations from local authorities on the matter.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what additional expenditure has been made available to local authorities by the Government to provide for additional demand created by reductions in the defence establishment;

(2) what measures he has taken to assist local authorities with increased demand for their housing stock as a result of reductions in the defence establishment.

Sir George Young: Resources for housing capital expenditure by authorities are made available by the Government each year in the form of housing investment programme allocations. HIP allocations in the current financial year total over £1·5 billion. It is for each housing authority to assess and prioritise the housing needs of its area, and to use its resources accordingly.

Environmental Agency

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date he expects the environmental agency to be established.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are committed to establishing the agency as soon as parliamentary time permits the passage of the necessary legislation.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what facilities his Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Baldry: Cycle racks are available for the use of visitors to my Department's offices at 2 Marsham street, Romney house, Lambeth Bridge house, and Millbank Tower.

Conservation Officers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what study he has made of the problems of conflicting pieces of primary legislation and the training budgets in local government for maintaining the expertise of conservation officers.

Mr. Baldry: I see no need for such a study.

Building Preservation Trusts

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the application of the Local Government Act 1990 to building preservation trusts in respect of the regulation of companies funded by local authorities; and what account is taken of expenditure by such trusts in calculating a local authority's annual capital expenditure.

Mr. Baldry: Local authority capital finance is regulated in England and Wales by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. We intend to make an order applying the main provisions to local authority companies but are still considering the precise extent of that order.

Nuclear Discharges

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which signatories of the Paris Commission in 1993 have accepted recommendation 93/5 recommending international scrutiny and consultation in relation to any new or revised discharge authorisation from nuclear reprocessing plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: At the 15th joint meeting of contracting parties to the Oslo and Paris Commissions on 14 to 19 June 1993 Denmark, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain and Sweden accepted Paris Commission recommendation 93/5. The United Kingdom registered a reservation, as did France and Belgium. The EEC abstained. Belgium has since withdrawn its reservation.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday playschemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has 10 workplace nursery places in the Westminster area and four in Bristol, all of which are at interdepartmental nurseries. There are also 11 places at the Building Research Establishment's own nursery. Subsidy up to a maximum of 50 per cent. of the running costs is available.

The Department participates in interdepartmental holiday play schemes in Westminster, Birmingham, Bristol, Bedford and at the Building Research Establishment. Play schemes cater for children from five to 12 years and operate during half-term holidays and main school holidays. The Department does not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" or make child care vouchers available to staff.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the planned spending allocations for local community safety and crime prevention initiatives from the single regeneration budget for the financial years 1995-96;, 1996-97; 1997-98 and 1998-99;

(2) what proportion of the single regeneration budget the estimates will be allocated to local community and crime prevention initiatives;

(3) in which ways he proposes to fund local community safety and crime prevention initiatives (a) in Birmingham and (b) nationally through the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Baldry: There are no fixed, centrally determined, spending allocations for categories of initiatives supported by the single regeneration budget from 1995-96 onwards. Subject to on-going commitments, and the funding requirements of the non-departmental public bodies supported by the budget, the level of spending on categories of initiatives such as local community safety and crime prevention will be determined by the success of relevant bids put forward for support by local partnerships in accordance with the bidding guidance for the Budget issued on 14 April 1994, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Ethnic Minority Grants

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what measures he has taken to protect existing spending commitments for current section 11-funded schemes under the single regeneration budget;

(2) what measures he proposes to take to protect existing ethnic minority business initiative spending commitments under the single regeneration budget;

(3) what measures he proposes to take to protect existing ethnic minority grant commitments under the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment told the House on 4 November 1993, Official Report, column 515, that continuing commitments under the 20 programmes which have been combined in the single regeneration budget will be met. These programmes include the urban part of section 11 funding which has been transferred to the budget, the ethnic minority business initiative and ethnic minority grant.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the existing commitments for ethnic minority grant for (a) the city of Birmingham and (b) nationally in the financial years to 1998-99;

(2) what are the existing spending commitments for section 11 funded schemes (a) nationally and (b) for the city of Birmingham for the financial years to 1998-99;

(3) what are the existing spending commitments under the ethnic minority business initiative in the financial years up to 1998-99 for (a) the city of Birmingham and (b) nationally.

Mr. Baldry: The estimated level of commitments under these programmes is shown in the table. These figures are provisional; they contain an estimate of the commitments for schemes due to start in 1994-95, and make assumptions about grant recipients' actual expenditure in 1994-95 and later years. Figures are not shown for section 11 for 1995-96 and later years; the basis of their calculation is to be the subject of discussions with local authorities.

(a) nationally

£ million

	1994-95	1995-96	1996-97	1997-98	1998-99
EMBI	0·600	0·318	0·134	—	—
EMG	5·860	2·500	—	—	—
s11 (urban)	60·500	(see note)	—	—
s11 (non-urban)	49·800	(see note)	—	—

(b) for the city of Birmingham

Section 11 Allocations notified to recipients within the city of Birmingham for 1994-95 are as follows:

	£ million
Birmingham city council	4,046,501
George Dixon school	81,865
Hall Green school	9,320
Ninestiles school	16,530
Small Heath school	50,626
Birmingham FE colleges	1,376,534
Joseph Chamberlain college	67,762

Information is not yet available about recipients' expenditure upon which the level of commitment to current approved projects in subsequent years will depend, and local authorities will be consulted before the basis on which future allocations is determined. Within the city of Birmingham, current commitments to the city council are predominantly of five-year duration; but funding for other recipients' current projects, with the exception of George Dixon and Ninestiles schools, ends on 31 March 1995.

Ethnic minority grant There are currently four approved projects funded through Birmingham TEC. Three are due to terminate at the end of March 1995 and the fourth at the end of March 1996. Grant expenditure on these four projects in the 1993-94 financial year amounted to around £52,000.

Ethnic minority business initiative The estimated existing commitments for Birmingham are £59,000 in 1994-95, £18,000 in 1995-96 and £4,000 in 1996-97.

Construction Industry

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish another state of the construction industry report.

Mr. Gummer: A second state of the construction industry report, produced jointly by my Department and representatives of the construction industry, has just been completed. Copies have been placed in the Library.

WALES

Air Quality

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the relative risks of diesel and petrol engines for air quality in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No assessment has been made specifically for Wales, but the quality of urban air review group has considered the impact of diesel vehicle emissions on urban air quality over the whole of the United Kingdom. A copy of the group's report, "Diesel Vehicle Emissions and Urban Air Quality", published in January 1994, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Recycling

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy on recycling in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government have set a target of recycling 25 per cent. of household waste by the year 2000.

I will continue to promote increased recycling wherever this is the best practical environmental option.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the total number of local authority homes now sold in Wales, giving the total amount of moneys raised since 1983; and if he will provide similar figures for each of the local authority housing authorities in the county of Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the total number of former council owned homes and which are now owned by the families who live in them and the receipts from these sales from April 1983 to March 1994 is shown in the table.

Local authority dwellings sold between April 1983 and March 1994

	Dwellings sold	Receipts[1] £000
Alyn and Deeside	1,304	16,348
Colwyn	708	7,083
Delyn	922	13,767
Glyndwr	813	10,295
Rhuddlan	727	8,239
Wrexham Maelor	3,023	36,041
Clwyd	7,497	91,773
Wales	66,744	799,782

[1] Includes the repayment of principal on local authority mortgages.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to stimulate local authority house building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I see a vital enabling role for local authorities in assessing housing need in their areas and facilitating the provision of new housing through housing associations and the private sector.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those schools in Wales which have grant-maintained status.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 9 December at column 307. Since that date, I have approved the application for grant-maintained status from Mary Immaculate Roman Catholic high school in South Glamorgan.

Ambulance Service, Powys

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average response time for ambulances in Powys in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Average mean ambulance response times are not available. The median response times—the 50th percentile—for ambulances in Powys for the last five available years are shown in the table:

Year	Time in minutes at 50th percentile
1988-89	10
1989-90	10
1990-91	9
1991-92	10
1992-93	9

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department provides nursery facilities and holiday play care for its staff. It uses 30 places in an 80 place nursery which is run in consortium with other Government Departments. Consortium members pay the accommodation costs and in 1993-94 the Department's contribution was £12,246. The cost to the Department of providing holiday play care during the Easter and summer holidays in 1993-94 was £4,457. The Department is committed to providing child care where it is cost-effective in assisting the retention of trained and experienced staff. The cost of support is evaluated annually. The Department does not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" or child care vouchers.

Planning Policy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will produce a planning policy guidance note on sustainable development and planning policies in Wales analogous to PPG 13 in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Planning policy guidance note 13, "Highways Considerations in Development Control", remains extant in Wales. The guidance is under review and I shall be issuing revised guidance for Wales.

Health Visitors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the proportion of health visitors to children in each health authority area in September 1992;

(2) what was the proportion of health visitors to children in each health and personal social services board area in September 1992;

(3) how many health visitors were employed in each health authority area in September 1988 and in September 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Reliable estimates of the numbers of nursing staff employed in specific occupational groups, such as health visitors, are not available centrally.

Local Government Responsibilities

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to transfer to Welsh local authorities responsibility for the activities and budget of each of (a) the Further Education Funding Council Wales, (b) the Curriculum and Assessment Authority Wales, (c) Cardiff Bay development corporation, (d) the urban regeneration section of the Welsh Development Agency, (e) social development section of the Development Board for Rural Wales and (f) the non-university section of the Higher Education Funding Council Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am announcing changes in the responsibilities of the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Welsh Development Agency today. The functions of all non-departmental public bodies are kept under regular review and any major changes in their status and responsibilities are notified to the House.

HEALTH

Administrative Grant

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of full-time equivalent (a) general managers, (b) administrative and (c) clerical staff in the NHS in each year since 1990-91.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the table.

National Health Service General Managers and Administrative and Clerical Staff in England at 30 September 1991 and 1992

Whole-time equivalents

	General Managers	Administrative and Clerical
1991	730	127,370
1992	700	135,010

Source: Department of Health statistical form KM49.
Notes:
1. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten.
2. It is not possible to separate administrative and clerical figures; data are collected as a total.
3. Figures for 1992 are the latest available.

Official Secrets Act 1989

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether employees of the new regional health authorities/ management executive outposts will be bound by, or required to sign declarations relating to, the Official Secrets Act 1989.

Mr. Sackville: Employees of the new regional health authorities are not bound by the Official Secrets Act 1989 except in so far as all members of the public with official information in their possession are affected by the Act.

Performance-related Pay

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce performance-related pay into her Department and the NHS executive.

Dr. Mawhinney: All staff in the Department are now covered by performance pay arrangements, the first of which was introduced in 1992.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on performance-related pay;

(2) what research she has commissioned into (a) the cost of implementing performance-related pay in the NHS and (b) the benefits of performance-related pay;

(3) what plans she has to introduce performance-related pay into the NHS; and which employers will be affected.

Dr. Mawhinney: General and senior managers and certain other national health service staff already benefit from performance-related pay. The freedom of trusts increasingly to determine the pay and conditions of their own staff is an important way of making services more responsive to local needs. We are therefore encouraging the introduction of local pay arrangements linked to the success of the organisation in meeting its objectives to improve the quality and quantity of patient care. Any additiional costs would be offest by increased efficiency.

Health Authorities

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates she has made of the costs of amalgamating district health authorities and family health service authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mental Health Units

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was her response to the recommendation by the Department of Health's mental health nursing review team that an urgent review of the therapeutic suitability of mental health units in district general hospitals should be undertaken.

Mr. Bowis: The report of the mental health nursing review team is still being disseminated throughout the national health service and a series of regional conferences are in the process of being held to consider how the recommendations may be taken forward.

The conference dates and locations are:
May 16—Bristol
May 20—Leeds
June 7—London

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will carry out an inquiry into the security of local authority accommodation for children in care, including the escape of a 14-year-old Bolton boy from Thornbury house in Oxfordshire; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Responsibility for all aspects of management of secure accommodation rests with the appropriate local authority. Last year the Department issued "Guidance on Permissible Forms of Control in Children's Residential Care", copies of which are available in the Library, about control and restraint in children's residential care. The Department will also be issuing more general guidance about the provision of secure accommodation. My officials are discussing with the relevant social services departments the circumstances and issues surrounding the particular incident to which my hon. Friend refers.

Mortality Rates

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the infant and perinatal mortality rates of each EU country at the most recent available date.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 2 December 1993, Official Report, column 701, for the latest available information.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what analysis she has of the infant and perinatal mortality rate by socio-economic group since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: Infant and perinatal mortality statistics, derived from death registrations, are not available by socio-economic group. Tables by social class are published each year in the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys DH3 annual reference volume "Mortality Statistics, perinatal and infant: social and biological factors", copies of which are available in the Library.

Private Hospitals

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amount the national health service spent on NHS patients being treated in private hospitals in each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville: The extent to which national health service purchasers contract with the private sector is a matter for local decision.

Mental Illness

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the findings of the mental illness study commissioned by the London implementation group.

Mr. Bowis: The London implementation group has not commissioned a study of mental illness.

Aortic Aneurysms

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 587-88, what assessment her Department has made as to the reasons for the increase in deaths from aortic aneurysms between 1988 and 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The disease is found predominantly among men aged 65 to 75. The number of men in that age group increased by 31,000 between 1988 and 1992.

Breast Self-examination Campaign

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for health if she will make a statement on the progress of the breast self-examination campaign.

Mr. Sackville: The Chief Medical Officer wrote to all doctors in England in 1991 to provide advice on ways in which women could be involved in the early detection of breast abnormalities. In addition, a leaflet entitled "Be Breast Aware", copies of which will be placed in the Library, has been produced by the national health service breast screening programme, which makes it clear to women what changes should be discussed with their doctor. The leaflet has been translated into a number of languages and has received widespread support. The Department has also recently helped fund a breast awareness video—"Being Breast Aware is for Life", produced by the charity, Womens Nationwide Cancer Control Campaign.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, for each NHS trust in the former south-east Thames region, those chairmen and non-executive directors who live outside the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of 132 of the 186—71 per cent.—chairmen and non-executive directors appointed to national health service trusts within the former South East Thames region live within the boundaries of the district health authority in which the trust is situated. The names of those who live outside the relevant district health authority boundaries are listed.

Health Service Commissioner

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to receive the annual report of the health service commissioner for 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: The health service commissioner has made his annual report on the performance of his functions in England, Scotland and Wales. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health, for Scotland and for Wales presented the report to the House on 6 July. It was published today—HC499—and copies have been placed in the Library.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision her Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if her Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 7 March, Official Report, column 89.

NHS Prescriptions

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether people absent from the United Kingdom but not visiting another country may receive NHS prescriptions;

(2) if people sailing around the world remain eligible for NHS prescriptions.

Dr. Mawhinney: As a general rule, people travelling abroad for short periods may receive medication under the national health service, subject to the clinical judgment of their general practitioner, for a period of up to three months.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she received guidance from the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens concerning Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease; and when the guidance will be published.

Mr. Sackville: The guidance was received at the end of March and is due to be published late August/early September.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 539, what guidance to date has been issued to laboratory staff who may handle materials contaminated with the agents causing (a) Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease and (b) bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Sackville: The following guidance has been issued to date:

'Code of Practice for the Prevention of Infection in Clinical Laboratories and Post-Mortem Rooms' (1978); DA(81)22; DA(84)16; 'Categorisation of Pathogens According to Hazard and Categories of Containment' (1st edition, 1984, extended 2nd edition, 1990) from the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens; and PL(92)CO/4 from the Deputy Chief Medical Officer.

Copies of the documents will be placed in the Library.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to monitor the spending of funds by GP fundholders.

Dr. Mawhinney: Family health services authorities have statutory responsibility for monitoring expenditure by general practitioner fundholders.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by health authority and region the underspend or surplus carried forward by GP fundholders in the financial years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: Final audited figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are not yet available.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will define patient care in relation to items upon which GP fundholders may spend their financial allocation; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service (Fund-holding Practices) Regulations 1993 define the range of services general practitioner fundholders may purchase on behalf of their patients. Copies of the regulations are available in the Library.

Dental Services

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to raise the proportion of the cost of dental treatment paid by patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service dental charges are kept under review, and decisions are made in the light of the Government's priorities for expenditure on the NHS.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the proportion of the population who visit a dentist every six months; and what assessment she has made of the effect of an increase in dental charges on attendance at dentists' surgeries.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such estimate can be made from the information available centrally. There is no evidence to suggest that increases in national health service dental charges have any significant long-term effect on attendance.

EDUCATION

Special Needs

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many and what percentage of disabled children with special educational needs were in mainstream schools in each year since 1979.

Mr. Forth: The total of all pupils who, at some time in their school career, have special educational needs is not collected centrally. The numbers of pupils with statements of special educational needs—including those who are disabled—in primary, middle and secondary maintained schools in England are not available pre-1985 but are set out below as at January of each year 1985-1993. They are also shown as a percentage of all pupils with statements in maintained[1] schools including special schools.

Year	Pupils with statements in mainstream schools	As percentage of all pupils with statements in maintained sector
1985	26,800	19
1986	30,000	21
1987	33,300	23
1988	40,900	28
1989	47,300	32
1990	54,300	35
1991	62,000	42
1992	71,200	46
1993	85,000	49

[1] Includes non-maintained special schools.

National Testing

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what help he intends to provide for teachers assessing key stage 1.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has recently announced that he proposes, for 1995, to fund supply cover for teachers of seven-year-olds engaged on administering tests. This is in addition to the considerable amount of expenditure in support of the implementation of the assessment arrangements in schools—some £180 million—through the grants for education support and training programme over the last four years. A large proportion of this expenditure has been in primary schools.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has made to the Chancellor of the Exchequer to secure extra funding needed to pay the cost of using external examiners in the asessment of key stage 2 and key stage 3.

Mr. Robin Squire: It has not been the practice of this or previous Administrations to disclose details of discussions between Ministers. My right hon. Friend has found the necessary resources from within his Department's £7·5 billion vote programme.

Multi-cultural Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received on changes in section 11 funding and their effect on multi-cultural education; and what action he is taking in response.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have received many representations from hon. Members, local authorities and associations, teacher unions, minority ethnic communities and other interested parties about changes in section 11 funding.

My right hon. Friend will continue to monitor, through OFSTED, the standard of educational provision in all maintained schools, including provision for those pupils for whom English is not their first language. Additional support for the latter category through section 11 grants is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

School Sports

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which code of rugby is included within the required school sports contained within the national curriculum.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the present national curriculum order for physical education, games are mandatory for all pupils from age five to 14. My right hon. Friend has recently published proposals that would extend this requirement to all pupils of compulsory school age. However, individual sports are not prescribed.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: London-based staff are able to use the Westminster holiday play scheme which is organised by the Office of Public Service and Science. The cost of places is shared equally by parents and the Department. In the year ending 31 March 1994, six members of staff used the scheme for their children on one or more occasions.

Darlington-based staff have access to a play scheme which was set up at the instigation of the Department for Education. Places are shared with other civil servants working in the Darlington area. In the financial year ending 31 March 1994, 105 children have used the scheme. The costs are borne largely on a pro rata basis by the participating Departments, with parents making a small daily contribution.

The Department does not currently subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" or make child care vouchers available.

Colleges (Minor Works Funds)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken to monitor the use of minor works funds in colleges; and what records are available to show the purposes for allocation of these funds in each college.

Mr. Boswell: The monitoring of the use of allocations from the Further Education Funding Council for England for minor works in colleges is a matter for the FEFC.

Minor works funds are paid to colleges by FEFC on production of contractors' invoices and architects' certificates. These are checked against a detailed schedule of works required at each college, prepared for FEFC by Hunter and Partners, chartered surveyors. The FEFC will also be conducting spot-checks of minor works at colleges in the coming months. Colleges are required as a condition of funding to have adequate systems of accounting, audit and internal control, and are thus in a position to demonstrate from their own records how their funds have been used.

Colleges are permitted to transfer recurrent funding received from FEFC to capital purposes, subject to any limits which FEFC may choose to impose. Colleges' governing bodies have operational autonomy, and are free to decide how to spend such funding in the best interests of their college.

The FEFC must be consulted about transactions affecting land or buildings which involve capital sums in excess of £100,000, and where FEFC funds are likely to be required for maintenance of the property. Its consent is required where its funding is applied to developments significantly affecting the value of property, or where material disposals of publicly funded assets are envisaged.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Motor Vehicles (Explosives)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions since 1990 motor cars have been found to contain explosives, or had explosives placed underneath them, in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The available information is for all motor vehicles, including motor cars, and is as follows:

	Number of incidents
Vehicle Bombs	116
Under car booby traps	97

Figures for "finds" recovered specifically from motor vehicles are not available.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions bicycles containing illegal explosive devices have been used by terrorists in incidents in Northern Ireland since 1990.

Sir John Wheeler: Once, on 30 March 1990.

Fire Safety

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the views of the fire service branch, Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland), will be sought and taken into account during the present cross-Department review of fire safety legislation and its enforcement within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Tim Smith: Copies of the report of the scrutiny of fire safety legislation and enforcement have been sent to the Department for comment and for circulation to other interested bodies. Any comments submitted to the review team will be considered by Ministers when the consultation period has ended.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the final decision on changes to fire safety legislation and its enforcement in Northern Ireland, following the current cross-Department review, will rest with Parliament.

Mr. Tim Smith: Full implementation of the recommendations in the report of the scrutiny of fire safety legislation and enforcement would require changes to both primary and subordinate legislation. Changes to primary legislation would require an Order-in-Council. Changes to subordinate legislation while subject to consultation, could be introduced without debate. However, no decisions on implementation will be made before consultation on the report ends on 31 October 1994.

Drug Offences

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) men and (b) women were convicted of drug offences in Northern Ireland during (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993.

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

Persons convicted of drug offences in Northern Ireland: at all courts

Year	Male	Female
1992	262	12
1993	401	22

Homelessness

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were accepted as statutorily homeless in Northern Ireland during the last three years; and how many are (a) over 21 years old and (b) under 21 years old.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. However, I am advised by its chief executive that the numbers of applicants accepted as being either homeless or threatened with homelessness in the last three years are as follows:

Year	Number of applicants
1991-92	7,494
1992-93	7,549
1993-94	7,216

Information is not recorded on the number of applicants over and under 21 years of age.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff: what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: In the Northern Ireland civil service departments staff may contribute to staff child care costs where this is justified on value-for-money grounds. There are currently 36 subsidised places provided in registered nurseries. The Child Support Agency Northern Ireland subsidises 50 per cent. of the weekly cost up to a maximum of £30 and the Department of the Environment (NI) subsidises 35 per cent. of the weekly cost up to a maximum of £28. In addition eight holiday play schemes are assisted. The holiday play schemes which are located throughout Northern Ireland are deficit funded in their first year and thereafter 50 per cent. of accommodation and 40 per cent. of staff costs are funded. The Northern Ireland civil service does not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" or provide child care vouchers to staff.

The London Office currently subsidises four places in a registered nursery. The amount of the subsidy is 50 per cent. of the full cost each week.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday playschemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: This answer covers the Cabinet Office, including the Office of Public Service and Science and its agencies, the Central Office of Information, and Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Workplace nurseries are available to staff at the Civil Service college and the Chessington computer centre. Holiday play schemes are available to staff working in departmental buildings in London and at CCTA in Norwich.

The Civil Service college contributed £11,819 to staff places at its nursery in 1993-94. Chessington computer centre contributed £39,493 to staff places at its nursery in 1993-94.

The Westminster holiday play scheme is available to all staff in London and is subsidised by reimbursing staff 50 per cent. of the cost incurred. The holiday play scheme available to staff at CCTA in Norwich is subsidised at a rate of £850 per annum.

The Westminster holiday play scheme is also available to COI staff in London and is subsidised by reimbursing staff 50 per cent. of the cost incurred.

A workplace nursery and holiday play scheme is available to HMSO staff in Norwich. In 1993-94, HMSO contributed £81,370 to the nursery and £1,757 to the holiday play scheme.

The Cabinet Office, the OPSS and its agencies, the COI and HMSO do not subscribe to "Childcare Solutions" or make child care vouchers available.

When determining what child care assistance to provide, the Cabinet Office, the OPSS and its agencies, the COI and HMSO, in common with all other Departments, ensure that it is justified on value for money grounds.

ENVIRONMENT

Unfit Properties

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish tables showing for each region and nation an estimate of the number of unfit properties, together with the distribution of these properties by tenure, and the number of renovation grants committed in the most recent available year.

Sir George Young: The first table shows estimates of the numbers of unfit dwellings. The second table shows estimates of approvals of mandatory and discretionary renovation grants in England during the financial year 1993-94. Figures are provided for England. For figures for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, I refer the Member to the respective Secretaries of State.

Juveniles (Publicity)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he has issued to local authority councillors in respect of using juveniles under local authority supervision for publicity purposes.

Mr. Baldry: None. The only guidelines on local authority publicity which my Department has issued is the 1988 code of recommended practice on local authority publicity which does not cover the use of juveniles for publicity purposes. I have placed a copy of the code in the Library.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the figures for carbon dioxide emissions resulting from household use of energy in the United Kingdom in each year since 1990; and what is the (a) estimate and (b) Government target for 2000.

Mr. Atkins: The 16th edition of the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" shows that emissions of carbon dioxide from household energy use were estimated to be 42 million tonnes of carbon—MtC—in 1990, 44 MtC in 1991 and 43 MtC in 1992. Emissions in 1990 were relatively low because the year was particularly warm. The Government have not set a specific target for domestic sector emissions in 2000, although the measures announced in our climate change programme are expected to achieve a reduction of around 4 MtC below the underlying trend, which is currently expected to be about flat for the domestic sector.

Climate Change (Insurance)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with representatives of Lloyd's insurance market on the risks associated with global climate change.

Mr. Atkins: I have had no such discussions, but the possible impact of climate change on the financial services industry, including insurance, is one of the issues that will be addressed in the second assessment report of the intergovernmental panel on climate change, and my department is providing financial support for one United Kingdom expert who has been asked to act as a contributing author on that issue.

Housing Safety

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce new controls to improve safety standards in houses in multiple occupation.

Sir George Young: The Government are aware of the continuing concern about the number of hotels in resort areas which are operating as benefit hostels and of the wider concern about safety standards in all houses in multiple occupation—HMOs.

Ministers share these concerns, but they are also anxious to avoid regulation unless it can be clearly demonstrated that such regulation is both essential and practical.

Local authorities already have considerable powers to improve standards in HMOs, and to establish HMO registration schemes. They also have a statutory duty to ensure adequate fire safety standards in the larger HMOs. The issue of benefit hostels raises separate considerations and planning controls relating to the conversion from hotel to hostel use have recently been tightened.

It is clearly necessary to consider carefully what more, if anything, needs to be done in both these areas. I have therefore instructed my officials in the Department of the Environment to begin immediate discussions with interested parties, on the case for a licensing system and how it might operate, with a view to issuing a formal consultation paper in the late summer. Full-scale licensing would require primary legislation and the paper will need to examine the scope for measures to tackle these problems both with or without legislation.

EDUCATION

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Boswell: The Secretary of State has not in the last 10 years directed the Department's accounting officer to award any contract against official advice.

Special Educational Needs Conferences

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many conferences his Department has organised to promote the new code of practice for special educational needs; when and where they are to be held; what is the cost for a delegate from a school to attend; and how much additional copies of the information packs on the code of practice will cost.

Mr. Forth: The Department, together with the Department of Health, the Welsh Office, the National Children's Bureau and the Council for Disabled Children, arranged six conferences to help disseminate the code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. The conferences were held in London on 15 June, Manchester on 21 June, York on 24 June, Cardiff on 1 July, Bristol on 5 July and Birmingham on 7 July. The cost of attendance for each delegate was £94. Delegates were given an information pack including a copy of the code, the guide for parents and a handbook. Additional copies of the code and the guide for parents can be obtained free; additional copies of the handbook cost £6·50 each.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Child Witnesses

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures are being taken by courts in Staffordshire to protect child witnesses, with particular reference to the use of screens and television link equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Both court centres in Staffordshire, namely Stafford and Stoke on Trent, have screens available, and Stafford also has live television link equipment and video playback equipment for use in the presentation of evidence by child witnesses. All magistrates courts have access to screens and the use of the television link equipment at Stafford, if required.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Never.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs what progress has been made recently by (a) the United Nations development programme, (b) the Food and Agriculture Organisation, (c) the World Health Organisation, (d) UNOSOM—the United Nations operation in Somalia, (e) the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and (f) UNICEF in developing reconstruction and other services in north west Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Details of the activities of UNDP, FAO, WHO and the role of UNOSOM in north-west Somalia have been provided in answers to the hon. Member on 24 February at columns 398-99, 28 February at column 546, 1 March at column 631, 15 April at columns 303 and 329 and 14 June at columns 393-94.

UNICEF activities in the region include: health—mother and child health programmes, immunisation, treatment and prevention of cholera, support for hospitals and health centres; education—construction of one Koranic school in Hargeisa, with 10 additional schools targeted for rehabiliation, training programme for koranic school teachers; and water and sanitation—emergency trucking of water, rehabilitation of shallow wells and hand pump installation.

UNHCR has confirmed the completion of 148 quick impact projects—QUIPS—to assist the resident population and returning refugees. A further 216 projects continue including those in the water, health, education, agriculture, livestock and income generation sectors. UNHCR has also made available US$2·6 million for demining activities and is involved in discussions with regional authorities on the repatriation of Somali refugees from Ethiopia and Djibouti.

The United Nations development office is planning a multi-donor mission to Woquooly Galbeed region to take forward discussions with regional authorities on the priorities and conditions necessary for developing reconstruction activities and services to that region.

Know-how Fund Projects

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each know-how fund project by country and date; and how much has been (a) committed and (b) spent on each project.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant) on 28 June at column 471. Such lists are placed in the Libraries of both Houses at regular intervals.

Know-how fund expenditure in recipient countries to March 1933—detailed figures for 1993-4 are not yet available—is as follows:

Albania	39,000
Azerbaijan	81,000
Belarus	26,000
Bulgaria	2,810,000
Former Czechoslovakia	14,599,000
Georgia	26,000
Former German Democratic Republic	502,000
Hungary	13,023,000
Latvia	350,000
Lithuania	486,000
Poland	32,722,000
Romania	3,823,000
Russian Federation	14,475,000
Slovenia	45,000
Ukraine	3,193,000
Regional projects[1]	4,969,000

[1] For 1992-93 includes Environment projects.

Palestine

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further assistance Her Majesty's Government are providing to the new Palestinian administration in Gaza and Jericho.

Mr. Hurd: In response to the urgent needs of the Palestinian authority, Her Majesty's Government have decided to provide an extra £5 million of bilateral assistance this year. A total of £3 million will be for immediate running costs, and £2 million for increased technical cooperation. Part of these funds will be for the Palestinian police. This will help meet the urgent requirements in the key area of maintaining law and order.

The success of the new Palestinian administration in Gaza and Jericho is critical for the future of the peace process. Provision of start-up costs is an immediate need.

Her Majesty's Government have previously announced their intention to contribute £70 million of assistance to the Palestinians and the peace process during 1994-95 and 1996-97, through bilateral and multilateral channels. Many programmes are already underway. Their focus is support for the structures of Palestinian administration: the police, for whom we are already providing training and equipment; the Palestinian Monetary Authority; legal structures and the judiciary; water management and health care. We are also providing assistance for the planned Palestinian elections.

HOME DEPARTMENT

National Lottery

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the first grants to be made to charities by the National Lottery Charities Board.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This will be a matter for the board to decide.

Electoral Law (Disabled People)

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what role will be played by his Department in the forthcoming consultation on disability; and what plans he has to publish a consultation paper on countering unfair discrimination against disabled people in electoral matters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend, the Minister for Disabled People, will be co-ordinating action on this front and will involve other Departments as necessary. We have no plans to produce a separate consultation paper.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions bicycles have been found to contain illegal explosive devices for the use of terrorists, on the mainland of Great Britain.

Mr. Howard: The available records indicate that there have been two explosions in Great Britain involving bicycle bombs: in 1939 an IRA bicycle bomb exploded in Coventry killing five people and in 1979 a bomb exploded in a mailbag on a postman's bicycle in Streatley, Berkshire. Since then there have been three occasions when Irish Republican terrorists are believed to have been responsible for bicycle bomb attacks elsewhere, twice in Northern Ireland and once at a British military installation in Germany.

Computer Contracts

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current position of his Department over the award of the contracts for the processing of historical criminal records to (a) overseas based and (b) United Kingdom based processing companies; and whether members of the project team have visited processing facilities in the Philippines with regard to this contract.

Mr. Howard: After careful consideration of the competing bids, which included a visit by members of the project team to the Philippines, it has been decided to award the contract to PCL Group, which submitted the bid which was judged to represent the best overall value for money to the taxpayer. The work will be carried out, under conditions of the strictest security, in Rickmansworth and Glasgow. The contract provides for the conversion of some 3 million records over 18 months, creating a database which will be of immense value to the police service in the investigation of crime.

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what important factors his Department uses when determining the award of contracts involving computerisation of (a) criminal records and (b) general processing information of a sensitive nature.

Mr. Howard: The criteria for evaluation will vary according to the nature of the work to be done; the details are given in the announcement in the Official Journal of the European Communities which launches every substantial procurement. In the case of the current project to computerise the national collection of criminal records, the award criteria, other than price, were stated as "Proven ability to process the required throughput volumes, achieving the required quality and security levels, in the required timescale" (Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities, 25 November and 4 December 1993).

Jersey

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make representations to the Government of Jersey concerning their refusal to allow United Kingdom citizens to gain residential and home ownership rights on the island.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Jersey is an internally self-governing dependency of the Crown, and by constitutional convention my right hon. and learned Friend does not seek to intervene in matters such as the island's housing regulations.

Polling Stations (Disabled Access)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by his Department since April 1992 to make polling stations more accessible to people with disabilities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 7 July 1994]: We regularly remind local authorities about their obligation to choose, wherever practicable, buildings which provide access for the disabled. Advice on helping disabled electors provided by the Spastics Society was circulated to returning officers in April 1993. The guidance included a checklist for carrying out accessibility audits at polling stations. A further reminder about the needs of disabled voters was included in our guidance for acting returning officers at the European parliamentary elections earlier this year. My officials met representatives of the Spastics Society and the Royal National Institute for the Blind as part of the post-election review and their concerns have been reflected by the working groups which reported their findings in March. My officials have recently met representatives of the local authority associations to discuss the findings and will report to me in due course on the outcome of the post-election review.

EMPLOYMENT

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what proportion of unfair dismissal claims have resulted in reinstatement in each of the last five years;

(2) how many unfair dismissal claims have resulted in reinstatement in each of the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: Only about one third of all unfair dismissal claims are heard by an industrial tribunal. The majority are settled or withdrawn, often as a result of conciliation by the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service. The number of unfair dismissal claims where reinstatement or re-engagement have been ordered by an industrial tribunal and their proportion of all unfair dismissal claims is shown in the following table:

1 April to 31 March	Number	Per cent.
1989-90	59	0·33
1990-91	63	0·32
1991-92	71	0·28
1992-93	73	0·22
1993-94	72	0·17

Gender Identity Disorder

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to reinforce the employment rights of individuals suffering from gender identity disorder.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no such plans.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to make it clear on the face of the application form for an industrial tribunal hearing that consent to having the case heard by a chairman sitting alone in chambers, once given, cannot be withdrawn.

Miss Widdecombe: Industrial tribunals are independent judicial bodies and such matters are for the presidents of the tribunals to consider. However, I understand that the tribunals' new explanatory booklet on procedures, which the guidance note on the application form asks applicants to read, will make it clear that once such written consent is given by the parties it cannot be withdrawn, although the chairman may exercise his discretion to sit with lay members.

Gas Poisoning and Explosions

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many non-industrial deaths and serious injuries have occurred in each of the last five years due to gas poisoning and explosions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is shown in the table:

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Number of fatalities
Explosion/fire	6	15	11	8	3[1]
Carbon monoxide poisoning	41	34	30	33	39[1]
Number of injuries
Explosion/fire	42	67	48	63	33[1]
Carbon monoxide poisoning	94	88	131	184	170[1]

[1] Provisional.

The statistics, as gathered, do not differentiate between fires and explosions. Carbon monoxide poisoning is caused by the products of combustion escaping from an appliance into living accommodation. The gas supplied through the mains is not poisonous.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

British Library

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the reasons for the increase in the cost of building the new British library; and what steps are being taken to control the budget.

Mr. Brooke: A former Minister for the Arts, Mr. Luce, announced to the House on 5 June 1990, that the total cost of the project would be about £450 million. This cash budget has not changed, although it is likely to be exceeded temporarily while we deal with the commercial issues arising from the technical problems encountered recently. I remain determined to bring the overall project costs back to the cash budget set in 1990.

An independent consultant carries out cost risk analyses for the Department of National Heritage at regular intervals to ascertain confidence levels that the project will keep within the overall budget and we take action, as necessary, if these raise any concerns. As a result of one such analysis during 1993, we reduced the cost of the two phases of the project, in full consideration with the British library.

Monthly financial reports are produced for the department showing, for each element of the work, the amount spent and committed against budget. Quantity surveyors value the cost of the work as it proceeds and the management contractor and independent superintending officer each certify what has been done before we authorise payment. We also exercise strict control over contractual changes which have to be carefully examined and costed before we approve them, where justified.

Pools Advertising

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received from the advertising association regarding pools advertising on television and radio.

Mr. Brooke: The director-general of the Advertising Association wrote to me in November 1993 asking me to reconsider the ban on pools advertising on television and radio.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received from the Pools Promoters Association on amendments to codes of practice of the Independent Television Commission and the Independent Radio Authority regarding pools advertising.

Mr. Brooke: None.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what estimate he has made on the effect of the national lottery's turnover if the football pools were given equal access to advertising on television and radio;

(2) what estimate he has made of the effect on pools turnover if a national lottery is permitted to advertise on television and radio and pools are not.

Mr. Brooke: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Financial Assistance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what level of regional financial assistance was made available to each of the standard United Kingdom regions in each year since 1978-79 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1978-79 prices.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 5 June 1992, Official Report, columns 676-78 for information on regional financial assistance since 1978-79. The latest information is regularly published in "Regional Trends". The GDP deflators to convert the expenditure to the 1978-79 prices are published in the public expenditure statistical supplement to the "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Energy Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to publicise and distribute copies of his first annual energy report; what has been the cost of publication of the report; and if he will make a statement on the degree and type of response he has received on the report to date.

Mr. Eggar: I launched volume 1 of the first annual energy report at a press conference on 15 June and mentioned it subsequently at the press conference for the International Energy Agency review of United Kingdom energy policy on 30 June. About 250 copies of the report have been sent out to relevant parts of the media. Volume 2—the Brown Book—had been launched, as usual by the end of April, to coincide with the offshore technology conference in Houston. Further publicity for the report will be provided when the "Digest of Energy Statistics" is published later this month. HMSO, as publisher and vendor of the report, has also carried out its own publicity initiatives. Over 1,500 copies of volume 2 have been sold to date.

The direct cost of publishing the report was borne by HMSO. The cost of designing the new formats for the two volumes and of typesetting and proofing was about £40,000. The cost to the Department of official time immediately involved in preparing both volumes of the report was about £120,000. In addition, officials in DTI and other Departments contributed to and commented on the report. This cost is estimated to be of the order of £10,000. The members of the energy advisory panel gave their time free of charge.

I have had a favourable reaction to the report from the energy advisory panel. Further reaction is invited within the report itself.

Radiocommunications Agency

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effectiveness with which the Radiocommunications Agency is carrying out its functions in relation to interference problems in Tonge Park avenue, Bolton.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Radiocommunications Agency under its chief executive Jim Norton. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Peter Thurnham, dated 8 July 1994:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Question about the Agency's handling of an interference problem in Tonge Park Avenue, Bolton.

The last investigation carried out by the Radiocommunications Agency in Tonge Park Avenue was in 1992, at which time residents reported an amateur radio installation as the source of interference to television and radio reception. Agency staff inspected the amateur station and in September 1992, following extensive tests, the amateur agreed to voluntarily restrict his power output. Apparently this cured the problem as no further complaints were received.

However, you wrote to me on 28 June 1994 on behalf of your constituents Mr. and Mrs. Lever of 41 Tonge Park Avenue to say that the interference has re-occurred. I am sorry to learn of this. I have asked my local staff to carry out an up to date inspection of the amateur station and I will write again as soon as possible.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set the Insolvency Service executive agency for 1994-95.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Against the background of a declining number of compulsory insolvencies and a significant increase in the resources for 1994-95, I have set the Insolvency Service the target of reducing the number of its open cases to a level equivalent to approximately 12 months inpout. This will involve the service in closing 53,000 cases. I also expect the service to increase the number of proceedings taken for the disqualification of directors of failed companies where there is evidence of misconduct and, similarly, to increase the effectiveness of its investigative effort. To that end official receivers will be placing greater emphasis on disqualification and prosecution work. This will be aided by an increased use of private sector professionals and by the strengthening of the specialist's resources of the disqualification unit.

In addition, I have set the service the following quality of service targets for 1994-95:

- to report to creditors on assets and liabilities within 8 weeks in at least 80 per cent. of all cases; and within 12 weeks in 98 per cent. of all cases;
- to hold the initial meeting of creditors within 12 weeks in at least 80 per cent. of all cases; and within 16 weeks in 98 per cent. of all cases;
- to submit reports within 10 months in at least 80 per cent. of cases where there is evidence of criminality;
- to submit disqualification reports within 15 months in at least 80 per cent. of cases where there is evidence of unfit conduct by directors;
- to check and action at least 95 per cent. of payment requisitions within five days or by the due date.

These targets are based on an assumption of 35,000 new cases and a requirement to operate within its agreed expenditure budget of £57·5 million for 1994-95.

In addition, I expect the chief executive of the service to continue to reply within 10 working days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

Telecommunications Licences

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many telecommunications licences have been granted since the duopoly review in March 1991.

Mr. Heseltine: A total of 47 telecommunications licences have been issued since March 1991. In addition, I have now decided in principle to grant licences to Concert —the BT/MCI joint venture which has recently obtained clearance from the United States Department of Justice —and AT and T. Draft licences will be prepared and will be subject to consultation in due course. Public consultation is obligatory for all public telecommunications operator licences, such as AT and T's. It is not obligatory in the case of Concert's non-PTO application. However, I have decided that in this case it would be appropriate to give interested parties the opportunity to comment. The issue of the licences is subject to agreement on the detailed terms and conditions.

Regional Support

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was (a) the planned expenditure and (b) the actual expenditure on regional support in 1993-94.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The information on planned expenditure is published in the DTI's 1994 "Expenditure Plans, 1994-95 to 1996-97", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. Final figures on the actual expenditure on regional support in 1993-94 are not yet available. They will be published in the appropriation accounts in due course.

TREASURY

Severe Hardship Unit, Glasgow

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which members of his Department visited the Department of Social Security severe hardship unit in Glasgow in April; what was the purpose of their visit; what recommendations they have made following their visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Treasury officials paid a visit to the severe hardship unit in Glasgow for discussions about the administration of income support payments to young people. Advice from them or from any other official to Ministers would be treated as confidential in the normal way.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General when and by whom the decision was taken to set up a committee to investigate the possibility that the Crown Prosecution Service might be privatised; who are the members of that committee and what other positions they hold; how many times the committee has met; what provisional date has been set for privatisation; what plans he has to publish a Green Paper and to consult publicly on the proposed privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I announced on 6 December 1993, Official Report, column 59, that consideration would be given to whether the Crown Prosecution Service, the Serious Fraud Office and the Treasury Solicitor's Department should become executive agencies under the "next steps" initiative. I further announced on 27 April 1994, Official Report, column 234, that prior options studies were being undertaken, to establish whether agency status or other options would be appropriate. The Government's first report on the citizens charter, published in 1992, announced that privatisation is one of the options considered before an agency is set up. Other options include contractorisation and market testing.

The prior options and agency studies for CPS and SFO are being overseen by an interdepartmental steering group which comprises officials from my own Department, CPS, SFO, the Lawyers Management Unit, Home Office, Lord Chancellors Department, Treasury and Office of Public Service and Science. The steering group has so far met on two occasions and is charged with reporting to me by late autumn this year. No decisions have yet been made nor will they be made until the process is completed. In my announcement on 27 April I invited contributions from interested parties. These continue to be welcome and should be sent to:

Mr. S. Guy
Crown Prosecution Service,
50 Ludgate Hill,
London EC4M 7EX

Ms J. Rowe
Serious Fraud Office,
Elm House,
10-16 Elm Street,
London, WC1X OBJ

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) to what extent problems in the Child Support Agency computer system and the EDS application have contributed to the backlog in the agency's work;

(2) to what extent the Child Support Agency office staff of clerical grade are finding difficulty in accessing, using and reacting to their computer system; and what assessment has been made of the effects of, and remedies for, the difficulties experienced by Child Support Agency staff;

(3) to what extent the Child Support Agency has been hampered in its national operation by (a) downtime of the Child Support Agency computer system central IBM mainframe computer and data links and (b) the overrun of night-time batch processing into office hours;

(4) how many incorrect assessments, mis-identifying of absent fathers and other maladministration have been made due to mistakes involving the Child Support Agency computer system;

(5) what proportion of those cases taken on by the Child Support Agency are being dealt with clerically without the aid of the Child Support Agency computer system; and how many of the assessments made by the agency have been made clerically;

(6) to what extent the Child Support Agency has been hampered in the regional centres by non-availability of the centre's own server computers.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 8 July 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding the Child Support Agency computer system.

As with any large, new system, areas where improvements can be made have been identified. There is a continuous programme of improvements to the system including a planned quarterly enhancement to increase functionality. All relevant staff have been trained to use the system, and are generally doing so competently. Advice and support are available in the event of difficulty.

You asked how many incorrect assessments had been made due to mistakes involving the computer system. Wrong assessments can occur because clients of the Agency provide incorrect information or because Agency staff make mistakes. Whilst this can cause incorrect data entry, the computer system is not known, with one exception, to have caused an incorrect assessment or misidentification of an absent parent. The exception occurred recently when, due to a programming fault, errors occurred on 789 assessments. These were identified within two days and remedial action is being taken.

You were concerned about the effect of computer system downtime on Agency operations. Although non-availability of the system can have a disruptive effect, this cannot be measured precisely because the staff also perform non-system tasks which can be pursued during the course of any loss of service.

You also asked what proportion of cases are being dealt with clerically; and how many of the assessments made by the Agency have been made clerically. Figures available for the year 1993-94 show that a total of 205,400 assessments were made by the Agency, of which 8,100 were assessed clerically.

I hope that this reply is helpful.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many maintenance assessments have been wrongly calculated by the Child Support Agency since its establishment.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Greville Janner, dated 7 July 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about maintenance assessments which have been wrongly calculated.

The Agency routinely monitors maintenance assessments to ensure that they are accurate with regard to law, process, procedure and money to be paid. A composite accuracy rate is not available as such, but stringent procedures are in place to minimise the risk of inaccurate assessments.

Additionally, adjudication decisions and appeals in Agency centres are regularly examined by the Central Adjudication Services, an independent body who annually provide the Secretary of State with a report on the adjudication standard of the Agency.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what average amount of money received from absent parents the Child Support Agency holds at any time pending the forwarding of those payments to parents with care of children;

(2) how much interest the Child Support Agency has received to date from moneys received from absent parents prior to their payment over to parents with care of children.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John T. Hughes to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 8 July 1994.

In her absence the Chief Executive, Mrs. Hepplewhite, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about client funds temporarily held by the Agency.

I can confirm that the Agency does not receive interest from the bank in respect of client funds temporarily held by the Agency. Instead, the Agency's bank charges are abated.

During April and May this year, the average amount of money received from absent parents and awaiting onward transmission to parents with care at any one time was approximately £620,000. This is based on the average volume of daily receipts, the proportion attributable to parents with care and the clearance times of the different payment methods.

I hope that you find this reply helpful.

Lesbian Parents

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what maintenance payments are due from fathers of children born to unmarried lesbians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Under the Child Support Act and regulations, a parent with care who claims or receives income support, family credit or disability working allowance is required to give her authority for maintenance to be pursed from the absent parent unless there is a risk of harm or undue distress occurring to her or any child living with her. If benefit is not in payment it is a matter for the parent with care whether she seeks a child support maintenance assessment.

A man who fathers a child has a responsibility to pay maintenance under child support legislation. This applies whether the mother lives alone or with a new partner. However, where a woman attends a licensed centre for artificial insemination by an anonymous donor the donor cannot be treated as the absent parent.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to lay regulations before Parliament to allow occupational pension schemes to reinstate former employees' protected rights as he announced in his statement to the House on 23 June, Official Report, column 359.

Mr. Hague: The Protected Rights (Transfer Payment) Regulations 1987 preclude the transfer of protected rights into an occupational pension scheme where the member is not employed by the contributing employer. Following representations from officials of the Securities and Investments Board and the occupational pensions sector, we have decided to remove this restriction and have today laid before Parliament appropriate amendment regulations. Reinstatement will remain at the discretion of the schemes' trustees in the light of their schemes' rules. However, the new regulations will enable schemes who wish to do so, to accept the transfer of protected rights even where the individual is no longer employed by the contributing employer.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Lilley: I am advised that there is no knowledge of any such directions being issued in my Department in the last ten years.

WALES

Disability

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to ensure further education opportunities for young people suffering from muscular dystrophy; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Further Education Funding Council for Wales is responsible for ensuring adequate arrangements are in place to meet the needs of all students with learning difficulties or disabilities.

The Council has built into its recurrent funding methodology a significant element to recognise the discrete costs of provision for students with learning difficulties and/or disabilities and to enable such students to access and integrate successfully in mainstream courses.

Planning Procedures

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that full planning permission is required from county councils in order to construct any building, plant or machinery.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally. I am looking at how difficult it would be to obtain it and at what cost.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce approval of and the names of the chairmen and board membership of those trusts intended to commence their existence on 1 April 1995.

Mr. Redwood: Decisions on whether or not to establish further NHS trusts in Wales are expected to be announced in the autumn following statutory public consultation. Announcement of the membership of any further trusts would be made as soon as possible thereafter.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those health trusts in Wales which (a) are and (b) are not achieving a 6 per cent. rate of return with respect to the financial year 1993-94 management accounts.

Mr. Redwood: All but one of the 14 trusts expect to achieve a 6 per cent. rate of return for 1993-94. The rate of return for the South and East Wales ambulance trust may be marginally lower at around 5·7 per cent. The actual outcome will be known following the audit of the annual accounts for each trust.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the trusts in Wales with respect to the 6 per cent. rate of return on capital, with respect to rolling forward interest payments, or adjustment of the (a) 6 per cent. rate of return or (b) the valuation of capital stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have regular discussions with the chairmen of Welsh NHS trusts on a range of issues. Trusts have a duty to achieve their statutory financial targets.

GP Referral Letters

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the Welsh health authorities and trusts in relation to the timing of the opening of letters from general practitioners to consultants marked urgent and very urgent for triage by (a) others or (b) the consultants themselves; and what analysis he has made of the impact of setting maximum periods for the opening of general practitioner's referral letters.

Mr. Redwood: I have not discussed these matters with the chairmen of Welsh health authorities and trusts, nor have I considered assessing the impact of such targets.

DEFENCE

Dispersal Programme

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate how many jobs in his Department, transferred to Glasgow under the dispersal programme, have subsequently been re-allocated elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: Some 1,400 jobs were transferred to Glasgow on dispersal in 1986. Of these, some 63 jobs in the directorate of contracts have been moved to collocate with the single-service directorates they support at Andover, Brampton and Bath.

Official Service Residences

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) of 1 July, Official Report, column 764, if he will state the latest valuation of the official service residences and the annual running costs of the residences.

Mr. Hanley: It is, of course, not feasible to value properties accurately without placing them on the open market. My Department does, however, assign estimated sale valuations where possible and the latest valuation for official service residences is approximately £34,000,000. This valuation covers 67 of the 77 residences in the United Kingdom and overseas. Not all properties have a valuation assigned to them as some are located within defence establishments and could not be sold separately, whilst others belong to foreign Governments. Annual running costs for individual residences are not held centrally, but the total maintenance and furniture and equipment costs for the last two financial years for all residences is approximately £5,000,000. The annual cost for domestic and household staff for all residences is approximately £5,000,000.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces on 10 March 1994, Official Report, column 401, and 22 March 1994, Official Report, column 174, which list the occasions when a formal direction has been given, five of which related to the award of a contract. The value of individual contracts is commercial-in-confidence information.

TRANSPORT

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the cost of conducting the public inquiry into the Birmingham northern relief road which concluded in 1988;

(2) what stage the 1988 Birmingham northern relief road inquiry reached; and what happened to the report from that inquiry.

Mr. Key: These questions relate to matters which are now the responsibility of the Highways Agency; the chief executive will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Mike O'Brien, dated 7 July 1994:

You asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of conducting the 1988 inquiry into the Birmingham Northern Relief Road, what stage that inquiry reached, and what happened to the Inspector's report.

The 1988 public inquiry costs have not been isolated from other costs incurred on the public sector scheme. The costs could only be identified by reference to individual accounts and as this would incur a disproportionate amount of staff time and cost to research, I regret I am unable to supply you with the information you request.

The public inquiry into the publicly funded scheme closed in September 1988 after the Inspector had heard all the evidence. The Inspector's report of the inquiry was submitted to the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport at the end of March 1989. As you know, it has not been released and the Orders to which it related have been withdrawn.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to publish the report of the public inquiry into the Birmingham north relief road in 1988.

Mr. Key: None. The draft orders which were the subject of the inquiry have been withdrawn and the report would not be relevant to the scheme now proposed.

Environmental Impact Assessments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, columns 632-34, if he will list each scheme for which an environmental impact assessment has been started.

Mr. Key: This question relates to the operational matters of the Highway Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 29 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary question about environmental assessments.

An environmental assessment is carried out for each scheme in the national roads programme and an Environmental Statement is published for those schemes which are likely to have a significant effect on the environment.

The environmental assessment commences at a very early stage in the development of a scheme. The Trunk Road in England 1994 Review identifies the schemes in the national road programme together with their priority.

London Underground (Fires)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 478-80, what changes have been made in the method used to calculate confirmed fire incidents on London Underground in any of the years since 1990; and when these changes were applied.

Mr. Norris: The method of calculation has not been changed since 1990.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, columns 478-80, why no figures are available for confirmed fire incidents on London Underground before 1990.

Mr. Norris: Only figures from 1990 onwards are readily accessible from London Underground's database. Since 1988, Her Majesty's railway inspectorate has published some data on fires in its annual reports on railway safety, which are held in the House Libraries, but this is not in a format directly comparable with that already provided, and does not separately identify escalator fires.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with London Underground concerning fire safety precautions on London Underground rolling stock, how often checks are made on the fire safety of London Underground rolling stock; and if he will publish the content of those discussions.

Mr. Norris: I have regular meetings with London Underground to discuss a variety of issues, including safety. It is not our practice to disclose the content of such discussions, which are confidential to the participants. All London Underground trains are subject to routine maintenance procedures of which safety checks and inspections form an integral part. These include visual inspections of all fire extinguishers, emergency lighting, emergency exits and tests of train safety systems, such as passenger alarms, after every 24 hours of service. Further, more comprehensive, checks are made over longer periods.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, columns 478-80, regarding fires on the London Underground; if he will provide equivalent figures for British Rail, Network SouthEast to 30 March 1994.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not readily available in the form requested. During the eight years of Network SouthEast's existence, accidents were reported, until about mid 1993, under BR regional headings, making direct retrieval of NSE data impracticable.

National figures are available in the HM railway inspectorate's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, columns 478-80, how many of the confirmed fire incidents, for each of the years for which figures are available, involved rolling stock that was in use; whether any passengers were using the rolling stock during any of those incidents; and how many passengers were involved in each confirmed fire incident on London Underground rolling stock.

Mr. Norris: Summary information on the total numbers of rolling stock fires and of passenger injuries on London Underground is published in the annual reports of Her Majesty's railways inspectorate on railway safety, which are held in the House Libraries. However, London Underground has advised that the further information requested is not readily available.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 478-80, how many passengers were injured in fires on London Underground, in all categories; and how many staff were injured on London Underground in each of the years for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: Summary information on passenger and staff injuries is published in the annual reports of Her Majesty's railways inspectorate, which are held in the House Libraries. However, London Underground has advised that a breakdown of the causes of such injuries to the level of detail requested is not readily available.

London Underground (Passenger Satisfaction)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost to London Underground of the passengers charter in each of the last three years; and what discussions he has held with London Underground about them.

Mr. Norris: Production and distribution of the customer charter cost London Underground £114,000 in 1992, £248,000 in 1993, and £130,000 in 1994. I regularly discuss a wide range of issues with London Underground.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish London Underground's customer satisfaction figures for 1993-94, indicating which targets were, and which were not, met; and when he last met London Underground to discuss the figures.

Mr. Norris: London Underground met all its customer satisfaction targets for 1993-4, and the figures are set out in the following table. I regularly discuss a wide range of issues with London Underground.

London Underground Limited: 1993-94 Customer satisfaction statistics

	Targets set for 1993-94	Overall performance for year 1993-94
Cleanliness of trains	81	85
Cleanliness of stations	89	90
Staff helpfulness and availability	86	88
Information on trains	86	93
Information on stations	81	83
Ticket purchasing	92	92

Source: London Underground Limited.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he had with London Underground about the passengers. charter, published on 28 June; what consideration was given to including references to fire or accident safety on the London Underground; and what plans there are to include references to these matters in the charter.

Mr. Norris: I regularly discuss a wide range of issues with London Underground. Its 1994 charter includes a new target for customer satisfaction with safety and security.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with London Underground about lowering ticket prices to encourage tourism and inward investment in the capital.

Mr. Norris: I regularly discuss a wide range of issues with London Underground. However I am not aware of any proposals by London Underground to reduce its ticket prices.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with London Underground regarding the installation of help points at all London Underground stations; and by what year such installations will be complete.

Mr. Norris: I regularly discuss a wide range of issues with London Underground. The programme for installation of help points at underground stations is a matter for it, but I understand that no date has been set for all stations to be so equipped.

Motor Vehicle Pollutants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the statutory controls currently applied to vehicle exhaust emissions;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the level of pollutants resulting from motor vehicle exhaust emissions;

(3) what consultations his Department has undertaken concerning the level of pollutants resulting from motor vehicle exhaust emissions;

(4) what consultations he has undertaken with other European Union states concerning the level of pollutants resulting from motor vehicle emissions;

(5) what plans he has to strengthen the controls currently applied to vehicle exhaust emissions.

Mr. Key: Regulations made under the Road Traffic Act 1988 control the construction and "type approval" of new vehicles and the use of vehicles as regards exhaust emissions. These are largely derived directly from obligations under EC directives. Enforcement of in-use requirements through the MOT and roadworthiness test is effected under vehicle testing regulations made under the 1988 Act. A convenient summary of emission requirements to be met by new vehicles entering into service can be found in the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 1993 (SI No. 1993 No. 2199).

The Department receives regular representations from Members and from the public at large on the effects of vehicle pollutants on the environment and health. The Department is also liaising closely with the Departments of Health and Environment on studies which they have commissioned on these matters.

The Department is actively involved with other member states and the European Commission in developing a range of measures at EC level to further reduce vehicle pollutants. Existing controls on emissions will be tightened in 1996 for all vehicles in use. Also in 1996, new heavy diesel powered vehicles will be required to meet more stringent emission standards, as will new cars and vans in 1997 under EC directives already agreed.

The Department has also taken a leading role in the EU with a number of initiatives aimed at further improvements in vehicle emissions. These include improved in-service measures to reduce diesel smoke and particulate emissions; the adoption of "on-vehicle" emission diagnostic systems to promote rapid repairs and permit effective roadside enforcement and during the annual test; and new test procedures for new vehicle approvals, to be combined with reduced emission limits, to more adequately reflect actual on-road behaviour and to take maximim advantage of emerging vehicle technology.

These measures form an integral part of a series being considered by the European Commission that will be applied to all classes of vehicle by the year 2000. In the light of the DoH and DOE sponsored studies currently underway, the Department will also be encouraging the Commission to propose emission standards in line with the advice given. Nevertheless, as a result of measures already in place, we are already set to see a marked and progressive decline in pollutants from motor vehicles that will extend well into the next decade.

Metro Systems

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with other European Transport Ministers regarding the provision of safe and effective metro systems.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend regularly discusses a wide range of issues with European colleagues.

Coventry Eastern Bypass

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who is responsible for the maintenance of the verges of the Coventry eastern bypass.

Mr. Key: The Highways Agency is responsible for the general maintenance of the verges of the Coventry eastern bypass. This is carried out by Warwickshire county council as maintenance agent for the agency. Litter clearance is the responsibility of Rugby district council and Coventry city council.

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the role of the DSA's service in the national network of driving test centres.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive Dr. S. J. Ford. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from S. J. Ford to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 7 July 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked the Chief Executive to reply to the questions you asked about the role of DSA's service in the national network of driving test centres.

The primary aim of the Driving Standards Agency is to promote road safety by testing drivers and driving instructors fairly and efficiently. In pursuing this aim the Agency is expected to improve the efficiency and effectiveness with which it carries out the statutory functions of the Secretary of State for Transport in connection with driver testing. Driving tests are delivered through a network of driving test centres in Great Britain. The Agency aims to furnish a high quality of service to its customers. Ministers have confirmed that the preservation of the national network of centres is an important part of DSA's service, although a balance has to be struck between the cost of maintaining this network and the fees charged for tests.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory requirements or guidance exists regarding speed and distance limitations for reversing heavy goods vehicles involved in road maintenance or repair work.

Mr. Key: There are no statutory requirements governing the speed or distance of reversing vehicles. However, the highway code says that drivers should reverse with care, and if they cannot see clearly, they should get someone to guide them. This is particularly relevant for large vehicles.

On road maintenance and repair work, as on other contract work, contractors are bound by health and safety legislation to assess the risk to staff and others of the work activities and to produce safe working procedures to minimise any risk. In certain circumstances, limitations may be placed under the contract on the distance which vehicles are allowed to reverse for operational reasons; and it is normal to have a maximum speed limit through the site.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to require heavy goods vehicles to be fitted with reversing alarms, reversing lights or be accompanied by a pedestrian look-out when reversing.

Mr. Key: Reversing alarms may be fitted as an aid to safety on heavy goods vehicles over 2 tonnes gross weight and to other categories of vehicles where the driver's vision might be obscured by the size or shape of the vehicle. Reversing lamps are permitted on all vehicles.

The prime responsibility for ensuring that reversing is carried out safely rests with the driver. The clear advice given in the highway code should be followed: drivers should reverse with care, and if they cannot see clearly, they should get someone to guide them.

Crossrail

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he now envisages the crossrail project being taken forward; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: In view of the fact that the private Bill originally promoted by London Underground and British Rail cannot now be progressed, I have agreed with the promoters that they should instead seek powers for the project under the Transport and Works Act 1992. They will start work on this at once. It remains the Government's policy that the project should be financed as a joint venture, with a substantial private sector contribution.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the figures for carbon dioxide emissions resulting from transport in the United Kingdom in each year since 1990; and what is (a) the estimate and (b) the Government target for 2000.

Mr. Key: The figures for carbon dioxide emissions resulting from transport are:

Year	Emission/ MtC[1]
1990	33
1991	33
1992	33
1993	[2]—

[1] Data from "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics (DoE 1994)
Million tonnes of Carbon emitted by source.
[2] No data as yet available.

"Climate Change—The UK Programme" published in January 1994 sets out how the Government intend to fulfil their Rio commitments and return emissions to their 1990 levels by 2000. Measures were identified in the programme to reduce projected emissions in 2000 by 10MtC to meet this aim. In the transport sector emissions in 2000 were forecast to be 36·5 MtC; annual increases in fuel duty of at least 5 per cent. above inflation are expected to reduce this level by about 2·5 MtC.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Norris: None.

Rail Disputes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation he has had with the chairman of Railtrack and the Health and Safety Commission concerning the instituting of an independent testing procedure for non-signalmen or taking control of panel boxes during periods of industrial dispute.

Mr. Freeman: The duty to ensure the competence of employees to carry out safety critical work rests with the employer, under the Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994.

The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate has carried out checks to ensure that Railtrack, as the employer of signalmen, allows only competent persons to take charge of panel boxes during periods of industrial dispute. The railway inspectorate will continue to carry out checks, as necessary.

Road Surfaces

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made of the comparative costs of road resurfacing as between conventional asphalt surfaces and porous asphalt; what plans he has for a further use of porous asphalt in order to reduce road noise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 20 June 1994]: This question concerning road surfacings is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Howell, dated 7 July 1994

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to write to you in response to your question relating to comparative cost of porous asphalt and its use.

The Highways Agency monitors the cost of porous asphalt on contracts. These studies indicate that, for heavily trafficked trunk roads, the comparative cost of porous asphalt can be between 50 per cent. to 100 per cent. more expensive than conventional asphalt surfaces. This relates to the cost of the material itself. There are additional costs for increased road thickness to compensate for the lower strength of porous asphalt surfacing and for provision of appropriate drainage. While there are also indications that additional winter maintenance will be needed figures are not yet available for this.

The criteria for using porous asphalt were presented by the Minister to the House in the adjournment debate on 15 May 1992 and permit use where conditions are suitable and it is cost effective. They are set down more fully in Press Notice No. 204 issued on the 28 July 1992 a copy of which I attach. Porous asphalt surfacing is being considered for use on schemes within the criteria laid down.

Highways Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of Department of Environment typists used by the Highways Agency; and what is the total cost per year of this.

Mr. Key: As this is a matter for the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Lady direct.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 7 July 1994.

The London offices of the Highways Agency make no use of DOE typists, and neither do the Agency's Regional Offices in Bedford, Birmingham, Bristol and Nottingham. The situation in Manchester, Leeds and Newcastle differs as follows:

Manchester; the Agency meets the cost of 6 DOE typists for which we expect to pay £81,318 in 1994/95.

Leeds; the Agency meets the cost of 3 typists plus half the costs of a typing manager which, for 1994/95 will be £55,731, and £11,773, respectively.

Newcastle; the Agency has use of a DOE typing pool under a service agreement. The cost of this service for 1994/95, based on accepted usage patterns, will be £87,594.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish tables showing the current loan debt of each Scottish local authority in respect of their (a) general services capital programmes, (b) housing accounts and (c) other accounts, including those to which specific grant is paid; if in the case of (a) he will express this in terms of (i) total debt, (ii) annual repayment charges and (iii) annual cost to each eligible council tax payer; if in the case of (b) he will express this in terms of (i) total debt, (ii) annual repayment charges and (iii) annual burden on each tenant of that authority; if in the case of (c) he will specify the name of the account or programme and express the current fiscal situation in terms of (i) total debt, (ii) annual repayment charges and (iii) annual burden on each relevant individual; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The tables give the latest available information separately for general fund services—excluding domestic sewerage—housing revenue account, water and sewerage services. Footnotes to the tables explain the source and derivation of the figures shown. Loan charges on general fund services are taken into account in the distribution of aggregate external finance to individual local authorities and the level of each authority's debt on these services has little or no effect on the level of council tax.

Cancer

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to ensure that nationally agreed protocols on cancer treatment are being followed by all doctors.

Mr. Stewart: It is expected that national audit projects currently being undertaken on cancer treatment will result in the production of additional clinical guidelines. These will be disseminated to clinicians to be translated into local protocols. Compliance with guidelines is promoted in postgraduate education and is monitored through clinical audit, through the purchaser/provider contracting process and through national outcome studies.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many specialist cancer units exist in Scotland; and what plans there are to increase the number.

Mr. Stewart: There are five specialist cancer centres in Scotland at present and there are no plans to increase this number.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cancer specialists of all kinds there are in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: At 30 September 1993 there were 11 consultants in medical oncology and 31 in radiotherapy working in the national health service in Scotland. The diagnosis of cancer and the treatment of cancer patients are also provided by consultants in palliative medicine and in many other medical and surgical specialties.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many consultants in medical oncology there are in Scotland; and how many are paid for by the national health service.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 July 1994]: There were 11 consultants in medical oncology in Scotland at 30 September 1993, the latest date for which information is available centrally, of whom seven are in clinical academic posts. Four of the 11 have their salaries paid by the national health service.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the cancer survival rate figures collected by the Scottish cancer intelligence unit.

Mr. Stewart: In April 1993 the Scottish Office published a volume on cancer survival rates in Scotland. This publicatioin examined trends in cancer survival over time in Scotland for a range of cancer sites. The Scottish cancer intelligence unit is currently undertaking a further study into cancer survival in Scotland. Once this study is complete the results will be publicly available.

In addition, the European Organisation for Research and Treatment of Cancer has set up a working group to examine regional variations in cancer survival within Europe. Scotland has a strong representation on this group and a preliminary report is expected by the summer of 1995.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cancer operations were carried out in Scotland last year by (a) the 10 per cent. of surgeons who performed the highest number of such operations and (b) the 10 per cent. of surgeons who carried out the lowest number.

Mr. Stewart: In Scotland in 1993, 24,084 principal operations were carried out by the 10 per cent. of consultants performing the highest number of principal operations on patients with a preliminary diagnosis of malignant neoplasm. This accounts for 20 per cent. of the total surgical workload of these particular consultants.

In the same year 107 principal operations were carried out by the 10 per cent. of consultants performing the lowest number of principal operations on patients with a primary diagnosis of malignant neoplasm.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many surgeons in Scotland carried out cancer operations last year.

Mr. Stewart: In 1993, 1,068 consultants performed principal operations on patients with a primary diagnosis of malignant neoplasm in NHS hospitals in Scotland.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cancer operations were carried out in Scotland last year.

Mr. Stewart: In 1993 there were 45,661 principal operations performed in NHS hospitals in Scotland for patients with a primary diagnosis of malignant neoplasm.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of cancer patients last year was referred initially to a consultant oncologist.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the availability of chemotherapy for cancer patients.

Mr. Stewart: The clinical resource and audit group and the Scottish health management efficiency group set up a joint working group to examine the management of non-surgical cancer services in Scotland. The working group reported in April 1992 and its recommendations were commended to health boards. I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

The Scottish Cancer Co-ordinating and Advisory Committee which was established as a result of the working group's report is setting up focus groups on the commonest cancers with the intention of providing advice on good practice including chemotherapy.

In addition the report "Quality Control in Cancer Chemotherapy" produced jointly by the Royal College of Physicians and the Royal College of Radiologists was circulated to all clinical oncologists, all medical oncologists and to the chief executives of NHS trusts.

Birds (Protection)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider extending the acceptance of the evidence of one witness in criminal courts granted by section 36 of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 to offences under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 beyond those involving egg collection; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Corroboration of evidence is an important safeguard in our system of justice and there are no plans to consider extending the acceptance of the evidence of one witness in criminal courts to other offences under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Ministry of Defence Clothing Organisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to attract the Ministry of Defence Clothing Organisation to Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Office officials are in regular contact with the Ministry of Defence on a wide range of issues.

Prison Suicide

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) suicides and (b) attempted suicides have taken place in custody, including police stations, in Scotland in each of the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of suicides in custody over the past 10 years is set out in the table. There are difficulties with the definition of attempted suicide and in any case such data are not collected centrally.

Timber

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action the Government are taking to promote timber from sustainably managed forests.

Sir Hector Monro: In January 1994 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland launched the United Kingdom sustainable forestry programme, a comprehensive statement of the Government's policies for the sustainable management of the United Kingdom's forests and for helping other countries in the sustainable management of theirs.

The Government have every confidence in the standards that are applied to the production of timber from British forests. Through its approval of plans of operations, the Forestry Commission is able to ensure that timber is grown and harvested in accordance with guidelines that are founded on the principle of sustainable forestry; The Commission, with the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, has published today a booklet describing the means we use to ensure that the felling and regeneration of woodland and the creation of new woodland is done with proper regard to the environment. The booklet will serve to assure buyers of products made from British timber that they can do so in the knowledge that our forests are managed responsibily. I have arranged for copies of the booklet to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Internationally, the Government will participate fully in efforts to promote sustainable forest management as we indicated in the United Kingdom sustainable forestry programme. Later this month the Government are hosting jointly with India an international workshop to help prepare for the 1995 meeting of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development at which forestry will be a key theme. The main objective of the workshop is to develop possible formats for national reporting to the CSD on forestry issues to allow progress to be assessed on the implementation of the forest principles adopted at the UN conference on environment and development—UNCED—and the forestry aspects of agenda 21 and other UNCED agreements.

The Government are also taking forward the action points that were agreed last year at the European Forestry Ministers conference in Helsinki at which I represented the United Kingdom. One of the main aims of the follow-up is to develop standards for sustainable forestry which might form the basis for promoting international agreement.

Seal Shooting

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a specific guideline has been given in the guidelines issued by his Department to chief constables relating to the issuing of firearms certificates with regard to permission to shoot seals in the vicinity of creels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1994]: No specific guideline relating to the shooting of seals has been given to chief constables in guidance provided on the issuing of firearm certificates. The issuing of firearm certificates and any restrictive conditions imposed on them are operational matters for each chief constable.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1994]: The title pages of all news releases from the Scottish Office are of recycled paper. Percentages of recycled paper depend on the length of releases, which vary from day to day.

No written answers to parliamentary questions are printed on recycled paper. The paper used, however, is from renewable timber produced on a full sustained basis and is bleached without the use of chlorine gas.

The ministerial and official headed paper used by my Department is made from recycled paper.

Health Visitors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the proportion of health visitors to children in each health board area in September 1992.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 July 1994]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Health Visitors[1][2] per 1000 children aged under 5: (Whole time equivalent as at 30 September 1992[3])

[2] Grades G to I. These staff are assumed to be qualified health visitors.
[3] Population figures used in the above calculations are based on estimates for 30 June 1992.

Research and Technology Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number and value of Government and EC grants for research and technology offered to companies in Fife and Scotland for each year since 1991; and what was the actual take-up of grants by companies in (a) Fife and (b) Scotland in each of these years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 June 1994]: The innovation element of the regional enterprise grants scheme is the only company-related research and technology assistance for which my right hon. Friend has responsibility. The information relating to this scheme is as follows:

Financial year	Number of offers made	Value £ thousands	Number of offers accepted	Actual expenditure incurred £ thousands
Scotland
1991-92	69	1,578	51	1,210

1992-93	9	223	7	191
1993-94	9	223	8	121

The European Commission and other Government Departments such as the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Defence are also actively involved in assisting projects which fall within their particular spheres of responsibility.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cross-border Co-operation

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he proposes to publish the reports on cross-border co-operation on public transport and other matters referred to in his statement of 17 June.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The reports to which the hon. Gentleman refers were prepared to inform discussion at the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference held on 17 June rather than for publication. Details of discussions between Governments are confidential and I shall not be publishing the reports.

Ballynahone Bog

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will designate Ballynahone bog as an area of special scientific interest.

Mr. Tim Smith: Planning permission for the extraction of peat Ballynahone bog was granted in 1988 on the recommendation of the Planning Appeals Commission following a local public inquiry.

The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is reviewing the conservation status of certain habitats which come within the ambit of the EC directive on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora. These include lowland raised bogs of which Ballynahone bog is an example.

Hualon Corporation (Textiles)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he now has to review the decision to provide inward investment aid to encourage the Hualon Corporation to develop new textile facilities in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Hualon project has been the subject of a detailed appraisal and scrutiny process not only by Her Majesty's Government but by the European Commission. I have no plans to review our decision to offer assistance in respect of the project.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received concerning the proposals to provide inward investment aid to encourage the Hualon Corporation to develop new textile facilities in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: I and my ministerial colleagues have received four recent representations concerning the Hualon project, including two from the textile industry.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations his Department had with trade associations and individual companies in the textile and clothing sector prior to the decision to provide inward investment aid to encourage the Hualon Corporation to develop new textile facilities in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Department responsible did not consult with either any individual company or trade association before reaching its decision. It did, however, seek the advice of leading independent internationally recognised consultants in the textile and clothing sector.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he gave to the implications for existing textile producers prior to taking the decision to provide inward investment aid to encourage the Hualon Corporation to develop new textile facilities in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: In deciding to offer selective financial assistance to this, or any other project, the Industrial Development Board is required to consider potential job displacement not only in Northern Ireland but in Great Britain. In this case the conclusion was that Hualon's products would compete principally with imported fabrics and therefore not cause any significant job displacement. This was also the conclusion of the European Commission which examined the project from a European perspective.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he gave to the recent conviction in Taiwan of senior officials of the company prior to deciding to provide inward investment aid to encourage the Hualon Corporation to develop new textile facilities in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: I have been fully aware for some time of the allegations against certain shareholders in Hualon Corporation in Taiwan but concluded that the allegations against certain individuals, which are currently unproven should not preclude IDB from offering assistance to a publicly quoted corporation with a long and successful commercial track record.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bangladesh

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Bangladesh about the sentencing of a 13-year-old Brahmbanbaria girl for illicit sex; and what further steps he will take to persuade the Bangladesh Government that the sentence should not be carried out.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are aware of this case. We understand that the police are taking measures to prevent the sentence being carried out.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the major human rights issues that he takes up with the Government of Bangladesh.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We and our European partners regularly discuss with the Bangladesh authorities a wide range of human rights issues, including the freedom of expression and the treatment of minorities.

China

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for United Kingdom policy of the granting of most favoured nation status to China.

Mr. Hurd: The British and Hong Kong Governments supported the renewal by the United States of most favoured nation status for China. Non-renewal could have severely damaged Hong Kong's economy. The best way to advance rights in China is through a policy of economic engagement, not isolation.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he last raised with the Chinese Government the continuing transfer of Chinese people into Tibet;

(2) what information he has received on human rights in Tibetan prison camps;

(3) what recent representations he has made to the Chinese Government to restore the rights and freedoms of Tibetans in Tibet.

Mr. Hurd: We continue to receive reports from non-governmental organisations and other sources about human rights abuses in Tibet and threats to Tibetan identity, including population transfer. We and our European Union partners have repeatedly expressed our concern to the Chinese authorities, including at this year's session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. In the Government's response of 1 July to the Foreign Affairs Committee's report on relations with China we again publicly expressed our concern on all these matters.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the Chinese Government's adherence to the convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment;

(2) what information he has in respect of reports of torture in detention centres and prisons in China.

Mr. Hurd: There continue to be disturbing reports of torture and other abuses in Chinese detention centres and prisons. As is made clear in the Government's response to the report of the Foreign Affairs Committee on relations with China, we urge the Chinese Government to implement fully their obligations under the convention against torture and the other conventions to which China is signatory.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government have taken to encourage the Chinese Government to review its policy on freedom of religion.

Mr. Hurd: We and our European Union partners have repeatedly raised this and other human rights issues. The European Union, for example, expressed its concern in the United Nations Commission on Human Rights about the regulations concerning religious practice which had been promulgated in January.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relationship with China.

Mr. Hurd: We wish to develop a wide-ranging relationship with China. The future of Hong Kong is a central issue; as permanent members of the UN Security Council, we are in close touch on international issues; we conduct a dialogue on human rights; and we week actively to increase Britain's economic links with the fast-growing Chinese market.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to ensure that any product exported from China does not come from prison camp labour.

Mr. Hurd: The import of prison made goods is banned by the 1897 Foreign Prison Made Goods Act (amended 1988). HM Customs and Excise is responsible for enforcing the Act's provisions, in response to evidence supplied by others.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge the Chinese Government to undertake an urgent review of the death penalty.

Mr. Hurd: This issue was stressed in the report by Lord Howe's delegation which was published last year. The European Union has urged the Chinese authorities to restrict the use and the arbitrary application of the death penalty.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received on the number of prisoners held in forced labour camps in China.

Mr. Hurd: We have no precise information on the number of prisoners held in so-called "re-education through labour" camps. Estimates range from 1 to 10 million.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on nuclear weapon testing carried out in China.

Mr. Hurd: We have made clear that we regret the test carried out by China at its Lop Nor site on 10 June. The Chinese Government have however repeatedly stated their commitment to the comprehensive test ban treaty negotiations in Geneva. We welcome their contribution to these negotiations.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees meeting in Geneva on 22 June at which Sri Lankan repatriation programmes were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The meeting focused on the bilateral agreement signed in January between Switzerland and Sri Lanka on the repatriation of rejected asylum seekers. The main purpose was to enable non-governmental organisations to discuss how they might best monitor the cases of those returning to Sri Lanka under the agreement.

Palestine

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the setting up of the Palestinian administration in the former occupied territories; and what consequent communications he has made to the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome the appointment of members of the Palestinian authority, and the good start made by the Palestinian police. We have told Arafat that we will continue to provide practical support to the new Administration.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further assistance Her Majesty's Government are providing to the new Palestinian Administration in Gaza and Jericho.

Mr. Hurd: In response to the urgent needs of the Palestinian authority, Her Majesty's Government have decided to provide an extra £5 million of bilateral assistance this year. some £3 million will be for immediate running costs, and £2 million for increased technical cooperation. Part of these funds will be for the Palestinian police. This will help meet the urgent requirements in the key area of maintaining law and order.

The success of the new Palestinian Administration in Gaza and Jericho is critical for the future of the peace process. Provision of start-up costs is an immediate need.

Her Majesty's Government have previously announced their intention to contribute £70 million of assistance to the Palestinians and the peace process during 1994-95 and 1996-97, through bilateral and multilateral channels. Many programmes are already underway. Their focus is support for the structures of Palestinian Administration: the police, for whom we are already providing training and equipment; the Palestinian Monetary Authority; legal structures and the judiciary; water management and health care. We are also providing assistance for the planned Palestinian elections.

Antarctic Treaty

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what procedure for consultation with non-governmental organisations he intends to follow with respect to the preparations for United Kingdom participation in the inter-sessional Antarctic treaty consultative meeting on liability scheduled to take place in The Hague in October.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The German and Dutch Governments have very recently invited us to attend a group of experts meeting on liability from 7 to 9 November.

We have not yet had an opportunity to consider what consultations may be appropriate before that meeting.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to promote the guidelines for visitors and expedition organisers to the Antarctic, agreed at the 18 Antarctic treaty consultative meeting held in Kyoto, Japan, in April.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The guidelines for visitors and expedition organisers have been published as part of Command Paper 2580 and were sent to the Association of British Travel Agents in May.

We shall discuss with others, including the International Association of Antarctic Tour Operators, how best to promote these guidelines more widely.

Committee of the Regions

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the mechanism by which regional representatives are nominated to the European Committee of the Regions; and if he will also publish the names of representatives currently nominated by United Kingdom region and the term of office they have yet to serve.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Each member state nominates the number of members allocated to it in article 198a of the treaty, and an equal number of alternate members. Members and alternate members are appointed for four years by the Council, acting unanimously on these nominations. The term of office for United Kingdom members and alternate members runs until 25 January 1998. United Kingdom members and alternate members are as follows:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Jack: From records currently available, I am not aware of any such instances. It is the Department's policy to let contracts on the basis of value for money.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Lord President of the Council what facilities the Cabinet Office provides for the parking of bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him yesterday at columns 267-68.

HEALTH

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list her Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Sackville: The Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy and the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department which have a statutory basis.

Mr. Sackville: The following is the information:

Administration of Radioactive Substances Advisory Committee;
British Pharmacopoeia Commission;
Clinical Standards Advisory Group;
Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials;
Committee on the Safety of Medicines;
Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation;
Medicines Commission;
Standing Dental Advisory Committee;
Standing Medical Advisory Committee;
Standing Nursing and Midwifery Advisory Committee;
Standing Pharmaceutical Advisory Committee;
Unrelated Live Transplant Regulatory Authority.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Sackville: The Government are required to consult the Medicines Commission prior to proposals for legislation. They are not required to publish their response to advice from any advisory bodies.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament.

Mr. Sackville: The British Pharmacopoeia Commission, the Medicines Commission and the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the advisory bodies she has set up in her Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Sackville: The Advisory Committee on the Registration of Homeopathic Products and the Effectiveness Review of Policy on Services for Drug Misusers.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list her Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Sackville: The British Pharmacopoeia Commission, the Committee on the Safety of Medicines, the Joint Planning Advisory Committee, the National Health Service Advisory Service and the Medicines Commission.

NHS Management

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist to publish the national management letters on the national health service, referred to in paragraph 36 of "Accounting for Independent Audit", published jointly by her and other Departments.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Obstetric Cholestasis

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to fund research into the cause, detection and treatment of obstetric cholestasis and its epidemiology;

(2) what is the current incidence of obstetric cholestasis;

(3) if she has sought evidence from abroad as to any link between still births and obstetric cholestasis;

(4) what the Government are doing to ensure that health professionals know about obstetric cholestasis.

Mr. Sackville: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The council is always willing to consider for support soundly based new scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

As to the incidence of obstetric cholestasis, the medical literature suggests that one pregnancy in 1,000 is affected by the condition. Some of the material on this subject has come from abroad, in particular the United States.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 22 June at column 198 for information for health professionals.

Drug Addiction

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the change in the number of registered child drug addicts; and what plans she has to tackle the problem.

Mr. Bowis: Year on year changes in the number of registered drug addicts, and of registered child drug addicts in particular, should be interpreted carefully because, while changes in the figures may indicate that there are more young addicts, they may also indicate more coming forward for treatment or a higher rate of compliance with reporting arrangements.

The Government will continue to develop prevention and publicity campaigns alerting parents and young people to the dangers of drug misuse. Guidance issued by the Department of Health in April, EL(94)11 and subsequent letter, encouraged health authorities to review the needs of drug misusers locally and ensure that the range and choice of treatment services available included provision, where appropriate, for young people. Copies of the guidance and letter are available in the Library.

Beta-agonists

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has conducted into the health effects of prolonged low-level consumption of (a) clenbuterol and (b) other beta-agonists.

Mr. Sackville: Clenbuterol is not a licensed medicinal product in the United Kingdom and the Department has not conducted any research specifically into the health effects of its prolonged low level consumption. A large number of beta-agonists are licensed for the treatment of asthma on the basis of evidence of quality, efficacy and safety assessed by the licensing authority. A working party of the Committee of Safety of Medicines was set up in May 1991 to review information on the safety of beta-agonists in the treatment of patients with asthma. Its findings were published in the bulletin "Current Problems no. 33" in February 1992, a copy of which is available in the Library. This concluded that beta-agonists are of value in the relief of symptoms of asthma and that the overall benefits of treatment with beta-agonists outweigh the risk of any side effects.

Children

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the progress by January 1994 towards implementation of the United Nations convention on the rights of children; and if she will give it a star rating.

Mr. Bowis: This information is set out in the United Kingdom's first report to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child, which was published in March. Copies are available in the Library.

Children's Beds, East London

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 534, if she will list the NHS trusts and health authorities responsible for the provision of children's wards and beds in east London; and what arrangements are made for an overall regional perspective beyond the boundary of each unit.

Dr. Mawhinney: Two health authorities, East London and the City and Redbridge and Waltham Forest, are responsible for arranging services to meet the health needs of people in East London. In-patient services for children are provided at the Royal Hospitals national health service trust, Newham Healthcare NHS trust and Forest Healthcare NHS trust in addition to the Queen Elizabeth hospital for children, Hackney.

North Thames regional health authority is responsible for holding all its health authorities to account for the provision of appropriate services for their populations.

Assessment (Consultants and GPs)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress her Department is making on assessment of (a) consultants and (b) general practitioners; and what are the reasons for the differences between assessment of these two groups.

Dr. Mawhinney: Consultants and general practitioners are not at present subject to assessment. Assessment needs to be linked to a formal scheme of continuing medical education. These are issues explored in a consultation paper launched at a conference on 13 June chaired by the Government's Chief Medical Officer. The consultation period ends on 30 September. Copies of the document will be placed in the Library.

Ex-service men

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what priority is given to ex-service men and women within the national health service; and what steps her Department takes to ensure that this is widely known throughout the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: Ex-service men and women do not normally have priority within the national health service. However, if they are war pensioners they are entitled to receive priority examination and treatment for the condition or conditions for which they receive a pension or received a gratuity. Health service guidelines (94)28 dated 16 May, which is standing guidance, reminded the national health service about this entitlement. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Dental Services

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the people living in the family health service authority covering Hornsey and Wood Green are currently registered as national health service dental patients; and what is the figure for Britain as a whole.

Dr. Mawhinney: As patients are free to register with a dentist outside the family health services authority area where they live the information requested is not available. At 30 April 1994 the proportion of the population registered with a dentist in Great Britain was 57·8 per cent.

Health Care For People With Disabilities

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role will be played by her Department in the forthcoming consultation on disability; and if she will publish a consultation paper on countering unfair discrimination in health provision and the health service.

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People, will be co-ordinating action on this front and will involve other departments as necessary.

The national health service provides services for everybody on the basis of their clinical need. A consultation paper on this will not therefore be necessary.

NHS Supplies Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 April, Official Report, column 152, on the NHS Supplies Authority, what percentage savings in Supplies Authority purchasing costs was assessed by its consultants as achievable as at April 1994 for the divisions for whom benchmarking comparisons were carried out; whether such savings have been achieved across all divisions over each of the last six months; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested. For 1993-94 the National Health Service Supplies Authority was targeted to achieve purchasing cost savings of £57 million, or four per cent. of the value of all contracts negotiated in the year. The actual saving achieved was £71·65 million, broken down as follows:

Division/Unit	Savings (£ million)
National Purchasing Unit	36·55
Central	6·31
North East	6·50
North Thames Anglia	4·27
North West	6·45
South and West	5·96
South East	5·60

GP Fundholders

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice she offers fund-holding general practitioners on how to reduce the cost of hospital treatment required by their patients;

(2) to what extent she expects a fund-holding general practitioner to follow his patient's wishes with regard to the choice of hospital to which they are sent for treatment;

(3) what advice she has given to fund-holding general practitioner's with regard to the number of hospitals they hold contracts with.

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioner fundholders are able to purchase services on behalf of their patients and, in consultation with them, from whichever hospital offers the best quality care and value for money.

World Health Organisation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role she plays in exercising oversight of the operations of the World Health Organisation.

Dr. Mawhinney: Each year a Minister from the Department attends the world health assembly, the annual meeting of the World Health Organisation, at which the operations of the organisation are discussed. We also receive reports from the Chief Medical Officer on the meetings of the executive board of the World Health Organisation and the European Regional Committee meeting, and on all other major developments.

Negligence Claims

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical negligence claims have been made against NHS hospitals and NHS trust hospitals in each of the last eight years; what was the cost of those claims for each year, including (a) compensation legal costs and (b) fees paid to doctors for medical opinions; and what was the average time taken from commencement of complaint to settlement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 14 March at columns 537-38 and on 10 May at columns 84-85.

Dementia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce a national monitoring system of those suffering from dementia.

Mr. Bowis: It if for each health authority to assess and monitor the health needs of their population including people suffering from dementia and, together with local authorities, to provide a range of appropriate services.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she intends to take to improve support for those suffering from dementia who live alone.

Mr. Bowis: Health authorities and local authorities are required to assess the health and social care needs of their population and to make appropriate arrangements to meet those needs. Such assessments will identify additional care and support services needed by those living alone.

Infertility

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to collect information from district health authorities regarding their policies on the purchase of in vitro fertilisation treatment, and the number of district health authorities who currently provide IVF treatment.

Mr. Sackville: There are no plans to collect information centrally on the purchase or provision by district health authorities of in vitro fertilisation treatment.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on the limiting by health authorities of IVF treatment to women of 34 years and under.

Mr. Sackville: Decisions about the availability of IVF treatment are for individual health authorities. Advice is available to health authorities and clinicians in two publications drawn to the attention of the National Health Service in 1992:

(a) The Effective Health Care Bulletin on management of subfertility, published for the NHS Management Executive by a consortium of Leeds and York universities and the research unit of the Royal College of Physicians.

(b) The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists publication "Infertility—Guidelines For Practice".

Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of the effects on health experienced by couples unable to have children of their own;

(2) what analysis has been made of the implications of childlessness upon marriage stability in infertile couples;

(3) what information she has available on the effect on mental health in couples who are unable to have children of their own.

Mr. Sackville: There have been studies on the effects of childlessness in couples carried out by independent researchers, some of which are referred to in the Effective Health Care bulletin series entitled "The Management of Subfertility". The position is summarised as follows:

"There is some evidence that subfertility causes considerable emotional stress and distress in some couples, which effects many areas of their life. Subfertility may result in social handicap preventing fulfilment of social roles and realisation of personal and societal expectations for parenthood."

The bulletin was made available to the national health service in 1992. Copies are available in the Library.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what occasions in the last 10 years she or a Minister in her Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Sackville: There have been no such occasions.

NHS Trust Membership

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each national health service trust in the former Yorkshire region, those chairmen and non-executive directors who live outside the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 5 July 1994]: A total of 133 of the 150—89 per cent.—chairmen and non-executive directors appointed to a national health service trust within the former Yorkshire region live within the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated. The names of those who live outside the relevant district health authority boundaries are listed.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 5 July 1994]: Ninety of the 168 chairmen and non-executive directors appointed to a national health service trust within the former North East Thames region live within the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated. The names of those who live outside the relevant district health authority boundaries are listed.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 11 July 1994

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Bicycle Routes

36. Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what progress he has made in financing bicycle routes through Church Commissioners' land.

Mr. Alison: The Commissioners are always prepared to consider sympathetically proposals for cycle routes across their land, provided these create no conflict of interest with their duties to their primary beneficiaries, the serving and retired clergy. No such proposal has been received recently.

Rents

37. Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what changes have occurred in rents received in the past five years for church lands.

Mr. Alison: Gross agricultural rents per acre increased from £57·75 in 1989 to £62·62 in 1993, a rise of 8·43 per cent. against a retail prices index increase of 27·84 per cent. Over this period, the Commissioners' agricultural portfolio was reduced by 14,924 acres, producing net sales proceeds of £76·6 million.

PRIME MINISTER

European Commission

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 30 June to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) Official Report, columns 660-61, regarding the presidency of the European Commission, if he will now set out the criteria he will apply to candidates for the appointment.

The Prime Minister: I shall consider candidates on their merits. I will need to be satisfied that the next President will run an efficient and accountable Commission, and act in the interests of the European Union as a whole.

Meetings with Members

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Prime Minister how many hon. Members and right hon. Members he has met at official meetings on constituency matters at No. 10 Downing street in 1993-94; what were their political parties; and in which regions were their constituencies.

The Prime Minister: I regularly have meetings with right hon. and hon. Members, at both No. 10 and the House of Commons, to deal with specific and general matters which relate to their constituencies and interests.

Lowe Bell Communications

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his reply of 26 April to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice), Official Report, column 47, how much Sir Tim Bell has claimed in expenses in connection with the D-day public relations contract awarded to Lowe Bell Communications.

The Prime Minister: To date, Lowe Bell has claimed a total of £11,346, net of VAT, for administrative costs and expenses. This is within the agreed upper limit of £12,500, net of VAT.

Government Information

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of the Government on the supply of information to the media on economic performance and distribution of earnings, where the information can be obtained directly or indirectly from the Central Office of Information data bank.

The Prime Minister: This is a matter for individual Government Departments.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will make it his policy that all Departments should provide substantive replies to hon. Members' questions rather than referring them to the Library.

The Prime Minister: No.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to Childcare Solutions and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 July 1994]: For these purposes my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I therefore refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 7 July 1994, Official Report, columns 323-24.

Ecological Sustainability

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking to ensure that there is a full discussion of ecological sustainability at the Group of Seven summit in July.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 July 1994]: At my initiative the members of the Group of Seven industrialised countries have already adopted an action plan to give practical effect to the agreements reached at Rio. At the Naples Group of Seven summit the United Kingdom will continue to stress the importance of the environment as a priority for international co-operation.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasions in the last 10 years he has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 July 1994]: There have been no such occasions in respect of myself or my predecessor.

Ex-service Personnel

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he will be taking to give effect to the decision taken by the House on 1 July on the welfare of ex-service people.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what action he is taking to implement the resolution on welfare of ex-service people approved by the House on 1 July.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 July 1994]: We already have in place substantial administrative arrangements to meet the special needs of ex-service personnel, which involve close liaison between the relevant Departments; we believe these arrangements most effectively serve the welfare needs of the ex-service community. The Government attach great importance to achieving high quality services, and will continue to keep areas of concern to veterans under review.

TREASURY

Asset Disposal

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in realising unwanted assets held by Government Departments.

Mr. Portillo: The disposal of unwanted assets is the responsibility of individual Departments. Information is not collected centrally.

Public Utility Regulators

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules govern the use by public utility regulators of public money to hire Government relations consultants.

Mr. Portillo: The rules governing the use of public relations consultants are contained in the Cabinet Office document "Guidance on Government Publicity and Advertising", which is available in the Library of the House. General principles on the purchase of consultancy services are set out in section 31 of "Government Accounting".

EU Agricultural Spending

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 931, what procedures are available to the European Union for paying sums of agricultural spending in 1995 exceeding the limits agreed at Edinburgh.

Sir John Cope: The agricultural guideline agreed at Edinburgh can be amended or breached only by the unanimous agreement of the Council of Ministers. The United Kingdom has made it clear that it can foresee no circumstances under which it would agree to this. The Commission will therefore be obliged to manage expenditure within the guideline.

Manufactured Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current share of consumer goods in imported finished manufactures; and by how much the unit value has increased since August 1992 to the latest available date.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested for the first part of the question is available on the Central Statistical Office database, which can be accessed through the Library of the House of Commons. The unit value for consumer goods increased by 13·3 per cent. between August 1992 and April 1994, the latest date for which data are available. The unit value for finished manufactures increased by 15·0 per cent. over the same period.

Rugby Players

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are made for the collection of employers' contributions by rugby union clubs who are paying or financially rewarding players.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue's arrangements for the collection of employers' national insurance contributions in respect of the remuneration of rugby players are the same as those for any other taxpayer.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 779, what arrangements are now made for the payment of income tax and national insurance by rugby union players.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue's arrangements for the payment of income tax and national insurance contributions by rugby union players operate in the same way as for any other taxpayer.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive a report from the Inland Revenue special investigation branch regarding the conclusion of its inquiry into the payment of income tax and national insurance by rugby union players; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The conduct of any inquiry by the Inland Revenue into payment of income tax and national insurance is an internal matter of the Department and I would not expect to receive a report. I do not propose to make a statement.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the most recent figures on the amount of mortgage tax relief allowed for home owners in Scotland.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is given in my reply to the hon. Member on 20 June 1994, Official Report, column 2.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what are the reasons for supporting and participating in recent central bank intervention to support the United States dollar; and what effect this has had on interest rates;

(2) to what extent the United Kingdom Exchequer is bearing the exchange rate risk of Bank of England intervention to stop the foreign exchange value of the United States dollar from falling;

(3) what consideration Her Majesty's Government give to the balance of payments in deciding whether to intervene in the foreign exchange market to support the United States dollar;

(4) whether he will publish the evidence he has on whether (a) the yen is overvalued and (b) the United States dollar is undervalued;

(5) what United Kingdom economic interest is served by the Bank of England's recent participation in central bank intervention to support the United States dollar at the current rate of exchange.

Mr. Nelson: The Bank of England participated in concerted intervention in support of the dollar on 4 May and 24 June 1994, on behalf of the United Kingdom Government. The concerted intervention reflected a concern shared with other Governments about recent developments in international financial markets. The Government consider greater exchange rate and capital market stability to be in the United Kingdom's interests. There are a large number of factors which may have influenced recent dollar and yen exchange rates. The intervention was undertaken to steady market conditions.

Developing Countries' Debt

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current total of outstanding debt owed to the United Kingdom by developing countries.

Mr. Nelson: The total outstanding debt owed to ECGD and the ODA by developing countries, excluding eastern Europe, is £6·47 billion.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value to the United Kingdom of debt interest payments from developing countries in 1993-94 from (a) payments to the Export Credits Guarantee Department, (b) payments to the Overseas Development Administration, (c) payments to the Commonwealth Development Corporation and (d) in total.

Mr. Nelson: Debt interest payments from developing countries in 1993-94 were (a) £228 million, excluding eastern Europe, to ECGD (b) £4·2 million to ODA, (c) £81·9 million to the CDC, (d) totalling £314·1 million.

Disability (Consultation)

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what involvement his Department will have in the Government's forthcoming consultation and consideration of issues relating to disability and discrimination and possible legislation.

Mr. Portillo My right hon. Friend the Minister for Disabled People will be co-ordinating action and will involve other Departments as necessary.

Prices Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Government policy in respect of the price of (a) goods and (b) services.

Mr. Nelson: The Government aim to keep underlying inflation, as measured by the RPI excluding interest payments, in the range 1 to 4 per cent. and to bring it down to the lower half of this range by the end of the present Parliament.

Economic Growth

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average annual rate of economic growth from 1964 to 1973 and from 1979 to the latest possible date, together with the reasons for any difference.

Mr. Nelson: Rates of economic growth can be calculated from the estimates for gross domestic product published in Economic Trends, which is available in the Members' Library. There are many influences on the rate of economic growth.

Full Employment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's definition of full employment; and what part a return to full employment plays in formulating its fiscal, monetary and exchange rate policies.

Mr. Nelson: The Government's economic policy aims to create the right conditions for a high and sustainable level of employment. This requires permanently low inflation, sound public finances and a continuing programme of reform designed to improve the efficiency of markets and strengthen the long-term supply performance of the economy.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures for trade with EC countries on the same basis as tables 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the press notices on the monthly balance of trade with countries outside the EC.

Mr. Nelson: The information is available from the CSO database which may be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Upper Limb Disorders

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons are taking actions for stress-related upper limb disorders against the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise.

Mr. Dorrell: There are at present 106 cases relating to repetitive strain injuries and/or upper limb disorders being pursued by current and former employees of the Inland Revenue, and 15 by Customs and Excise.

EU Directives

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in implementing the investment services directive and the capital adequacy directive.

Mr. Nelson: A consultation document on the implementation of the investment services directive and the capital adequacy directive is being issued today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Lotteries

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he intends to make to the tax treatment of lotteries run by charities.

Sir John Cope: In the past the Inland Revenue has accepted that where a subsidiary company operates a lottery on behalf of a charity, the income from the lottery belonged to the subsidiary company for tax purposes. The company could relieve the income from tax by passing it to the charity under a deed of covenant.

The Inland Revenue has received legal advice that this treatment is incorrect where the lottery is a society lottery organised under section 5 of the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976. Where a subsidiary company promotes a society lottery on behalf of the charity, but the charity itself is registered as the society under the Act, the view is that the income from the lottery belongs to the charity, not the subsidary company, and the charity is therefore taxable on the income.

In order to prevent charities from being disadvantaged by this change of view of the law the Government have decided to introduce legislation in the next Finance Bill to exempt charities from tax on income from society lotteries provided the income is applied solely to the purposes of the charity.

Income from small lotteries under section 3 of the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 will also be exempted.

Subject to approval by Parliament the exemption will apply, for income tax, for tax years after 1994-95 and, for companies, for accounting periods beginning after 31 March 1994. In anticipation of the proposed legislation the Inland Revenue will give charities relief from tax on a concessional basis for lottery income arising in earlier periods where the tax liability has not yet been settled.

Income Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the reduction in tax payable in 1995-96 resulting from full indexation of relief on the married couple's allowance for those aged over 65 years to pensioner couples paying tax at (a) the lower rate, (b) the basic rate and (c) the higher rate if they are (i) 65 to 74 years and (ii) 75 years and over taking account of the proposals announced in his Budget of November 1993.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 17 June 1994]: In 1995-96 the age-related married coupies allowances will be increased by £330, as announced in the November 1993 Budget. This is significantly higher than the increase which would result from indexation of the allowances.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Institute of Chartered Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last discussed the effectiveness of the disciplinary procedures of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales with the institute.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My officials meet regularly with the Institute to discuss a wide range of matters, including particular aspects of its disciplinary procedures. The last such meeting was on 26 May.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the purpose of his visit to Saudi Arabia on 28 June; whom he met; what trading matters he discussed; and with what outcome.

Mr. Heseltine: The purpose of my visit to Saudi Arabia on 28 June was in response to a Saudi request for advice on future privatisations. I was accompanied by a delegation of British business men expert in privatisation. Meetings were held with the Saudi Ministers of Commerce, Finance, Industry and Electricity, Defence and Post and Telecommunications. The opportunity was also taken to further certain British bids for contracts; the Saudi Government noted the interest of the United Kingdom Government in these potential contracts.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the level of funding of the Insolvency Service in each of the past five years; and what is the extent of the new resources that have been made available to (a) the service and (b) the area of director disqualification.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The running cost outturn for the Insolvency Service for each of the last five years were:

Year	Million
1989-90	32·8
1990-91	35·6
1991-92	40·3
1992-93	[1]51·4
1993-94	[1]54·8

[1]Includes amounts for superannuation and internal DTI services, for earlier years calculated as:

Year	Million
1989-90	+4·2
1990-91	+4·7
1991-92	+6·2

A total of £57·459 million has been allocated to the Insolvency Service from my Department's running costs for 1994-95. Included in this allocation is £1·831 million to fund the additional work required to meet the case closure target of 53,000, and £1 million additional in the area of investigation including director disqualification.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Insolvency Service staff were employed in the area of director disqualification in each of the last five years.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Staff in the Insolvency Service employed in the area of director disqualification comprise (a) those in the disqualification units in London and Edinburgh engaged directly on disqualification work and (b) specialist staff in official receivers whose duties include the investigatory process which may result in the submission of prosecution and disqualification reports. Their number were as follows:

(a) Staff employed directly on disqualification work

Year	Number
1989-90	45·00
1990-91	43·50
1991-92	50·50
1992-93	46·00
1993-94	47·00

(b) Staff employed in the investigatory process

Year	Number
1989-90	568·00
1990-91	587·50
1991-92	590·50
1992-93	587·50
1993-94	568·00

In addition to (a) above, as at 30 June 1994 the disqualification unit employed 11 additional staff comprising three seconded from the private sector; four on loan from other Government Departments and four sandwich students. For 1994-95 further resources have been provided to enable up to 14 extra staff, including 10 specialist staff from the private sector, to be added to the complement of the disqualification unit. Thirty specialist staff from the private sector will be added to the complement of official receivers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade further to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 403-4, concerning tenders for the second stage review of the Insolvency Service, why he considered it appropriate to invite Stoy Hayward Consulting to bid in a single tender action; what consideration he gave to offering others to bid in order to determine whether he was receiving value for money; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The decision was taken to invite Stoy Hayward to bid for the second stage review in a single tender action because:

(a) Stoy Hayward's bid for the initial stage work had been by some considerable margin the most keenly priced; and

(b) in the course of their work on the first stage review they had shown that they provided excellent value for money.

These considerations together with the fact that it had become familiar with the work of official receivers and the structure of the Insolvency Service led to the decision that the costs involved in a competitive tendering exercise would not be justified.

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in how many cases referred to the Insolvency Services disqualification unit in each year since 1989-90 disqualification proceedings have been commenced.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The number of companies in relation to which reports under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 have been made and the number of disqualification proceedings commenced is as follows:

Year	Cases	Proceedings Commenced
1989-90	3,444	462
1990-91	4,508	449
1991-92	6,171	700
1992-93	6,710	564
1993-94	7,521	464
[1]1994-95	1,506	170

[1] Up to 30 June.

Note: The figures quoted for the number of cases are those for the number of companies reported on. However, the figures quoted for proceedings commenced refer to individuals. It is estimated that on average proceedings are issued against 1·5 directors in any one company.

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was (a) the budget and (b) the staffing levels of the Insolvency Service's disqualification unit for each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The budget for the Insolvency Service's disqualification unit was:

	£ million
1991-92	1·17
1992-93	1·34
1993-94	1·85
1994-95	1·90

Separate figures for disqualification running costs within Insolvency Service budgets were not kept prior to 1991-92.

The staffing levels of disqualification unit were:

	Number
1989-90	45·00
1991-91	43·50
1991-92	50·50
1992-93	46·00
1993-94	47·00

The unit currently employs an additional 11 staff comprising three seconded from the private sector; four on loan from other Government Departments and four sandwich students. For 1994-95 further resources have been provided to enable up to 14 extra staff, including 10 specialist staff from the private sector, to be added to the complement of the disqualification unit.

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he uses to classify cases referred to the Insolvency Service into different priority classifications.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: While each case is considered on its merits the main criterion is the totality and materiality of the unfit conduct alleged having regard to the size of the deficiency, period of trading and previous failures, if any. In addition the following criterion are employed:

public companies have a quoted share issue companies in which the petition was presented in the public interest by the Secretary of State or other regulator companies dealing largely with the public attracting high publicity or numerous complaints material losses by the public or matters of wider concern to the business community quasi criminal misapplication of assets or third party property in material amounts successive phoenix failures of less than two years trading periods.

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cases referred to the Insolvency Service's disqualification unit have been classified as category A in each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The system of classification was not introduced by the disqualification unit until July 1991. The figures from then show:

Cases identified as category A

Year	Number
1991-92	21
1992-93	49
1993-94	197
[1]1994-95	129

[1] To 30 June 1994.

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many category A cases referred to the Insolvency Service's disqualification unit in each year since 1989-90 were not completed by the Insolvency Service's disqualification unit within the two-year period in which disqualification proceedings may be brought.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The system of case categorisation was introduced in July 1991. Details of cases abandoned after categorisation are not maintained in the manner requested. The total number of cases identified as meriting further investigation but which were not taken forward were:

Year	Number
1991-92	369
1992-93	332
1993-94	763
[1]1994-95	94

[1] To 31 May 1994.

These totals include cases which were not proceeded with because of parallel criminal proceedings, the bankruptcy of the potential respondent or the discovery of evidence which would refute or mitigate the allegations of misconduct.

Company Insolvencies

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of company insolvencies and how many companies ceased to trade in each of the last five years; and in how many of these cases creditors did not institute liquidation proceedings.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Information on company insolvencies is regularly published by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, on behalf of the Department of Trade and Industry, in "Business Briefing"; copies are available in the Library of the House. The figures concerned were most recently published in the edition dated 6 May. The figures for voluntary liquidations show the number of insolvency cases not instituted by creditors.

Information on companies ceasing to trade for reasons other than insolvency is not available.

Vernacare Equipment

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will complete his investigations into possible breaches of European Union law in respect of the supply of Vernacare equipment in Holland as stated in his Department's letter of 7 March to the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East.

Mr. Needham: We have raised Vernacare's difficulties several times with the Dutch authorities. We are now assisting the company to prepare a complaint to the Commission, which we will support.

Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what conditions or restrictions are placed by the Government on the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority in taking part in negotiations with its trade unions on the pay and conditions of its staff.

Mr. Eggar: Pay and conditions of service for its employees are a matter for the UKAEA with the exception of its pension schemes which require the approval of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Departmental Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will list for the period 1979 to 1993 (a) the names of individuals acting as inspectors for his Department who are partners in law and accountancy firms, giving the name of the firm in each case and (b) the law and accountancy firms which have been criticised in inspectors' reports.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Table A lists Companies Act inspectors from legal and accountancy firms who have acted during the period 1979 to 1993 and whose appointment has been announced. Table B lists firms of solicitors and accountants who have been criticised in inspectors' reports published from 1979 and the reports concerned.

Scott Inquiry

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the report of the Scott inquiry.

Mr. Heseltine: The timing of the report is a matter for Lord Justice Scott.

Newspapers

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations have taken place with his Department and representatives from newspaper wholesalers and retailers as part of the follow-up action resulting from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supplies of national newpapers in England and Wales.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A wide range of representations were submitted during the period for written representations on my Department's proposals following this report. I and my officials have subsequently held discussions with representative parties from the industry, including publishers, wholesalers and both existing and aspiring retailers, to discuss the terms of a statutory order and the possible alternative of an industry code of practice. I shall announce my decision as soon as possible.

Fire Safety Regulations

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will next meet representatives of the fire brigades and fire brigades unions to discuss changes in regulating fire safety and fire regulations enforcement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In announcing publication of the report of the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement on 22 June, Official Report, column 228-29, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made it clear that the Government were committed to full consultation with all interested parties. This consultation process is now underway with a closing date of 31 October. I understand that the Home Office is already making arrangements for discussions with the relevant fire service organisations.

Deregulation Unit

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the budget of the deregulation unit for the years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The budget for the deregulation unit in 1992-93 was £790,000 and for 1993-94 it was £1,239,000.

The Bill team which was set up in 1993 to deal with the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill had a budget in 1993-94 of £252,000.

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff were employed in the deregulation unit in the years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The number of staff employed in the deregulation unit constituted the equivalent of 23·6 man years in 1992-93 and 33·8 man years in 1993-94.

The Bill team which was set up in 1993 to deal with the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill employed 13 people in 1993-94.

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff hours in his Department have been devoted to work on deregulation unit values in the year 1993-94.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The deregulation unit devoted approximately 52,000 hours to deregulation work in 1993-94. In addition, the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill team which was set up during 1993 devoted approximately 12,000 hours to deregulation work in 1993-94. Officials in other parts of the Department also work on deregulatory issues from time to time, but it is not possible to ascertain how many hours they spent on this work in 1993-94.

Coal Industry

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for the transposition into United Kingdom law of the provisions of European Union legislation suspending until 23 July 2002 the ban on state aid to the coal industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Commission decision 3632/93/ECSC of 28 December 1993 establishing rules for state aid to the coal industry is directly applicable in the United Kingdom, as in all member states. Consequently no United Kingdom legislation is needed to give effect to this particular European legislation.

Association of International Accountants

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the application submitted to him under the Companies Act 1989 by the Association of International Accountants.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have decided to recognise the accountancy qualification offered by the Association of International Accountants as a recognised professional qualification for company auditors under section 32 of and schedule 12 to the Companies Act 1989. I have placed in the Libraries of the House copies of the AIA's rules and guidance, on the basis of which I have taken this decision.

Frogs' Legs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will request the European Commission to call for a European Union ban on the import of frogs' legs from Bangladesh.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 July 1994]: Trade in two species of frog, including their legs and other parts, from Bangladesh is already strictly controlled under the convention on international trade in endangered species. I have no plans to seek any further restrictions.

MINIS Return

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he plans to publish his Department's annual MINIS—management information system—return.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 July 1994]: The MINIS 94 returns for the Department were published today. A set has been placed in the Library of the House. The MINIS returns for the DTI's executive agencies will be published later in July together with a departmental MINIS overview.

Beer Orders

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the mechanism is for monitoring the beer orders; how he obtains the necessary information in order to carry out such monitoring; and when he intends to review their operation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 7 July 1994]: As the hon. Member is aware, monitoring compliance with the Beer Orders is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading. The five major brewers who are subject to the Supply of Beer (Loan Ties, Licensed Premises and Wholesale Prices) Order 1989 and the Supply of Beer (Tied Estate) Order 1989—the "Beer Orders"—gave undertakings to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to supply detailed information each year about the composition of their estates in order to allow the DGFT to determine whether the number of tied premises is within the maximum permitted by the Tied Estate Order. The details provided are independently audited.

In the case of the other provisions of the Beer Orders, including the guest beer requirement, the Office of Fair Trading is reliant on complaints to identify possible breaches by the brewers. All complaints are carefully examined.

There are no plans at present to ask the DGFT to conduct a special review of the operation of the orders beyond his normal monitoring role.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to Childcare Solutions and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 July 1994]: My Department aims to promote a culture where managers are understanding of the need for staff to balance work and child care responsibilities and is committed to exploring child care schemes which give value for money.

The DTI provides school holiday play scheme places, and certain of its executive agencies provide nursery places, at subsidies of between 40 and 50 per cent. The DTI neither subscribes to Childcare Solutions nor provides its staff with child care vouchers.

Inntrepreneur Ltd.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent meetings he has held with European Commissioner Van Miert; at which of those meetings the matter of Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd's application for exemption under article 85 of the treaty of Rome was raised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 7 July 1994]: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade have held any recent meetings with Commissioner van Miert. However, when my officials met officials from directorate general IV on 4 May to discuss a number of issues relating to competition in the brewing industry they were told that a decision might be expected before the summer on IEL's application for an exemption under article 85 for its standard tenancy agreement.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has recently received in respect of (a) the minimum purchasing obligation and (b) the rents imposed on public house tenants by Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 7 July 1994]: Since answering a similar oral question from the hon.

Member on 11 May 1994, Official Report, columns 315-16, my officials and I have received four representations from or on behalf of IEL lessees in respect of rents, and held one meeting with the Courage Leaseholders Association, at which the question of rents was also raised. I have received no recent representations in respect of minimum purchasing obligations imposed under IEL leases.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had with Grand Metropolitan Estates Ltd. in respect of Inntrepreneur lessees; what advice he has given the company about dealing with IEL tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 7 July 1994]: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade have had any recent discussions with Grand Metropolitan Estates in respect of IEL lessees.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what preparations have been conducted within Government Departments in readiness for the entry into force of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 July 1994]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has responsibility for implementation in the United Kingdom of the chemical weapons convention, and this Department would host the national authority provided for under the convention. The DTI liaises closely, both directly and through the appropriate interdepartmental committees, with those other Government Departments which may have an interest in the convention.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

42. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for reform of the legal aid system to ensure that its benefits are available only to British citizens.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Anyone may apply for legal aid to pursue a case in the English courts, regardless of nationality, provided that their case is within the scope of the scheme. There are no plans to restrict legal aid to British citizens.

44. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from the West Yorkshire area concerning eligibility for legal aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since January 1994, the Lord Chancellor's Department has received five representations concerning legal aid eligibility from the West Yorkshire area, two of which were from hon. Members and three from members of the public.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are his responsibilities in relation to the investigation of the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: None.

Debt Recovery

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to protect the rights of wives (a) when a court orders the sale of the matrimonial home to pay off the husband's debts and (b) where the husband continues to incur debts against the wife's income.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) Under current legislation, where a husband and wife are co-owners of the matrimonial home and the husband becomes bankrupt or a charging order is made against him, the court has a discretion whether or not to order sale of the home to meet the debts. The interests of the wife and the creditors will be considered by the court in reaching its decision. Unless the circumstances are exceptional the court will usually order a sale, though the wife will, of course, be entitled to her share of the proceeds of sale. I have no plans to introduce new legislation.

(b) It is difficult to envisage circumstances where a husband would incur continuing debts against his wife's income without her consent; if the husband and wife have a joint bank or building society account, they the wife can end this arrangement to stop the husband using her income.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the procedures are for ensuring that when action is taken by the courts to recover debts all the parties involved are made aware of impending action; and what remedy is available to individuals when the court fails to notify them.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is the responsibility of the plaintiff in a court action to provide the information necessary to ensure that proceedings are taken against the correct person and that the proceedings are served on all interested parties. If a party to an action is not notified, they may apply for the judgment or order to be set aside so that the papers can be re-served. Anyone who is not named in proceedings but who has an interest may apply to be joined as a party.

Sun Alliance v. Shah-Shah Court

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will investigate the processing by Coventry county court of the case Sun Alliance v. Shah-Shah Court, case number 9003741.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have already put in hand an investigation into the way in which the administrative arrangements connected to this case were handled in Coventry county court and will set out my findings in a letter to the hon. Member.

Recorders

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) in how many instances the formalities for the review of the contracts of recorders under the Courts Act 1971 failed to be completed before the due date over the last three appointment periods;

(2) how many recorders were required to stop sitting due to administrative errors or delay in the formalities of their appointment over the last three appointment periods;

(3) what steps have been taken (a) to remedy the consequences of any errors of procedural failures in respect of the reappointment of recorders under the Courts Act 1971 and (b) to prevent their recurrence;

(4) how much has been paid to recorders by way of renumeration in respect of days during which the authorisation of their continuing appointment had not been obtained;

(5) what has been the cost of any failures and errors in the administrative procedures for the reappointment of recorders under the Courts Act 1971.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Extensions of existing recorder appointments under the Courts Act 1971 are generally made for terms of three years, with approximately one third of recorders' appointments accordingly falling to be re-considered each year. Of the appointments expiring at the end of 1991, 1992 and 1993—and excluding appointments which it had been decided not to extend—there were seven instances in which the formal extension was not completed by 31 December of the relevant year. In the light of legal advice received earlier this year to the effect that the extensions purportedly made after the relevant 31 December were ineffective, four recorders whose appointments had been purportedly extended, and two recorders in respect of whose extensions steps had not been completed, were warned not to sit until they could be formally reappointed. One purported extension was for a period of 12 months, which has now elapsed. In two other cases recorders were also warned not to sit because, in the light of the legal advice, the extension of their appointment was now seen to be ineffective in purportedly extending their appointments to the 31 December following their 72nd birthday, rather than to the annniversary of their initial appointment. The recorders so advised have now been formally reappointed and so informed, except in one case where in the interim the individual ceased on age grounds to be eligible for a further appointment.

Standing instructions in the Department have been amended to make it clear that where a recorder's appointment cannot be extended before its expiry, further service as a recorder can only be effected by a formal reappointment. During the material time in the early part of 1994 only one of the recorders concerned sat, for a total of two days. On one day he dealt with two cases involving one defendant who pleaded guilty in both instances; on the other the matter was adjourned as the parties were not ready to proceed. The fee for recorder sittings at the time was £315 a day. The cost of the action taken as a result of the legal advice in relation to the procedures for the extension of recorder appointments forms part of the overall costs of the headquarters expenditure of the Lord Chancellor's Department and cannot readily be isolated.

Civil Business (Fees)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his forecast of fee income for civil business for the current financial year; and how far this forecast differs from the amount needed to meet his spending plans.

Mr. John M. Taylor: We presently forecast that, with imminent fee increases, we should this year receive £234 million income from civil business, £52 million less than the Department's published appropriations in aid figure.

Courts (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many clerks in magistrates courts there were in Wales in (a) 1974, (b) 1984 (c) at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No reliable records of this information exist prior to 1990. In the magistrates courts in Wales, as at the end of December 1993 there were 21 justices' clerks and 127 court clerks, including trainees.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of administering county courts and Crown courts in Wales in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The table sets out the approximate cost of administering county and Crown courts since 1990. The division between Crown and county courts cannot be exact due to shared costs. The figures are in respect of the Wales and Chester circuit which includes areas of Cheshire.

£ million

1993-94	10·093	15·160	25·253

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates courts there were in Wales in (a) 1964, (b) 1974, (c) 1984 and (d) at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not collected centrally. The provision of magistrates courthouse accommodation in Wales is a local matter for the eight individual magistrates' courts committees in consultation with their respective county councils, the paying authorities.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures are currently under consideration to improve the administration of Crown and county courts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A number of national initiatives will help to improve the administration of county courts in Wales. These initiatives are concerned with streamlining procedures, and with the introduction of computer support for court functions. From 1995 it is planned that the LOCCS—local office county courts system—computer system will provide support across the range of county court functions which must be done locally. Other, centralised systems, such as the county court bulk centre, will improve the service offered in all county courts by removing routine and repetitive work which need not be handled locally and which can be handled more efficiently and effectively in a central, computer-supported location. A business management system for measuring work in the county court was implemented in September 1993. A similar system will be introduced into the Crown court in 1997. The Wales and Chester circuit administrator has published a policy document with a view to extending the use of the Welsh language in court proceedings in the Principality.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Income

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update to the latest year for which the figures are available his reply to the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham, Sir Ian Gilmour, of 29 November 1991, Official Report, columns 666-70, showing the numbers of working and out-of-work families with children at different levels of income, according to family size, distinguishing between one-parent and two-parent families and between one-earner and two-earner families showing (a) gross weekly incomes excluding state benefits for the working families, with gross weekly income ranges as before to £280 to £299, but finishing with bands of £300 to £350, £350 to £400 and £400 and over and (b) the benefits and benefit incomes on which the out-of-work families depended.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the tables. Some of the estimates in the tables are based on small sample sizes and are therefore subject to a wide margin of error.

The figures are based on estimates taken from 1991 and 1992 family expenditure surveys, using the income reported in the survey year. They are not adjusted to a common price base and therefore should not be used for comparison over time.

1. The figures are estimates derived from the 1991 and 1992 Family Expenditure Surveys combined. All figures have been rounded to the nearest 10 thousand and because of this rows and columns may not exactly sum to totals. All estimates are subject to sampling error.
2. Gross weekly income is the income reported in the year of the survey, either 1991 or 1992, with no adjustment for inflation.
3. A 'working family' is one where at least one parent/partner is in full-time employment or self-employment and working 30 hours or more.
4. A 'two-wage family' is where the second wage exceeds £5 per week.
5. The figures include only families in private households.

6. It is known that receipt of income support is under reported in the Family Expenditure Surveys.
7. SB is sickness benefit and SSP is statutory sick pay.

Child Support

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of those fathers being asked for maintenance for their own children are also caring for stepchildren for whom no maintenance is being received.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive of the Child Support Agency, that this information is not available.

Lesbian Parents

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy, where lesbian couples are awarded parental rights over a child, that they do not receive more benefits than a heterosexual couple; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The law contains no recognition of the possibility of a contract of marriage between people of the same sex. Social security legislation reflects this.

In the income-related benefits only an unmarried man and woman living together as husband and wife can be treated in the same way as a married couple—that is, as a single unit.

In the contributory benefits, adult dependency increases are paid in prescribed circumstances, which can include the situation where an adult dependant is caring for a child for whom the claimant is entitled, or treated as entitled, to child benefit. In this situation no reference is made to the sex of the claimant or the adult dependant.

Market Testing

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the plans for market testing of (a) social security commissioners, (b) social security appeal tribunals, (c) medical appeal tribunals and (d) disability appeal tribunals.

Mr. Hague: None.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security further to his oral answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 4, when the regulations to curb benefit tourism will be laid.

Mr. Lilley: I have laid regulations today to prevent benefit tourism. From 1 August people claiming income support, housing benefit or council tax benefit will have to be habitually resident of the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, the Republic of Ireland or the Isle of Man. European Economic Area nationals who have acquired worker's rights under EC directives by working in the United Kingdom on a regular basis, asylum seekers, refugees and those given exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom will be unaffected.

War Pensions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a list of all those district councils who do not disregard the first £20 of war widows' and war disabled pensions in calculating council tax and housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: There is a £10 per week statutory disregard of war widows' pensions and war disablement pensions in all of the income-related benefits. In addition, local authorities have the discretion to disregard up to the full amount of these pensions when calculating entitlement to housing benefit and council tax benefit. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

As the hon. Member originally asked this question of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, I have limited the information in the table to Welsh district councils. Housing benefit information has been compiled from the latest available information from local authorities for the financial year 1990-91. No details are available for council tax benefit.

[1] Applies to war widows' pensions only.
[2] Applies to war disablement pensions only.
[3] Denotes a district council which disregards 50 per cent. of a war widow's or war disablement pension, including the £10 statutory disregard.

Civil Service

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will order an inquiry into the work of members of his Department (a) in drafting the detailed regulations relating to child support, (b) setting up and establishing the Child Support Agency and (c) managing and controlling the Child Support Agency; if he will discipline those whose performance has been in error or inadequate; and if he will give his assessment of the effect of the setting up of the Child Support Agency on public perception of the civil service.

Mr. Burt: No. Ministers are responsible for decisions on policy embodied in legislation, which it is for Parliament to approve, amend or reject. They are also accountable to Parliament for the conduct of the operations of their Department, including its agencies. Civil servants are responsible for advising Ministers on policy and for ensuring that their decisions are implemented effectively and efficiently.

We keep the policies, management and performance of the Department under regular review and, like other Government bodies, it is also open to scrutiny by the National Audit Office and the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Managers, including agency chief executives, have the duty of ensuring that any necessary action, including where appropriate disciplinary action, is taken to correct any errors or inadequacies.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a table showing the running costs of his Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available as running costs are not recorded on a regional basis.

Income Support

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend the regulations requiring carers premium allowances and invalid care allowance to be taken into account when considering applications for income support.

Mr. Burt: Invalid care allowance, like income support, is an income maintenance benefit. It is therefore taken into account when calculating entitlement to income support. The carer premium is an additional amount included in income support for people entitled to invalid care allowance, and increases the amount of benefit payable. We have no plans to change the current rules.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support in each region and as a percentage of the total had deductions made from their benefit for (a) poll tax arrears, (b) fuel bills and (c) social fund loan repayments in each year since 1990.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table. Information is not available for the May 1993 "Annual Statistical Enquiry".

2. The regions given are the social security administrative regions, as used by the Department prior to 1988.
3. Information on deductions to cover direct payment of community charge arrears was not collected in 1990. (The community charge was introduced in April 1989 in Scotland and April 1990 in the rest of Great Britain).
4. Deductions to cover direct payment of fuel bills include current charges and arrears for gas and electricity. An Income Support recipient may have deductions for more than one of these. Such cases are only counted once in the tables.

Rugby Injuries (Benefits)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the current annual expenditure on paying sickness, invalidity or other benefits to persons injured playing rugby union football and their dependents.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid the European Union has cancelled to Kenya; and for what reason.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No EC aid under the Lomé convention has been cancelled recently. However, differences between the Government of Kenya and the European Commission on sectoral policy issues have resulted in proposals to reallocate 25 MECU of Lomé III funds and 65 MECU of Lomé IV funds—a total equivalent to approximately £70·3 million—from the cereals sector reform programme to other projects. This reallocation and the new projects are expected to be agreed formally later this year as part of a revised national indicative programme.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the reasons for cancelling a grant for forestry conservation to Kenya in February.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: We were unable to reach agreement with the Government of Kenya on a number of issues, including financial sustainability and management mechanisms in the pilot forests and consultation procedures over excisions, which would have enabled us to proceed with a planned further phase of the Kenya indigenous forestry conservation project. The project has now formally closed. We remain ready to discuss further the possibility of resuming our involvement provided a mutually acceptable basis can be found.

Tanzania

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement detailing the value of all types of aid and support for economic and social development in Tanzania in each of the last five years, providing information separately for the different aid and support programmes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our support for economic and social development in Tanzania has been, and remains, substantial. The main elements comprise programme aid, in support of economic reform, and project assistance, consisting of both technical cooperation and financial inputs, focusing particularly on natural resources, health and population, and transport and infrastructure. We have also provided considerable assistance through non-governmental organisations. The value of our aid has been as follows:

United Kingdom Financial Year £'000	PROJECT Financial Aid	AID Technical Cooperation	Programme Aid	Disaster Relief	Debt Relief	Other	Total
1988-89	4,154	7,102	19,559	—	13	1,061	31,888
1989-90	3,269	9,445	4,840	—	8	937	18,500
1990-91	719	9,425	20,851	45	3	881	31,925
1991-92	796	12,754	10,652	16	—	849	25,066
1992-93	3,728	12,517	6,497	36	—	956	23,734

Aid Budget

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the United Kingdom's aid budget was (a) given as bilateral aid, (b) multilateral aid and (c) administered by the European Community in 1979, 1983, 1987, 1992 and currently.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 27 June 1994, column 411]: The answer should read as follows: "In 1979-80, 72 per cent. was bilateral aid, 12 per cent. was chanelled through multilateral institutions other than the EC, and 16 per cent. was administered by the EC.

In 1983-84 the figures were 55 per cent., 30 per cent., 15 per cent.; in 1987-88 the figures were 60 per cent., 24 per cent., 16 per cent.; and in 1992-93 the most recent year for which figures are available, the figures were 54 per cent., 25 per cent., and 21 per cent. respectively."

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Research

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the report of the multi-departmental scrutiny of public sector research establishments will be published; and what arrangements have been made for public consultation on the report's findings.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am pleased to announce that the report on the efficiency scrutiny of civil public sector research establishments is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The scrutiny was foreshadowed in the White Paper "Realising our potential: a strategy for science, engineering and technology". I announced its terms of reference on 2 February and the bodies to be covered on 3 March, Official Report, columns 809-11.

As Minister for Science, I am determined to ensure that Government resources are spent to the maximum extent possible on science rather than on administrative overheads. The scrutiny team's report proposes a range of options. I and my colleagues in other Departments will be examining these proposals carefully before deciding on the Government's response.

The Government wish to ensure that all interested parties have an opportunity to contribute to the decision-making process on the report. There will accordingly be a four-month public consultation period, beginning today and ending on 11 November, during which all individuals and organisations who wish to comment are invited to forward views to the Office of Science and Technology, head of trans-departmental science and technology group. The Government will take these views into account in reaching their decisions on the way forward.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Waldegrave: There have been no occasions in the last 10 years when Ministers in the Office of Public Service and Science or any of its predecessors have given any such directions.

Management Training

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff in his Department have attended management training seminars run by Paget and Thompson in the last 12 months.

Mr. Waldegrave: According to available information, three members of Central Office of Information staff, and one from the Office of Public Service and Science, Chessington computer centre, attended management training seminars by Padgett Thompson during the period. None has attended seminars by Paget and Thompson.

Market Testing

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in how many cases in each of the last two years where market testing of public services took place an in-house bid was prohibited; in how many cases it was allowed; in the latter case, how many times the in-house bid won; what percentage of the total for each year was represented by each of these categories; and what was the total value of the contracts in each category.

Mr. Waldegrave: Comprehensive information on the reasons for contract being let without an in-house bid is not available centrally. The rest of the information requested for the period from April 1992 to December 1993 can be found in table 2 on page 101 of the citizens charter second report which is in the Library.

Comparable information for 1994 is not yet available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the basis of his calculation that market testing of central Government public services has saved £135 million; if he will give a precise breakdown of each main component of this total; and what period is covered by these savings.

Mr. Waldegrave: £135 million is the total annual saving for the period from April 1992 to December 1993, calculated by taking into consideration all those costs which are directly attributable to individual tests. The calculation is set out in the table.

		£ million
	Annual cost of activities before testing	1,119·2
Less	Annual cost of activities after testing	980·0
Less	Annualised redundancy costs	2·0
Less	Other one-off costs attributable to tests, including consultancy support to in-house teams, annualised	1·5
Equals	Annual savings attributable to tests	[1]135·6

[1] The figures do not sum exactly to the total because of rounding.

Open Government

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to introduce legislation to enable a statutory right of access to personal information as described in the White Paper on open government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Legislation will be introduced as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

Disabled People

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what role will be played by his Department in the forthcoming consultation on disability; and what plans he has to publish a consultation paper on making public services accessible to disabled people.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Disabled People will be co-ordinating action on the forthcoming consultation on disability and will involve other Departments as necessary. The principles underlying the citizens charter apply to everyone, including people with disabilities. I am hoping shortly to publish jointly, with the Minister for State for Social Security, a checklist to help service providers and those responsible for drawing up and publishing charters or statements of charter standards to consider in more detail the standard of service they offer to people with disabilities.

EMPLOYMENT

Work Permits

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits have been issued to foreign nationals in each of the last three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total number of work permits issued by the Department in each of the last three years is shown in the following table:

Year	Number of work permits issued
1991	37,989
1992	37,917
1993	37,761

Training

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of training providers funded by training and enterprise councils are specifically Asian, African or Caribbean organisations.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department does not require training and enterprise councils to supply information about the ethnic background of their training providers.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of directors of training and enterprise councils are of Asian, African or Caribbean origin.

Miss Widdecombe: I am unable to give the information the hon. Member is asking for as it is not held centrally.

Academic Appointments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what authority non-EU citizens cannot take up British academic appointments when their qualifications and abilities are considered by the academic institutions to be superior.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department grants work permits under the Immigration Act 1971 to enable United Kingdom employers, including academic institutions, where necessary, to recruit highly skilled personnel from outside the European Economic Area. It does so for overseas nationals who have unique qualifications or experience, or where there are no suitable qualified resident workers available.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a table showing the running costs of his Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the ratio of male to female employees at the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Miss Widdecombe: From the latest figures available the ratio is one male employee to every four female employees.

Unemployment

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the most recent figures for unemployment in the 12 European Union member states.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 July 1994]: Internationally comparable unemployment figures based on the internationally standardised ILO definition of unemployment are published by EUROSTAT in its monthly "Unemployment Bulletin", copies of which are available in the Library. These figures, which show that the United Kingdom ILO unemployment rate is below the EC average, are shown in the table.

Seasonally adjusted unemployment rates in EC countries

	Percentage	Latest month
Belgium	10·0	April
Denmark	10·5	April
Germany[1]	6·3	April

n/a Not available.

Muscular Dystrophy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measure his Department plans to ensure employment opportunities to young people suffering from muscular dystrophy.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 July 1994]: The Department has a wide range of initiatives and services which help enhance employment opportunities for people with disabilities, including those with muscular dystrophy. To improve the situation further, the Government announced on 6 May that they will be consulting on proposals to prevent unjustifiable discrimination against disabled people in employment, within the next six months.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sasea

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what approaches have been made to him from Europe in relation to the affairs of the Swiss company Sasea and related companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that two Sasea companies are subject to insolvency proceedings in this country. These are Sasea Finance Ltd., which went into voluntary liquidation on 18 November 1992, and Sasea Intertrade Company Ltd., which went into voluntary liquidation on 16 June 1994. I am not aware that any approaches have been made to Her Majesty's Government regarding the affairs of these or any other Sasea group companies.

Gender Identity Disorder

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has as to the validity of chromosomal evidence as a means of determining a person's sex.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A reliable diagnostic sex text that examines a segment of chromosomal DNA has been developed by the forensic science service, an agency of the Home Office. This should be available for use in forensic science casework in due course.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions he has made within his Department to ensure that persons suffering from gender identity disorder are described in this way.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Electoral Law (Disabled People)

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish a response to the proposals put forward by his departmental working parties on electoral law and processes affecting disabled people.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to a question from the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) on 8 July at column 331.

Immigration Rules

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to treating the application of a foreign national in a same-sex relationship with a person settled in the United Kingdom or a United Kingdom citizen on an equal basis with that of a foreign national in a common law heterosexual relationship with a person settled in the United Kingdom with no intent to marry or to have children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is nothing to add to what I said during the debate on the Adjournment on 4 May at columns 820-26.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what external legal advice he has sought on the conformity of all immigration rules, guidelines and concessions with English law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from Sri Lanka have applied for asylum in each of the past five years; and how their applications have been dealt with.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information covering the years 1989-1993, for applications for asylum from Sri Lankan nationals and on decisions made is given in the table.

Decisions[1] and applications received for asylum in the United Kingdom from Sri Lankan nationals, excluding dependants, by type, 1989 to 1993
Number of principal applicants

Year	Total applications received	Decisions[2]
		Total decisions	Recognised as refugee and granted asylum	Not recognised as refugee but granted exceptional leave[3]	Total refused	Refusals
						Refused asylum and exceptional leave after full consideration	Refused on safe third country grounds[4]	Refused under para. 180F of Immigration Rules[5]
1989[6]	1,790	880	10	840	30	30	—	—
1990[6]	3,330	475	15	455	5	5	—	—
1991[6]	3,765	765	20	730	20	15	5	—
1992[6,7]	2,085	4,520	40	4,265	215	10	50	150
1993[6,7]	1,965	2,690	10	2,420	260	95	120	45

[1] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the same period.
[2] Information is of initial determination decisions, excluding the outcome of appeals or other subsequent decisions.
[3] Where it would have been unreasonable or impracticable to seek to enforce return to country of origin. Usually granted for a year in the first instance, subject then to further review.
[4] Figures from 1 January 1991 only. Prior to this, these refusals are included in the column "Refused asylum and exceptional leave after full consideration".
[5] Paragraph 101 prior to 26 July 1993. For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to invitation to interview to establish identity.
Figures from 1 December 1991 only. Prior to this, these refusals are included in the column "Refused asylum and exceptional leave after full consideration".
[6] Figures rounded to the nearest five.
[7] Provisional figures.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the average length of time has been between the refusal of an application for asylum on the basis that there is a safe third country to which the applicant may be sent and the removal of the applicant from the United Kingdom;

(2) what has been the average length of time for the consideration of an asylum application which has been refused on the basis that the applicant travelled through a safe third country where the application could have been made since the coming into force of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993;

(3) what have been the average lengths of time for a substantive consideration of an asylum application in respect of all decisions reached after the coming into force of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The estimated average length of time between the receipt of an asylum application and the decision, for cases decided on applications for asylum received since the introduction of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993—26 July 1993 to 30 June 1994—was 3·6 months. Of this, the estimated average length of time for refusals on safe third country grounds was nearly half a month. The figure of 3·6 months reflects the priority that has been given to cases received after the implementation of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 on 26 July 1993, with the aim of resolving the majority of cases within three months.

Information on the average length of time between the refusal of an application on safe third country grounds and the applicants' subsequent removal would be available only at disproportionate costs.

Naturalisation

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 455, how long on average it takes to process applications for naturalisation in cases where the applicant has not been free of immigration conditions for 12 months and there are compelling reasons of a business or compassionate nature.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not recorded.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the recent Home Office report on refugees; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for his decision.

Mr. Howard: The report is currently being revised and will be published in due course.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the newsletter published in April 1993 which gave an outline of the refugee study being undertaken by the Home Office research unit in collaboration with Salford university.

Mr. Howard: I am placing a copy of this newsletter in the Library.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the outcome of his inquiries, in relation to the methodology of the Home Office research unit's refugee study, undertaken in collaboration with Salford university, as to how the interpreters were selected; what training they received; and what were their qualifications for the job.

Mr. Howard: Concerns about the methodology of this study, including the selection, training and qualifications of interpreters, are currently being reviewed with the authors. No conclusions have yet been reached.

Police Officer (Moscow)

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to appoint a senior police officer to be posted permanently in Moscow.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no immediate plans for a permanent post, but there are good contacts between Russian and United Kingdom police forces.

Murder Sentences

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the Lord Chief Justice concerning sentences for murder.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend sees the Lord Chief Justice from time to time to discuss matters of common interest. These include the sentence for the crime of murder.

Coroners Courts

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to assess the competency of coroners courts.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Coroners are independent judicial officers who carry out their duties in accordance with statutory rules and procedures. The principal relevant legislation is the Coroners Act 1988 and the Coroners Rules 1984. Coroners' decisions are subject to judicial review. Additionally, under section 3(4) of the 1988 Act, the Lord Chancellor may, if he thinks fit, remove any coroner from office for inability or misbehaviour in the discharge of his duty.

Fire Precautions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to alter the requirements for elderly persons homes;

(2) what plans he has for fire brigades' statutory powers for inspection of hotels and business premises; and if fire brigades will continue to impose safety measures.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 27 June to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) at column 424.

Fire Deaths

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the death rates per million from fire (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in each other European Union country.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There were 14 fire deaths per million population in the United Kingdom in 1992, the latest year for which figures are available. Data are not available for other EU countries.

Fire Authorities

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) whole-time firefighters, (b) retained firefighters, (c) fire stations and (d) fire engines were available in each English fire authority area in each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on number of firefighters in each fire authority is published annually in the reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of fire services for England and Wales—the latest report, for 1992, Cm 2275, contains on page 14 a table giving establishments and strengths as at 1.1.1993. The Home Department has not collated figures for fire stations or fire appliances, but information has been published annually on these on a fiscal year basis by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. The figures for 1979-80 to 1989-90 are published in the annual series "Fire Service Statistics, Actuals" and the figures for 1990-91 to 1993-94 are published in "Fire Service Statistics, 1992" and "Fire Service Statistics, 1993".

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will urgently review funding arrangements for non-fire and special services provided by fire authorities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what basis fire authorities can refuse to assist persons trapped in a car.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In practice fire brigades attend road accidents where there is a risk of loss of life or injury and would always assist persons trapped in a car.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing the running costs of his Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Howard: Information by region is not available. Details of running costs for each year from 1987-88 to 1993-94 are published in Home Office annual reports. Annex E of the report for 1994, Cm 2508, gives information for 1988-89 onwards. The figures for 1987-88 are to be found in table 2.iii of the report for 1993, Cm 2208.

Blakenhurst Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many locks and keys had to be replaced at Blakenhurst prison following the publication of a photograph of a bunch of prison keys in The Birmingham Post;

(2) what was the cost of replacing the locks and keys at Blakenhurst prison following the publication of a photograph of a bunch of prison keys in The Birmingham Post.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 11 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about replacing the keys and locks at Blakenhurst prison.

84 Class 1 locks were replaced together with keys and nib nuts as a result of the photograph in The Birmingham Post. 570 Class 3 A levers were relevered across the prison requiring 500 new keys.

There was no cost to the Prison Service as the total cost of this replacement was met by United Kingdom Detention Services Limited.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. has notified his Department of behaviour by a member of staff at Blakenhurst prison which casts doubt on their fitness to perform the functions of a prison custody officer; what were the circumstances; and what action was taken in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 4 July 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 11 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many occasions United Kingdom Detention Services Limited has notified his Department of behaviour by a member of staff at Blakenhurst prison which casts doubt on their fitness to perform the functions of a Prisoner Custody Officer (PCO); what were the circumstances; and what action was taken in each case.

There have been six occasions where the behaviour of members of UKDS staff has led to their fitness as Prisoner Custody Officers being considered.

The circumstances and action taken in each case is set out below:

(1) Assault against a prisoner. The officer was dismissed and the PCO certificate revoked.
(2) Criminal conviction for theft. The officer was dismissed and the PCO certificate revoked.
(3) Collusion with prisoners to allow an assault on another prisoner. The officer was dismissed and the PCO certificate suspended. The Prison Service is considering representations from the officer.
(4) Police investigation into criminal offence against prisoners. The officer has been suspended. The PCO certificate has also been suspended, the decision concerning revocation will not be taken until the outcome of the court action is known.
(5) Insubordination to a senior officer. The officer was dismissed. The status of the PCO certificate is under consideration.
(6) Resigned and the status of the PCO certificate is under consideration.

Extradition

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last 30 years (a) the United States Government have applied for the extradition of individuals from the United Kingdom and (b) the United Kingdom has applied to the United States for the extradition of individuals to face charges in the United Kingdom; and how many of these were refused in each case.

Mr. Maclean: In the last 30 years the United States Government have made 301 such requests to the United Kingdom, of which 37 have been refused. Over the same period, the United Kingdom has made 108 requests to the United States, of which four have been refused.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of his Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 July 1994]: In accordance with Government policy, all the Department's press releases and written answers are printed on environmentally friendly paper from managed forests and bleached using a chlorine-free process. Where possible, press releases are sent electronically.

Private Prisons

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people whose certification as prison custody officer has been suspended or revoked (a) applied to work at and (b) have been employed at (i) Blakenhurst, (ii) the Wolds and (iii) Doncaster prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 4 July 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 11 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many people whose certification as Prisoner Custody Officer (PCO) has been suspended or revoked (a) applied to work and (b) have been employed at (i) Blakenhurst, (ii) The Wolds and (iii) Doncaster Prison.

Prisoner Custody Officer certificates are only issued after a person has successfully completed the required training and obtained security clearance. There are therefore no known instances of people having had their certification suspended or revoked applying for employment. It would not be possible for the Prison Service to know if a person had applied and not been offered employment by one company, having previously had their certification suspended or revoked in relation to employment by another company.

There have been no revocations at Wolds or Doncaster. At Blakenhurst there have been four suspensions: two of these resulted in revocations and two are currently under consideration.

HEALTH

Physiotherapy

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will undertake a review of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960 to introduce a proper regulatory system within the physiotherapy profession.

Mr. Sackville: The profession is already regulated under that Act. We have at present no plans to change these arrangements.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to prevent people with no relevant qualifications from describing themselves as physiotherapists and treating patients.

Mr. Sackville: The title of state registered physiotherapist is already protected by law.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about unqualified physiotherapists in the private sector.

Mr. Sackville: We have received letters on this subject from 18 right hon. and hon. Members since 1 April.

Mental Hospitals (Survey)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the survey of English mental hospitals, initiated by the mental health task force in 1993, is to be repeated annually.

Mr. Bowis: The survey has been repeated for 1994, drawing together information on the hospitals as at 31 March. A decision has not yet been taken about whether the survey will be repeated in future years.

Private Patients

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS doctors and consultants also accept private patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: The private work of national health service doctors and consultants is a matter for the individuals concerned. Consultants contracted to the NHS are required to devote substantially the whole of their professional time to NHS duties so that NHS patients are not adversely affected by private work.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the average and (b) the maximum level of remuneration of NHS consultants from (i) their NHS work and (ii) private patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: The average and maximum level of remuneration of national health service consultants for their NHS work is shown.

average £53,450 (September 1993)
maximum £99,770 (April 1994)

NHS consultants may have their pay negotiated locally if they work for a NHS trust. Information on the level of remuneration for private practice work is not available. Whole-time consultants may not earn more than 10 per cent. of their gross NHS earnings from private work.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average percentage and time allocated to (a) NHS responsibilties and (b) private patients by those NHS consultants who do private work; and what percentage of their remuneration is derived from these respective sources.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Breastfeeding

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she gives to employers about arrangements for encouraging mothers to continue breastfeeding on their return to work after maternity leave.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mixed Wards

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are made for patients in district general hospitals to have their privacy and dignity protected while sharing a room or bay with members of the opposite sex.

Mr. Sackville: That is a matter for the individual hospital. The patients charter emphasises the patient's right to be treated with respect for their dignity, privacy and cultural beliefs.

Asthma

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received concerning the link between asthma and rising levels of pollution from motor vehicles.

Mr. Sackville: Since the beginning of the 1993-94 Session we have received:

25 parliamentary questions from hon. Members;
15 letters from hon. Members and Peers; and 44 letters from members of the public

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she has put into effect to provide for the increase in the number of asthma sufferers; and what further measures she has considered to provide for any further increase.

Mr. Sackville: Approximately 90 per cent. of general practitioners have been approved to run a continuing programme of chronic disease management for asthma. In 1992-93 the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, spent over £1·5 million on research into asthma and areas which may be relevant to the condition. The Department's centrally commissioned research programme is undertaking four studies on asthma. In 1992 the Department set up the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants—COMEAP—which has since set up a sub-committee to advise on the link between exposure to low levels of air pollution and asthma. As part of "The Health of the Nation" programme the Government are promoting a smoke-free environment.

Ethnic Monitoring

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 15 April, Official Report, column 314, on the ethnic origin of nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff, if the results of the survey are yet available.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Mental Health Care (Management)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the leadership programme for top managers in mental health will be delivered, so as to develop inspirational leadership, creative thinking, and enhancement of the personal abilities of senior staff; and what contribution carers of severely mentally ill people will make to this programme.

Mr. Bowis: The programme will be delivered by means of three, three-day residential workshops held over a period of nine months; and by the pursuit of individual goals and objectives within each participant's organisation; supported by networking activities between participants. The programme, which commenced in May, will evolve in response to the needs of the individual participants. It is probable that, in due course, it will include a contribution from both users of mental health services and their carers.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has issued regarding the post-registration experience and training appropriate in the management and care of mentally disordered persons with behaviours that may challenge for (a) nurses with a learning disability mental health registration and (b) doctors with a registration in psychiatry.

Mr. Bowis: The United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting has statutory responsibility for determining the kind, standard and content of training courses leading to registration, and further courses for those already registered, as nurses, midwives and health visitors. Statutory responsibility for validating and approving courses and institutions rests with the four national boards. Standards of education and training for psychiatrists are the responsibility of the Royal College of Psychiatrists.

Health Visitors

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the compatibility between "The Health of the Nation" targets, the Children Act 1989 and a reduction in the number of health visitors.

Mr. Sackville: Whole-time equivalent nursing and midwifery staff in the community have increased by 14·8 per cent. between 1988 and 1992 and by 1·4 per cent. between 1991 and 1992. Responsibility for meeting targets set out in "The Health of the Nation" and the requirements of the Children Act 1989 are not the sole responsibility of health visitors although their contribution is valued.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health visitors were employed in each district health authority area in September 1988, expressed as whole time equivalents.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 4 July 1994]: The information will be placed in the Library.

Redundant Hospitals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the compatibility with her policy of open government of the refusal of health authorities to disclose the selling price of redundant hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: Details of individual land and property sales are commercially sensitive and exempt from disclosure. It is for the regional health authority managing the transaction to determine with their professional advisers if the sale price can be released after completion of the sale.

Hospital Treatment

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the average number of hospitals available for treatment of a patient in respect of a single episode of illness under the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: All acute hospitals provide a wide range of services for acute and chronic illness. Some hospitals provide specialist services for wider populations which would not be viable if they were duplicated in every hospital.

Nurse to Patient Ratio

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 514, if she will give the qualified nurse to patient ratios for which the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 18 April at column 401.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the latest figures and list the number of staff employed by the regional health authorities in the last three years.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each of the 14 former English regional health authorities (a) the number of core regional health authorities staff, (b) the number of other regional health authority-employed staff and (c) total regional health authority staff for each year since 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the tables.

4. Figures in the 'Total' column include consultants, senior registrars and ambulance staff on RHA payrolls.
5. No RHA staffing figures are available for 1991.

Palliative Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has issued regarding the funding of dedicated social work services in (a) hospice units and (b) within palliative care services generally; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities are responsible for the cost of social work support to the national health service.

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the legal powers of local authorities to run voluntary registration schemes for providers of independent domiciliary care; whether they are able to levy charges to cover the cost of such schemes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Whether legal powers exist will depend on the purpose for which the scheme is established and how it is used. Local authorities should seek their own legal advice based on the terms of each scheme.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the turnover of each trust in each year since its inception.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested, for years 1991-92 and 1992-93, has been placed in the Library. Information for 1993-94 will not be available until the annual accounts have been audited.

Cost Improvement Programmes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a table showing the annual cost improvement programmes of provider units in each region in each of the last four years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not audited and used for management purposes only.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a table showing the running costs of her Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Sackville: Information about departmental running costs by region is not available. Details of the Department's gross running costs are provided in the Department's annual reports for 1993-94, Cm 2212 and 1994-95, Cm 2512, copies of which are available in the Library.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department maintains on extra-contractual referral numbers in each region.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service executive quarterly monitoring system collects information by region on their actual spend on extra-contractual referrals compared with their planned levels of spend. Figures on the number of extra-contractual referral numbers in each region are not collected.

NHS Review Costs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost to date of carrying out the NHS functions and manpower review and of any changes made in the light of the review's findings.

Dr. Mawhinney: No estimate has been made of costs incurred to date as a result of changes in the light of the review findings.

Life-threatening Pregnancies

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the availability of hospital beds in south Manchester hospitals for women with life-threatening pregnancies.

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of district health authorities to ensure that comprehensive health services are available for all their residents, within available resources. The right hon. Member may wish to contact Professor Robert Boyd, chairman of Manchester health authority, for further information.

Ambulances

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will instruct (a) West Yorkshire, (b) North Yorkshire, (c) Nottinghamshire, (d) South Yorkshire, (e) East Sussex, (f) Berkshire, (g) Avon and (h) West Country and Hampshire NHS ambulance trusts immediately to remove bull bars from all vehicles, and instruct all ambulance services that the fitting of bull bars to emergency vehicles is prohibited on the grounds of safety.

Mr. Sackville: I will be consulting the Ambulance Service on this issue.

Community Care

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will bring forward regulations under the powers provided under section 49 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 to enable staff to transfer from health authority to local authority employment in connection with care in the community.

Mr. Bowis: The regulations as described will not now be made. This is because they would not have helped secure the outcome envisaged.

A more detailed explanation of the reasons for this decision has been placed in the Library.

Health Service Administration

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 25 November, Official Report, column 136, what were the total salary costs for (a) managerial staff, (b) clerical and administrative staff and (c) nursing and midwifery staff in (i) 1992-93 and (ii) 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 12 May 1994]: Analyses of salaries and wages costs for hospital and community health services in England are shown in the table. The figures for 1992-93 remain provisional. The information for 1993-94 is not yet available.

Annual accounts and financial returns 1992-93 of regional and district health authorities in England, national health service trusts and special health authorities.

Note: Figures vary from those supplied in the earlier answer to the hon. Member for Darlington, of 25 November 1993, Official Report, column 136, due to the latest validated data being used. Salaries and wages costs incurred by family health services authorities are excluded as corresponding costs are not identified on the same basis. Salary costs are the gross pay costs of directly employed staff including employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions except for nursing and midwifery staff where the costs of agency nurses are also included.

Asset Sales

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 24 June, Official Report, columns 364-65, if she will make it her policy to require the total income from NHS asset sales as shown in regional health authorities accounts to be itemised, showing the income from individual large disposals.

Mr. Sackville: No. Income from the sale of individual assets is commercially confidential and the release of price-sensitive information could disadvantage future asset sales.

Press and Public Relations

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 2 March 1994, Official Report, column 763, what was the total expenditure on press and public relations by (a) her Department, (b) The national health service management executive and its outposts and (c) health authorities in 1993-94; what was the estimated expenditure on press and public relations in 1993-94; and how much is projected to be spent in 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Sackville: Functions which are commonly associated with press and public relations for the Department of Health including the national health service executive are carried out by the Department's information division. Expenditure on manpower and running costs for 1993-94 was £1·897 million. This information is not yet available for health authorites.

Projections of expenditure for 1994-95 and 1995-96 are not available.

Advertising

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 6 December 1993, Official Report, column 61, how much (a) her Department, (b) the NHSME, (c) trusts and (d) health authorities spent on (i) television advertising, (ii) radio advertising and (iii) press advertising in each year since 1987; and how much is projected to be spent in 1994-95.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial or other support his Department gives to voluntary organisations promoting energy efficiency for low-income households; what is the value of such assistance in the current financial year; what advice on energy efficiency and reducing fuel bills is available to householders from his Department; what additional funds have been made available in 1994-95 to low income householders to improve efficiency following the introduction of VAT on domestic fuel; if there is a target for the number of households to benefit from such assistance; what progress has been made towards achieving these targets; what health and safety considerations are made when installing draughtproofing in households to ensure adequate ventilation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: My Department provides financial support to eight energy projects engaged in the delivery of draughtproofing to low income households under the action for community employment programme. This assistance will amount to some £440,000 in 1994-95.

Advice on energy efficiency and reducing fuel bills in the home is available through targeted publicity campaigns and the distribution of a wide range of publications on energy saving measures.

Following the introduction of VAT on domestic fuel an additional £1 million is available for energy efficiency measures in low-income homes in 1994-95, effectively doubling the budget for these measures. It is planned that an estimated 12,000 households will benefit from such assistance in the current year. Some 3,100 households have benefited to date.

The ACE energy projects follow a mandatory set of instructions designed to ensure that combustion ventilation within the household will be adequate after draughtproofing. These instructions were drawn up in conjunction with the Building Research Establishment. In addition, each householder receives a safety leaflet giving advice on how to maintain an adequate supply of air to the heating appliance.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, columns 397-98, if he will list each account of the meeting or of matters arising at the meeting which were transmitted to (a) the Foreign Office in London, (b) the United Kingdom high commissioner in Malaysia and (c) other Government Departments.

Mr. Goodlad: A single account of the meeting was transmitted from Hong Kong to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and to the British high commissioner in Malaysia on 17 January 1985. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office was sent a copy of the minutes of the meeting in 1992.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, columns 397-98, what is the present relationship between Mr. Chooi Mun Sou and the Hong Kong Government; when and by which officials this relationship was commenced; and how much money has been paid to him and his company by the Hong Kong Government.

Mr. Goodlad: Mr. Chooi Mun Sou is the senior partner of a firm of solicitors instructed by the Attorney-General of the Hong Kong Government in December 1985 to act in proceedings in the Malaysian courts. It is not the practice of the Hong Kong Government to disclose the fees that they pay to individual professionals engaged to act on their behalf.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, columns 397-98, who was the person from the Attorney-General's Department who attended the meeting; and in what capacity and on what basis each of the persons at the meeting were present.

Mr. Goodlad: The name of the person from the Attorney-General's chambers was not recorded. The names of the other people who attended the meeting, and the capacity in which they attended, were given in my answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 398.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the name of the Hong Kong Government official who authorised the addifavit sworn by C. M. Adkins and filed with the High Court in London on 15 June 1990.

Mr. Goodlad: Ms Adkins was employed by solicitors acting for the Hong Kong Government and as such was authorised to swear affidavits on behalf of the Hong Kong Government.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 397-98, if he will list each occasion on which the minutes of the meeting on 17 January 1985 as recorded by the Hong Kong side have been made subject to a public interest immunity certificate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The document in question was the subject of a certificate claiming public interest immunity in the course of Lorrain Osman's seventh application for habeas corpus.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 397-98, if he will list the files taken to the meeting on 17 January 1985 by the late Sir John Brembridge.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand that no files or papers were taken to the meeting by the late Sir John Brembridge.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 398, what is the practice of his Law Officers and the Law Officers of Hong Kong, relating to the circulation of information contained in a witness's or defendant's statement to parties not connected to an investigation.

Mr. Goodlad: It is not the practice of the Attorney-General in Hong Kong to supply copies of statements of witnesses or defendants to third parties but, exceptionally, he may do so, in the interests of law enforcement, to other law enforcement Departments.

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Court of Justice decision on the Greek sanctions on Macedonia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We continue to regard the Greek action against Macedonia as unjustified and to support the Commission's decision to take the case to the European Court of Justice. The Court's decision not to indicate interim measures does not address the main case before the court, or the legality of the Greek action under Community law.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there has been a recent withdrawal of Serbian forces along the Macedonian border near Straza.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. Under an agreement brokered by UNPROFOR on 1 July, the Serbian forces occupying Straza Peak, and the Macedonian forces observing them, withdrew. UNPROFOR has set up an observation post on the hill.

Caspian Sea

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 181, if he will make a statement on the view submitted by the Government of the Russian Federation to Her Majesty's embassy in Moscow about the legal status of the Caspian sea and the implications of those Russian views on the British-Azerbaijani memorandum signed in February on oil and gas projects in the Caspian sea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The note from the Russian Foreign Ministry set out the Russian views on the status of the Caspian sea—namely, that this is a single eco-system to be used jointly by all Caspian states. It also stated that steps taken by any Caspian state to obtain any advantages as regards the area and resources of the Caspian sea are contrary to the interests of other Caspian states and cannot be recognised.

The memorandum on co-operation between the United Kingdom and Azerbaijan in the field of energy indicates the intention of the two Governments actively to encourage increased co-operation in areas of oil and gas exploration and development. This work continues.

Bangladesh

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the practice in Bangladesh of issuing fatwas against dissidents, with particular reference to Tushma Nasreen; and what representations he has made about this.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The EU presidency has raised with the Bangladesh authorities our concerns for Ms Nasreen's safety. It has called on extremists to refrain from making illegal threats and announced that it will take action against those who ignore the warning.

Middle East

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the visits undertaken by members of the royal family to (a) Bahrain, (b) Egypt, (c) Iran, (d) Iraq, (e) Israel, (f) Jordan, (g) Kuwait, (h) Lebanon, (i) Oman, (j) Qatar, (k) Saudi Arabia, (l) Syria, (m) the United Arab Emirates and (n) the Yemen since 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Members of the royal family have paid official visits to these countries during this period as follows:

(a) Bahrain—The Queen (1979), The Duke of Edinburgh (1989), The Prince of Wales (1986), The Princess Royal (1991), The Duke of Gloucester (1984, 1989), The Duke of Kent (1981);
(b) Egypt—The Prince of Wales (1981), The Princess of Wales (1982), The Duke of Gloucester (1992), The Duke of Kent (1992);
(c) Iran—none;
(d) Iraq—none;
(e) Israel—none;
(f) Jordan—The Queen (1984); The Duke of Kent (1993);
(g) Kuwait—The Queen (1979), The Prince of Wales (1989, 1993), The Princess Royal (1987, 1991), The Duke of Gloucester (1984), The Duke of Kent (1981);
(h) Lebanon—The Princess Royal (1982);
(i) Oman—The Queen (1979), The Duke of Edinburgh (1990, 1991), The Prince of Wales (1986, 1992), The Duke of Gloucester (1980), The Duke of Kent (1985, 1989);
(j) Qatar—The Queen (1979), The Prince of Wales (1986), The Princess Royal (1991), The Duke of Gloucester (1984, 1989), The Duke of Kent (1981);
(k) Saudi Arabia—The Queen (1979), The Prince of Wales (1986, 1989, 1990, 1993), The Duke of Kent (1993);
(l) Syria—none;
(m) United Arab Emirates—The Queen (1979), The Duke of Edinburgh (1991), The Prince of Wales (1989, 1993), The Princess Royal (1984, 1987, 1991), The Duke of Gloucester (1991), The Duke of Kent (1981);
(n) Yemen—The Princess Royal (1982).

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all Chernobyl-type nuclear power stations still in existence, indicating whether they are still in active operation; what measures have been taken to (a) make them safe, (b) convert them or (c) close them in due course; and how many such stations have been closed since the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The nuclear reactor destroyed in the 1986 Chernobyl accident was an RBMK 1000. Eleven reactors of the same type remain in operation in Russia —four at Sosnovy Bor, Leningrad; four at Kursk; and three at Smolensk. Two 1000s remain in operation at Chernobyl, Ukraine where a third unit has been closed following a fire in 1991. Two RBK 1500s are currently operating at Ignalina, Lithuania. Extensive safety improvement programmes have been carried out on RBMK reactors since the Chernobyl accident. Full details could be provided only by the countries concerned, which are responsible for all safety decisions, including whether or not their nuclear power plants should continue to operate.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been established by the United Nations investigator about the origins of the massacre in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The initial report by the special rapporteur, Mr. Rene Degni-Segui, found that the massacres were planned in advance, citing as evidence a systematic campaign of incitement to racial hatred by the interim-Government-controlled media, military training and equipping of the Hutu militias from November 1993, the erection of barriers within 45 minutes of the air crash and lists of targets which correspond with those killed.

A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

South Yemen

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the adequacy of water supplies in South Yemen; and what initiatives there are by the international community to alleviate suffering from water shortage caused by military activity.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The water supply in Aden has been insufficient to meet the daily needs of the inhabitants. International Committee of the Red Cross, to which we donated £250,000 and the European Union approximately £1·03 million, have done an excellent job in maintaining the supply of some water in difficult circumstances. Now that the fighting is over in Aden we hope that the necessary repairs can be carried out to allow the restoration of normal water supplies.

We are unaware of any problems with the water supply in other areas of Yemen.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Gibraltar's interests will be represented in the European Parliament.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Gibraltar does not have an MEP because annexe II of the 1976 EC Act on Direct Elections limits the franchise in European Parliament elections to the United Kingdom. Her Majesty's Government are responsible for representing Gibraltar within the European Union.

Nuclear Terrorism

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are for the foreign security services to collaborate with the new office of the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation established in Moscow to combat nuclear materials smuggling and nuclear terrorism.

Mr. Hurd: Our security and intelligence agencies work with the intelligence and law enforcement agencies of a large number of countries where we have common interests and concerns. However, for reasons which were explained during the debates on the Intelligence Services Act 1994, it is not the Government's practice to comment on such operational activities.

Indonesia

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will declare its support for the proposals in United Nations General Assembly resolutions 36/50 (1981) and 37/30 (1982); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The hon. Member will know that the United Kingdom abstained on the two UN resolutions that he cites. We did so, in the company of our European Community partners and many other countries, in the belief that by so doing, we would help the process of reconciliation and the search for a diplomatic solution between Portugal and Indonesia. We therefore welcome the current dialogue between Portugal and Indonesia on East Timor's future, which is taking place under the auspices of the United Nations Secretary-General.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on sales of military aircraft and armaments to Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: Our policy on defence sales to Indonesia is based on the principle that all sovereign states enjoy the right, under article 51 of the United Nations charter, to defend themselves. This is a right that we claim for ourselves and it would be inconsistent and discriminatory to deny it to others. All applications for export licences are, none the less, subject to strict controls and scrutinised on a case by case basis. For example, if we believe a prospective purchase is likely to be used for repressive puorposes against a civilian population, the application is rejected.

Vatican (Diplomats)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on which countries exclude their Roman Catholic diplomats from the position of their representative to the Holy See.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have no such information.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reasons for his Department's policy of excluding Roman Catholic diplomats from appointment as Her Majesty's ambassador to the Holy See.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is no such policy.

EU Accession

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps were taken to ensure the people and Government of Gibraltar will enjoy the same or comparable citizenship, rights, liabilities and other opportunities that are extended to the people of the Aland Islands under the provisions of the treaty of accession to the European Union and which are consequent upon Finland acceding to be European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The EC treaty applies to Gibraltar by virtue of article 227.4 of the treaty. It enjoys a special status within the Community negotiated at the time of United Kingdom accession. The common agricultural and fisheries policies do not apply to Gibraltar. Nor is Gibraltar obliged to levy VAT. In addition, Gibraltar is outside the Community customs territory and is a third country for the purpose of the common regime for imports. Community rules on the free movement of goods do not apply to Gibraltar.

Article 28 of the Act of Accession provides that the EC treaties shall not apply to the Aland Islands unless the Finnish Government so declare, in which case their relationship to the Community will be governed by protocol 2 to the Act of Accession. The differences between the position of the Aland Islands and that of Gibraltar would reflect their different interests within the Community and the different nature of their relationship with the member state.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the people of the Aland Islands and of Svalbard will be represented in the European Parliament upon the accession of Finland and Norway to the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a matter for the Governments of Finland and Norway respectively. We understand that arrangements for the representation of Norwegian residents on Svalbard and of the people of the Aland Islands in the European Parliament have yet to be decided.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the people of Svalbard will become citizens of the European Union consequent upon Norway acceding to the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Norwegian citizens who live on Svalbard will become citizens of the European Union on Norway's accession to the European Union. Svalbard itself will be excluded from the scope of the European Union treaties in accordance with protocol No. 7 of the accession treaty.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the expected cost and consequences to (a) the Commission, (b) the Parliament, (c) the Court of Justice and (d) other European Union institutions of both Bokmal and Nynorsk being given equal status as official languages of the institutions of the European Union's communities and institutions consequent upon the accession of Norway to the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are no proposals to make Bokmal or Nynorsk official languages of the Union. Section XVIII of annex I of the Act of Accession, annexed to the accession treaty, will amend Council regulation 1 to include only Finnish, Norwegian and Swedish as new official languages subsequent to the entry into force of the treaty. The Kingdom of Norway has made a unilateral declaration—No. 38—stating that "in the written use of Norwegian as an official language . . . equal status must be given to Bokmal and Nynorsk".

This declaration has no budgetary implications.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the consequences to (a) the European Union and (b) the United Kingdom of the declaration by the King of Sweden on open government and which are incorporated in the treaty of accession to the European Union and consequent upon Sweden acceding to the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Sweden's declaration in the Final Act attached to the accession treaty welcomes the development now taking place in the European Union towards greater openness and transparency. The declaration notes that open government is a fundamental part of Sweden's constitutional, political and cultural heritage. The Union's declaration in response takes note of the Swedish declaration and adds that the member states of the European Union take it for granted that, as a member, Sweden will fully comply with Community law.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the consequences for (a) The European Union and (b) the United Kingdom of the exchange of letters between the Kingdom of Sweden and the European Commission together with the assurances given, with regard to Swedish practices in the labour market and collective agreements, which are incorporated in the treaty of accession to the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The exchange of letters between the Kingdom of Sweden and the Commission are mentioned in a declaration by Sweden annexed to the Final Act. The Final Act does not form part of the treaty of accession and the declarations annexed to it do not create binding legal obligations. There are no consequences either for the European Union or for the United Kingdom of the assurances given in the exchange of letters, which simply confirm that Swedish practices in labour market matters are compatible with the agreement of the Eleven.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the citizenship rights of the Sami people consequent upon the accession of Norway, Sweden and Finland to the European Union; and what special provisions have been made for their interests to be represented in the European Parliament and promoted in other European Union institutions.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As citizens of Norway, Sweden and Finland, the Sami people will become citizens of the European Union on the accession of these states to the European Union. No special provisions have been made for their representation in the European Parliament, but their interests are recognised in protocol No. 3 of the accession treaty. Norway also made a declaration on the subject.

Iran

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations has been made by Her Majesty's Government and the EU to the Government of Iran regarding the recent murders in Iran of the Reverend Medhi Dibaj and the Reverend Tateos Michaelian; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With our full support, the EU is asking the Iranian authorities for an immediate and complete investigation into these deplorable murders. We await further information and Tehran's response before considering how to follow up. We are also urgently seeking information about at least two other Christian pastors who are reportedly detained in Iran.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made by the European Union to the Government of Kenya about the importance of democratisation in Kenya; and what has been the response of the Kenyan Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Members of the EU have continued to work together in monitoring developments in Kenya. With our partners, we stress the importance of democracy at every suitable opportunity.

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the United Nations Security Council meeting on Angola on 30 June.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations Security Council meeting on 30 June adopted a further resolution, UNSCR 932, on Angola. This called on UNITA to accept immediately and unreservedly the compromise proposals for a settlement put forward by the United Nations mediators, and already accepted by the Angolan Government. If, by 31 July, UNITA has not complied, the Security Council has declared its readiness to impose additional sanctions against UNITA as indicated in UNSCR 864. The resolution also extended the mandate of UNAVEM II for three months until 30 September.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Use

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce high occupancy vehicle lanes on the motorway system, with particular reference to the M3, M4 and M25.

Mr. Key: I am keeping in touch with experience in the Netherlands where a high-occupancy vehicle lane has recently been introduced, and I am considering whether there is scope to introduce a trial here. I have no current proposals for high-occupancy vehicle lanes on the M3, M4, or M25.

Departmental Costs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 513, if he will provide a detailed breakdown into component parts and costs of the £147·496 million listed under "Other".

Mr. MacGregor: The detailed breakdown of the item described as "Other" running costs of my Department for 1993-94 is as follows:

Activity	£'000s
Travel and Subsistence and other Personnel costs	20,038
Training	3,330
Estate Running Costs	254
Office Services, Postage and Carriage	32,955
Telecommunications	8,042
Office Machinery/Computer Hardware and Software maintenance	5,224
Vehicle Running Costs	989
Consultants and Agency Costs	7,417
Vehicle Licensing Inspection and Testing Costs	2,082
Publicity and Advertising	1,215
Payments to Auxiliary Coastguard and Merchant Navy Reserve	1,689
Medical Services	1,862
Bank Charges	319
DVLA Post Office Costs	59,195
Sale of Vehicle Registration Marks	1,970
Refund of Driver Testing Fees	915
Total	147,496

Charing Cross (Train Departures)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many trains left Charing Cross station on schedule between 4.30 pm and 7.30 pm on Monday 6, Tuesday 7, Wednesday 8, Thursday 9 and Friday 10 June; how many were late or cancelled; what was the length of lateness in each case on each day; and what was the cause of lateness or cancellation in each case;

(2) how many trains left Charing Cross station on schedule between 4.30 pm and 7.30 pm on Tuesday 31 May, Wednesday 1 June, Thursday 2 June and Friday 4 June; how many trains were late or cancelled; what was the length of lateness in each case on each day; and what was the cause of lateness or cancellation in each case.

Mr. Freeman: I have written to the hon. Member with the information requested and placed a copy of the information in the Library.

Birmingham North Relief Road

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those who have seen the report of the public inquiry into the Birmingham north relief road in 1988.

Mr. Key: A small number of civil servants involved in the 1988 public sector scheme.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the west coast main line reinvestment project under the private finance initiative.

Mr. Freeman: Railtrack, together with a private sector consortium—West Coast Main Line Development Company Ltd.—have, since April, been carrying out a study aimed at producing design standards for the line and recommending funding options for the project, consistent with the objectives of the private finance initiative. The study is expected to be completed by the end of the year. A further competition will then be held for the contract to undertake the upgrading work. That contract is expected to be let in mid-1995 and the works will start as soon as possible thereafter.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost, up to 31 March, of setting up the offices of the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising and of the Rail Regulator.

Mr. Freeman: Total costs incurred before the formal appointments of the Franchising Director and the Rail Regulator, which include the main setting-up costs, were £1 million and £0·5 million respectively. Subsequent expenditure by OPRAF and ORR until 31 March 1994, a small proportion of which included setting up costs, was £2·4 million and £1·5 million respectively.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost to his Department of preparing for rail privatisation up to 31 March, identifying separately the costs of external advisers and consultants.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's costs on rail privatisation up to 31 March 1994 are £19·8 million, comprising £3·3 million running costs and £16·5 million external consultancy costs.

Sabrina Bridge

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice was sought from his Department by Worcester city council in connection with the new cycle and footbridge over the River Severn, now known as the Sabrina bridge.

Mr. Key: None. The new bridge is part of the local highway network and consultations with the Department would not have been required.

Transport of Children

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to seek to legislate at the earliest opportunity to prevent any public service vehicle available for hire from being used by school-age children without a seat belt each and in numbers greater than one person per fixed seat; and if he will do this without awaiting EU legislation.

Mr. Key: This is part of the wider review which is under active consideration.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the seating of school age children on buses to travel to and from school and to go on school outings, and on the wearing of seat belts, for each year group up to 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Public Service (Carrying Capacity) Regulations 1984 permit three seated children under the age of 14 to share a double seat and count as two passengers. This concession has been considered as part of the review of the technical and cost implications of fitting seat belts to all seats in minibuses and coaches recently undertaken by my officials, the report and conclusions of which we hope to publish before the summer recess.

Seat belts must be worn in minibuses with an unladen weight not exceeding 2,540 kg, and specified front seats in larger vehicles. We will be reviewing the position on wearing, but it raises complex issues of responsibility in the case of children on larger vehicles.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his officials are having with their counterparts in the European Union with a view to legislating to fit seat belts and keep numbers to one person to each fixed seat on all public service vehicles available for hire for school-age children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Following the announcement of the European Commission's strategy for improving bus and coach safety, my officials are taking part in the discussions of the working group convened to consider the technical requirements for belts in vehicles which do not carry standing passengers.

The number of passengers who may be carried is a question for individual member states.

Highways Agency

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Highways Agency was established; for what reasons it was established; what are its annual administrative costs, including salaries; what were the equivalent annual costs when the work was done within the Department of Transport; what are the annual salaries and emoluments of, respectively, the chief executive and other principal officers; and what were the annual salaries and comparable payments of those officials who carried out analogous and comparable duties when the work was done within his Department.

Mr. Key: The Highways Agency was established on 1 April 1994 as an executive agency of the Department of Transport, to manage and maintain the existing motorway and trunk road network in England and to deliver the Government's road programme. The agency was established as part of the Government's next steps programme, with the aim of improving the effectiveness and efficiency of this major executive business. Copies of the agency's framework document and 1994-95 business plan have been placed in the Library.

The total provision for administration cost in 1994-95 including pay is £87·8 million, compared to provision of £88·5 million in 1993-94. The chief executive was appointed for a five-year term following an open competition at a salary of £100,000 per annum. He is also eligible for performance pay. The chief executive has additional responsibilities to those of the grade 2 officer who headed the former Highways Safety and Traffic Command within the Department. Other principal officers who transferred to the Highways Agency did so on existing civil service terms and conditions.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a table showing the running costs of his Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. MacGregor: The information is not available in the form requested.

Railway Lines (Vandalism)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what recent discussions he has had with Railtrack concerning the educational programmes carried out by the safety and school liaison unit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent discussions have taken place with Railtrack and other interested parties concerning the implementation of anti-vandalism programmes; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what proposals he has to combat and contain acts of vandalism on railway lines in (a) Strathclyde, (b) Scotland and (c) Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answers 6 July 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I regularly meet the Railtrack chairman and board members to discuss a wide range of matters.

On 1 April Railtrack took over from British Rail responsibility for the trespass and vandalism campaign, including the related programme of school visits. It has made it clear that it is committed to continuing with, and indeed developing further, this activity, both to broaden its approach beyond schools, and to ensure that specific problems are targeted in the areas where they are most likely to occur.

Railtrack, working closely with British Rail and the British Transport police, is identifying what further action might be employed to deter the specific problem of vanalism, with particular focus on the known urban problem areas. It is in the course of consulting individuals and organisations to explore the potential for more effective measures.

In Scotland both ScotRail and the BTP are actively involved in promoting safety on the railways through the safety and schools liaison unit and their involvement in the crucial crew exercises which bring home to school children the dangers.

Rail Safety

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many reported cases of endangering safety or obstructions there were in each of the past five years in (a) Strathclyde, (b) Scotland and (c) Great Britain; how many of these led to criminal convictions; what was the range of sentences imposed upon those convicted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 6 July 1994]: Information for 1989 to 1991 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. That which is available is as follows:

Endangering Safety

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Number of reported offences
Strathclyde	n/a	n/a	n/a	11	15
Scotland	n/a	21	8	19	30
Great Britain	1,067	848	783	642	754
Number of convictions
Strathclyde	n/a	n/a	n/a	5	6
Scotland	n/a	n/a	n/a	5	6
Great Britain	n/a	n/a	n/a	26	71

Sentencing

Over the past two year period 1992 and 1993, the range of sentencing that has been implemented for the offence of Endangering Safety is as follows:

Fines	From £12 to £500.
Community Service	From 50 to 200 hours.
Imprisonment	From 28 days to 2 years.
Probation	From 6 months to 3 years.

Apart from the above, some cases have involved the accused being bound over, conditionally discharged or sent to an attendance centre.

Obstruction

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Number of reported offences
Strathclyde	N/a	N/a	N/a	134	135
Scotland	N/a	446	333	238	223
Great Britain	4,070	3,426	2,955	2,585	2,537
Number of convictions
Strathclyde	N/a	N/a	N/a	1	5
Scotland	N/a	N/a	N/a	3	5
Great Britain	N/a	N/a	N/a	49	78

Sentencing

Over the two-year period 1992 and 1993, the range of sentencing implemented for the offence of obstruction was as follows:

Fines	From £10 to £350
Community Service	From 40 to 200 hours
Imprisonment	From one day to 12 months
Probation	From six months to 12 months

Apart from the above, some cases involved the accused being bound over, conditionally discharged or sent to an attendance centre.

Access to Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many requests for environmental information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992 have been received by his Department; how many were answered within two months; how many were refused; and on what grounds in each case.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 6 July 1994]: This Department does not keep central records of the number of individual requests for information it receives. We do, however, look very carefully at every case for refusal.

In the period up to 30 June 1994, the Department gave nine refusals on the grounds of confidentiality of the proceedings of a public authority.

DEFENCE

Gulf War (Pesticides)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what pesticide sprays were used to protect service men and women in Operation Granby prior to and during the Gulf war.

Mr. Hanley: One United Kingdom tented camp in Al Jubayl was sprayed with FICAM, a non-organophosphate residual insecticide. During the conflict itself spray cans of a standard NATO issue pyrethroid "knock-down" insecticide were available to United Kingdom troops, but were little used because the winter insect population was low. No organophosphate insecticide or pesticide sprays were used by British forces.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the uniforms of soldiers serving in Operation Granby in the Gulf war were impregnated with pesticides.

Mr. Hanley: During Operation Granby some desert issue combat clothing for British forces was impregnated with a commercially available, non-organophosphate, insecticide. The impregnation, which has Health and Safety Executive approval, was performed in accordance with the manufacturer's instructions and supervised by service environmental health staff.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 May, Official Report, column 231, when he obtained a copy of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament blueprint report; and what conclusions he has reached following the examination of its proposals.

Mr. Hanley: My Department received a copy of the report in early June. While complete and general nuclear disarmament is a desirable ultimate goal we do not believe that the proposals in the CND report represent a realistic approach.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vacant dwellings are owned by his Department in England and Wales; and how many have been empty (a) more than six months and (b) more than 12 months.

Mr. Hanley: Records are not maintained precisely in the form requested. However, the following information is available as at 31 March 1994:

	Number
Married quarters
Total vacant	8,839
Vacant under 12 months	7,643
Vacant over 12 months	1,196
Civilian houses
Total vacant	43
Vacant under six months	18
Vacant over six months	25

In addition, 1,407 vacant married quarters and 20 vacant civilian houses were in the process of being sold. Information on the length of time these properties have been vacant could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of vacant dwellings owned by his Department by constituency.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not held in the form requested and to provide it for the area requested could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the amount of capital receipts his Department has received from vacant dwellings in each of the past five financial years.

Mr. Hanley: Capital receipts from the sale of surplus dwellings in each of the past five financial years was as follows:

Year	£
1989-90	48,000,000
1990-91	46,000,000
1991-92	54,000,000
1992-93	42,000,000
1993-94	29,300,000

Not all these properties were vacant as some were sold to tenants. Figures for vacant dwellings alone could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vacant dwellings owned by his Department in each parliamentary constituency in Devon and Cornwall have been vacant for (a) more than six months and (b) more than 12 months.

Mr. Hanley: Records are not maintained precisely in the form requested. However, the following information is available as at 31 March 1994.

Married quarters

	Vacant under 1 year	Vacant over 1 year
North Devon	27	—
Exeter	7	—

North Cornwall	89	84
St. Ives	72	11
South East Cornwall	6	—

Plymouth Devonport	—	6

Former married quarters in the process of being sold

	Vacant under one year	Vacant over one year
Honiton	1	2
Plymouth Devonport	—	17

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the cost of providing security for empty MOD dwellings in each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: The cost of providing security for surplus MOD dwellings in the process of being sold, which is carried out under contract, was approximately £231,000 for financial year 1993-94. Such figures are not held centrally, however, and because of changes in numbers of surplus dwellings from year to year, figures for earlier years could be provided, if available, only at disproportionate cost. Security for empty dwellings which are not surplus to requirements is provided by the Ministry of Defence police and military patrols and costs are therefore not separately identifiable.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many unoccupied dwellings are held by his Department in Scotland; and what plans he has to find occupants for, or dispose of the properties.

Mr. Hanley: As at 31 March 1994 my Department owned 798 vacant dwellings in Scotland, of which 736 were married quarters and 62 were civilian houses. The majority of the vacant married quarters were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work, allocated to service families due to move in shortly, or held for unit deployments. The vacant civilian houses are leased from the local authority and we are negotiating their early return. In addition, a further 18 vacant civilian houses and 60 married quarters were in the process of being sold. Any properties which become surplus to our long-term requirements will be sold in line with our normal policy.

Irregular Tenancy Notices

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many irregular tenancy notices have been served on former service personnel who have left the armed services at the end of their tour of duty;

(2) how many irregular tenancy notices have been issued in relation to dwellings owned by his Department in each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: The services do not issue irregular tenancy notices as service personnel are not tenants in the normal sense, but hold a licence to occupy a married quarter. All occupants of service married quarters are given notice of the date when their entitlement to occupy the quarter ceases and that they will become irregular occupants and will be liable for a "damage for trespass" charge in lieu of rent if the quarter is not vacated on the given date.

In the last five-year period, numbers of personnel leaving the Army at the end of their tour of duty who were irregular occupants was as follows:

	Number
1989	858
1990	925
1991	740
1992	598
1993	630

This compares with the total number of irregular occupants of Army married quarters, which can include redundees, estranged families or civilians, in the last five-year period which was as follows:

	Number
1989	1,622
1990	1,748
1991	1,468
1992	1,525
1993	1,811

Figures detailing the status of Navy and RAF irregular occupants are not readily available, and total numbers are produced only quarterly. At the end of March in each of the last five years the total number of irregular occupants was as follows:

	Navy	RAF
1989	497	233
1990	507	214
1991	516	285
1992	394	228
1993	289	227

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what disciplinary measures have been taken against those individuals responsible, following the verdict by the Army board of inquiry that Corporal Malcolm of the Royal Tank Regiment has been subject to racial discrimination.

Mr. Hanley: Disciplinary action was not considered appropriate on this occasion.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what disciplinary measures were taken against the individuals responsible following the decision by the Army board that Private Stephen Anderson of the Devon and Dorset Regiment had been subject to racial abuse;

(2) what disciplinary measures were taken against the individuals responsible following the decision by the Army board of inquiry that Private Evans of the 1st battalion of the Royal Regiment of Wales had been subject to racial abuse.

Mr. Hanley: Those responsible were dealt with summarily by their commanding officer. It is not our practice to comment on the disciplinary action taken by commanding officers in such cases.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a table showing the running costs of his Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Hanley: Details of running cost expenditure since 1988-89 are set out in table 3 of the "Departmental Report by the Ministry of Defence—The Government's Expenditure Plans—1994/95 to 1996/97", Cm 2501. Running costs in 1987-88 are shown in the previous year's departmental report. It is not possible to provide a regional breakdown of these expenditure totals from financial management information available to the Department.

Lockheed

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people from his Department's Procurement Executive have visited the United States of America to see any of the Lockheed facilities since 1 January 1993; what was the duration of those visits; and what was the total cost to public funds.

Mr. Aitken: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Scottish Reserve Forces

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is proposing to make cuts in the Scottish reserve forces.

Mr. Hanley: There are no current plans for reductions in the Scottish elements of the royal naval or royal marines reserves, beyond the changes to the royal naval reserve announced to the House on 18 October, Official Report, column 39. A review of the royal marines reserve has recently been undertaken, however, although no decisions have been taken.

Following reductions in the number of maritime patrol aircraft, the establishments of the three Royal Auxiliary Air Force maritime headquarters units, including No. 2 (City of Edinburgh) marine headquarters unit, have been reviewed. The new establishment for No. 2 MHU exceeds the recruited strength, so there will be no loss of personnel.

An announcement is to be made shortly about proposals for the Territorial Army as a whole.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members the Royal Auxiliary Air Force has in Scotland; and where the squadrons are based.

Mr. Hanley: As at 1 April 1994, 217 Royal Auxiliary Air Force personnel were serving with units based in Scotland. The two units are based at No. 2 (City of Edinburgh) maritime headquarters unit, Edinburgh—106 personnel—and 2622 Squadron Royal Auxiliary Air Force Regiment, at RAF Lossiemouth—111 personnel.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members the Territorial Army has in Scotland; and where the regiments are based.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently 6,290 members of the TA serving in Scotland. The locations of the regiments are as follows:

SER	Unit		Sub Unit/Detachment locations
(a)	Title (b)	Location (c)	(d)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the annual budget for reserve forces is allocated to funding the Scottish reserves in total and per force; and how much that amount is.

Mr. Hanley: Planned expenditure on the reserve forces based in Scotland for 1994-95 is £16,874,000. This is 13 per cent. of the total for the reserve forces of £129,800,000. The breakdown by force is as follows:

Force	Planned expenditure in Scotland
	£ million	As percentage of total for Force
Royal Naval Reserve	0·882	10
Royal Marines Reserve	0·422	19
Territorial Army	14·901	13
Royal Auxiliary Air Force and Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve	0·669	16

Notes:

1. The above figures are for pay, allowances, earnings related national insurance contributions and training bounties for Reserve personnel. They exclude such items as equipment development, fuel, ammunition, accommodation and utilities, food and transport, for which information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.
2. The total figures for the TA exclude the home service part-time element of the Royal Irish Regiment.
3. All figures for the TA exclude non-regular permanent staff.
4. Figures for the RAF Reserves in Scotland take account only of pay; other costs cannot be apportioned.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members the royal naval reserve/royal marine reserve has in Scotland; and where they are based.

Mr. Hanley: As at 1 July the Royal naval Reserves had 530 members in Scotland based at HMS Dalriada, Greenock—167; HMS Scotia, Pitreavie—325; and HMS Claverhouse, Edinburgh—38. The Royal Marines Reserve have 199 members in Scotland based in Royal Marine detachments sited as follows: Glasgow—110; Dundee—37; Greenock—28; and Grangemouth—24. HMS Claverhouse is, however, due to close on 31 July as part of the changes to the Royal Naval Reserve announced to the House on 18 October, Official Report, column 39. Where possible, arrangements have been made for reservists at HMS Claverhouse to transfer to other units.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with the chief executive of the Atomic Weapons Establishment in relation to the announcement of 300 voluntary redundancies requested at Aldermaston, Burghfield and Cardiff; and what proposals he has to encourage diversification into civilian uses for AWE resources and skills.

Mr. Aitken: Staffing levels at AWE are a matter for the operating contractor—Hunting-BRAE. However, my Department was aware that the chief executive of AWE would be announcing the introduction of a voluntary redundancy scheme. Hunting-BRAE is fully conscious of the opportunities and benefits that future diversification can offer and these will be actively pursued when they do not conflict with my Department's primary requirement of maintaining the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons capability.

Project Horizon

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the current progress of Project Horizon, the common new generation frigate.

Mr. Aitken: I am pleased to announce that, at a ceremony in Lancaster House today, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and the Defence Ministers of France and Italy—Mr. Francois Leotard and Mr. Cesare Previti, respectively—signed a memorandum of understanding, and its preliminary supplement, concerning the joint development of this project. The memorandum of understanding will govern the design, development and production of the frigate, including its combat system, with the exception of the anti-air warfare system which will be covered by a separate MOU. We have also set in hand important preliminary work, under the preliminary supplement to the MOU, to be completed during the course of the next year. The successful completion of this work will enable us to take the project forward to the next stage of commitment, which will be embodied in the AAW system MOU and an additional supplement to the frigate programme MOU. It remains our firm intention to achieve the best possible value for money for the British taxpayer.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evaluation he has made of the reports by the right hon. Member for Honiton (Sir P. Emery), as chairman of the Scientific and Technical Committee of the North Atlantic Assembly, endorsed by the North Atlantic Assembly meeting in Copenhagen in October last year, on multinational control over, and reductions of, nuclear weapons.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Departmental comments on the draft report by my right hon. Friend the Member for Honiton on nuclear proliferation, and North Atlantic Assembly resolution 245 on the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, were produced at the time of the autumn session of the NAA. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Trees

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums have been expended on grants for planting of (a) broadleaf trees and (b) conifers in England in each of the last three years under the various incentive schemes in force; and what has been the average area of each planting on which grant was paid in those years.

Mr. Jack: The information is set out in the table.

Planting Grants Paid

£000

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
Conifer	2,400	1,300	1,300
Broadleaf	5,100	8,900	11,500
TOTAL	7,500	10,200	12,800
Average Area Approved (hectares)	2·4	3·4	3·7

Arable Land

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information she has sought as to whether Germany, France and Italy have complied with their requirement to set aside arable land; and if she will publish the outcome of her inquiries.

Mr. Jack: The arable area payments scheme does not impose any set-aside target at a national level. It is for individual farmers to decide whether or not to apply for payments under the main scheme, although if they do they must set aside part of the area on which they are claiming. The area set aside in individual member states each year will therefore depend entirely on the numbers of farmers who have eligible land and who apply under the main scheme. Provisional Commission figures for the 1992-93 scheme year indicate that 1,063,000 hectares of land were set aside under the scheme in the Federal Republic of Germany, 1,589,000 hectares in France and 207,000 hectares in Italy. This is the appropriate proportion of the total area on which farmers in those countries claimed area payments under the main scheme and the figures are close to earlier Commission estimates of the total areas likely to be set aside in each member state.

Live Sheep Imports

Mr. Burden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received from Birmingham city council about the import of live sheep, and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend has been in correspondence with Birmingham city council and encouraged it to take rigorous action over any infringements of the law. A report prepared by the council into the circumstances surrounding imports of sheep from Spain and Poland has been received. It describes the investigations made, and the prosecutions taken.

EC Intervention Stocks

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations are in receipt of the canned stewed beef produced from the 6,840 tonnes of beef released by the EC from British intervention stocks.

Mr. Jack: A list of organisations designated to distribute beef under the EC surplus food scheme in 1993-94 is available in the Library of the House.

Forestry

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what conclusions she has drawn from the advice of the forestry review group; when she intends to publish proposals for the future management of the Forestry Commission estate in England; and how she intends to consult in England about these conclusions.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 19 May 1994 to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Dr. Strang), Official Report, column 552.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will provide a table showing the running costs of her Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Jack: The information asked for can be obtained only at disproportionate cost to the Department.

German Pork

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will take steps to ban the import of pork and pork products from Germany in view of the outbreak of swine fever in German pig herds; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Community rules to control classical swine fever and prevent the risk of spread of the disease via exports are already in place. Responsibility for enforcing those rules lies with the member state of origin. The situation in Germany, including any need for additional measures, is kept under close review by the EC standing veterinary committee. I shall myself continue to monitor the matter to ensure the disease does not spread to this country.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Conspiracy to Defraud

Mr. Bates: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the validity of the guidance to Crown prosecutors about charging practice in relation to the offence of conspiracy to defraud contained in previous editions of the code for Crown prosecutors.

The Attorney-General: Following advice from the Criminal Law Revision Committee, guidance on the use of the offence of conspiracy to defraud was incorporated into the code for Crown prosecutors following enactment of section 12 of the Criminal Justice Act 1987.

The code for Crown prosecutors has recently been revised. It is intended primarily to provide guidance on the general principles which are applied in the conduct of prosecutions. Detailed guidance on particular offences is not appropriate to the revised code and the paragraphs relating to consiracy to defraud no longer appear. However, the policy and practice of the Crown Prosecution Service in relation to alleged offences of conspiracy to defraud remains unchanged.

SCOTLAND

Road Schemes

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in support of construction of a three-towns bypass in the area of Ardrossan, Saltcoats and Stevenston; and if he will make a statement on the current status of this project.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Within recent years the hon. Member and the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Donohoe) have made several representations in favour of a bypass for Ardrossan, Saltcoats and Stevenston. Support has also been expressed formally by five representative bodies and two individual correspondents.

The consulting engineer reviewing the alignment and standards for the new road is expected to report to my officials later this summer. Subject to a satisfactory proposal, the design and preparation of the preferred scheme will then be taken forward.

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what facilities his Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Lang: There are no facilities for parking bicycles outside my office in Whitehall. We can, however, arrange for bicycles to be held for visitors by pre-arrangement.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his proposals for the route of the new dual carriageway section of the A1 trunk road between Haddington and Dunbar.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The dualling of the A1 between Haddington and Dunbar was one of the major schemes which my right hon. Friend recently announced that he expected to start between April 1995 and March 1997 in his statement about progress on trunk road construction and proposed starts in Scotland in the next three years. My officials plan to publish draft road orders in August this year. A public exhibition will be held to explain the details of the proposals. Further progress will, of course, be dependent on the public reaction to the proposals and availability of finance.

Youssef Chaabane

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer of 5 July, Official Report, columns 127-28, what further investigation the Lord Advocate plans into the case of Youssef Chaabane, accused in a Beirut court of murdering a Jordanian diplomat; and whether he is sending Crown Office lawyers to Beirut.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate does not announce publicly what investigative steps he may or may not take in any particular criminal investigation. Criminal investigations could not proceed on any proper basis if they were carried out in such a manner. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has sent, and will send, Crown Office lawyers wherever it is necessary and appropriate to send them.

Public Appointments

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table updating the information provided by written answer to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 30 April 1991, Official Report, columns 154-57, relating to the paid appointments within his patronage and the annual remuneration paid to each one.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 July 1994]: Information concerning the level of any salary or fee paid to a member of a nationalised industry, non-departmental public body or NHS bodies sponsored by my Department as at 1 September 1993 is listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1993", copies of which are in the Libraries of the House. The next edition of "Public Bodies" with updated information will be published in December. Information regarding appointments made jointly with other Ministers is no longer held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday play schemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to Childcare Solutions and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1994]: The Scottish Office has its own on-site nursery at East Craigs, Edinburgh which is registered for 15 full-time places and operates on a mix of full and part-time attendance. Those using the facility meet its running costs with accommodation costs being met by my Department. The Scottish Office takes occupancy of a major new building at Victoria Quay, Leith in the autumn of 1995. Plans for this building include a 30-35 place nursery.

Staff in my Department can also place children in the central holiday playscheme in Edinburgh. The facilities are available to staff on a full repayment basis although my Department makes an annual contribution of around £500 to the playscheme to help with the cost of outings. Discussions are also taking place about access to a playscheme in the Glasgow area.

Additionally, my Department has several other ways in which it helps its staff with child care responsibilities, including special leave, paternity leave, flexible working patterns and career breaks. Although my Department does not subscribe to Childcare Solutions or make use of child care vouchers, it is shortly to introduce a scheme whereby staff can make claims for the reimbursement of reasonable and unavoidable child care costs incurred when the normal working pattern is disrupted.

Staff (Attitude Survey)

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what surveys of the views, opinions and attitudes of the staff of his Department have been carried out in the last two years; and if he will place copies of the findings in the Library.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1994]: As part of its commitment to achieving the Investors in People standard, the Scottish Office carried out an attitude survey of 20 per cent. of staff in August 1992.

Information on the key points emerging from the survey was distributed to all staff and a fuller executive summary was made available on request. I have arranged for copies of these documents to be placed in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION

Primary Schools (Inspections)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many primary schools, by local education authority, have been informed that they will have Ofsted inspections in the autumn term; how many of them have been informed by Ofsted of the registered inspector appointed to carry out their inspection; how many of them have been told by Ofsted that their inspection is deferred until the spring term of 1995; and how many of them have neither been informed of their registered inspector nor been told of deferment.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to the hon. Member.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide a table showing the running costs of his Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Robin Squire: In the years prior to 1993-94 HM inspectorate maintained small local offices in each region, but the Department as currently constituted does not operate a regional structure; its headquarters functions are carried out in offices in London and Darlington. In 1993-94 the Department's running costs expenditure was split broadly 70:30 between the London and Darlington offices. Detailed information on the actual spend between each office for that and previous years could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The net administration costs for the Department in each year since 1987-88 were as follows:

	£'000s
1987-88	58,594
1988-89	67,402
1989-90	74,501
1990-91	85,067
1991-92	102,414
1992-93	108,370
1993-94	88,370

The 1993-94 figure is provisional and reflects changes in the machinery of Government.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what numbers and percentages of pupils attend grant-maintained secondary schools in England; and what are the figures for each local education authority;

(2) what numbers and percentages of pupils attend grant-maintained schools in England; and what are the figures for each local education authority;

(3) what numbers and percentages of secondary schools are grant-maintained in England; and what are the figures for each local education authority;

(4) what number and percentage of schools are grant-maintained in England; and what are the figures for each local education authority;

(5) what numbers and percentages of primary schools are grant-maintained in England; and what are the figures in each local education authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Notes:

1. All figures for numbers of pupils are derived from the Department's January 1993 Schools Census. In calculating the percentage of primary schools part-time pupils in grant-maintained schools are excluded.
2. Figures for number of maintained schools are derived from the Department's January 1993 Schools Census. The number of grant-maintained schools is correct as of 1 July.
3. The percentages represent the number of pupils at grant-maintained schools as a proportion of the number of pupils at all maintained schools, and the number of grant-maintained schools as a proportion of the number of all maintained schools.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list by local education authority the number and percentage of children in each grant-maintained school with statements of special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: A table containing the latest available information has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list by local education authority those grant-maintained schools which had specific units or support services for children with special educational needs when they attained grant-maintained status; and whether those units or support services are still available.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not have a comprehensive central record of specific units and support services for children with special educational needs at grant-maintained schools.

Children (Chronic Allergies)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance has been issued by his Department to representatives of the teaching profession, regarding the need to cater for school children with chronic allergic conditions who may require the immediate administration of adrenalin injections while at school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: General guidance on health care in schools for children with medical conditions is given in the Department's circular 11/90 "Staffing for Pupils with Special Educational Needs". The code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs offers guidance to schools on the circumstances in which they might have recourse to the child health services.

The statutory responsibility for securing health care for children in school rests with district health authorities. Teachers could not be required in law to administer medicines or to give injections. However, teachers have a general duty of care towards children in schools, and it is therefore reasonable to expect a teacher to react promptly if a child with a chronic allergy condition is suddenly taken ill. Such action could include assisting with the injection of adrenaline, if the teacher is competent and willing to do so and has been appropriately trained.

Education Costs

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average cost to the Exchequer of 11 years of compulsory education in local authority-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1992-93, local education authorities spent an average of £1,857 per pupil in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools. LEA spending returns do not allow us to distinguish the amount spent on compulsory education from within that total.

Most central Government support for local authorities is in the form of unhypothecated revenue support grant. It is not therefore possible to identify the proportion of local authority education spending met by the Exchequer.

School Meals

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of children receiving free school meals in each local education authority area; what percentage that is of the total number of children receiving school meals in that area; and what are the national totals in each case;

(2) when he expects to publish the results of his Department's annual survey of school meals relating to 1993.

Mr. Forth: The results of the survey are contained in "Statistics of Education for Schools 1993" published on 30 June. A copy is available in the Library.

The table covers day pupils receiving free school meals in maintained schools in each local education authority in England in January 1993.

Number of day pupils who received a free school meal as a proportion of all school meals taken.
Information on pupils is derived from the annual returns made to the Department in January each year (Form 7).
Includes self-governing (GM) state schools.
Includes full-time and part-time day pupils in maintained schools, including nursery and special schools, who had a school meal on the Census day.
Excludes boarding pupils and pupils in hospital schools.

Special Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the schemes he has approved for the local management of special schools submitted to him by local education authorities.

Mr. Forth: No. Section 42(1) of the Education Reform Act 1988 requires LEAs to publish their own LMS schemes. The manner in which they must do so is prescribed in the Education (Publication of Schemes for Financing Schools) Regulations 1993.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new full-time equivalent jobs have been created in Clwyd during the past 15 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Comprehensive information is not collected on new jobs created. However, offers of regional selective assistance accepted during the 15 months ending on 31 May 1994 were forecast to create 2,032 jobs in Clwyd.

Hedgerows

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the percentage of hedgerows and total hedgerow stock in 1984 which has subsequently been lost; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A survey carried out by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology as part of the Department of the Environment's 1990 countryside survey found that in 1984 there was an estimated stock of 71,000 km of hedgerow in Wales, but, by 1990, there had been a net loss of 18,000 km or 25 per cent. of the total stock. The main reason for this loss was poor management and as a result the Countryside Council for Wales in 1992, at the request of the Welsh Office, established the hedgerow renovation scheme.

The most recent survey of hedgerows in England and Wales will shortly be completed, covering the years 1990-93. This will provide details of more recent changes in stock levels.

Snowdonia

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times Snowdonia mountain rescue services were called into action in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1993, there were 174 incidents in Snowdonia involving mountain rescue services.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those hospitals and medical establishments that have national health service trust status in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not currently available in the form requested. Actual details on hospitals, health centres and clinics, vehicles and other accommodation, assets and equipment that is either vested in, or leased by, national health service trusts in Wales are contained in the individual transfer of assets orders, not all of which have been finalised.

From 1 April 1994 there are 24 operational national health service trusts in Wales. The details are:

Pembrokeshire NHS Trust
Ceredigion and Mid Wales NHS Trust
Carmarthen and District NHS Trust
Llanelli Dinefwr NHS Trust
Swansea NHS Trust
Bridgend and District NHS Trust
Llandough Hospital NHS Trust
Glan Hafren NHS Trust
Gwent Community Health NHS Trust
Powys Healthcare NHS Trust
Wrexham Maelor Hospital NHS Trust
Glan Clwyd District Hospital NHS Trust
Clwydian Community Care NHS Trust
Gwynedd Hospitals NHS Trust
Gwynedd Community Health NHS Trust
Nevill Hall and District NHS Trust
Velindre NHS Trust
Rhondda Health Care NHS Trust
Derwen NHS Trust
Morriston Hospital NHS Trust
East Glamorgan NHS Trust
South and East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust
North Wales Ambulance NHS Trust
Mid Glamorgan Ambulance NHS Trust

Bicycles

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what facilities his Department provides for the parking of the bicycles of visitors to its offices in Westminster.

Mr. Redwood: There is no provision for any types of transport outside my Department. However, arrangements can usually be made with the Ministry of Defence to park bicycles in its car park close by.

Special Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the schemes he has approved from the local management of special schools submitted to him by local education authorities.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. The extension of the local management of schools arrangements to special schools was deemed a significant variation to a local education authority's LMS scheme and as such it is for the local authority to publish the changes in accordance with section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988 and the Education (Publication of Schemes for Financing Schools) Regulations 1993.

Remploy Centres

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Remploy centres he has visited since his appointment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has responsibility for this organisation.

Road Improvement Schemes

Mr. Elfyn Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many road improvement schemes are currently being planned for (a) Gwynnedd, (b) Clwyd, (c) Dyfed, (d) Powyd, (e) Gwent, (f) South Glamorgan, (g) Mid Glamorgan, (h) West Glamorgan and (i) Wales as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: "Roads in Wales", to be published shortly by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, will set out our priorities and plans for improvements to trunk roads.

Schools Statistics

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what numbers and percentages of pupils attend grant-maintained secondary schools in Wales; and what are the figures for each local eduction authority;

(2) what numbers and percentages of pupils attend grant-maintained primary schools in Wales; and what are the figures for each local education authority;

(3) what numbers and percentages of pupils attend grant-maintained schools in Wales; and what are the figures for each local education authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers and percentages of pupils attending grant-maintained schools in Wales in each local education authority are shown in the table:

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by local education authority the grant-maintained schools which had specific units or support services for children with special educational needs when they attained grant-maintained status and indicate whether these units or support services are still available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Details of the grant-maintained schools in Wales were given in my reply of 9 December 1993 and my right hon. Friend's reply of 4 July 1994 to the hon. Members for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) and for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies). All GM schools had support services when they were approved for grant-maintained status, and Ysgol Bryn Elian and St. Cyres had designated special needs units attached to them. The schools' change of status has in no way affected their availability.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by local education authority the number and percentage of children in each grant-maintained school with statements of special educational needs.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers and percentages of children in grant-maintained schools with statements of special educational needs in Wales in each local education authority are shown in the following table. This information was not collected from individual schools in 1993.

	Number[1]	Per cent.[2]
Gwent	8	0·3
West Glamorgan	31	1·3
Wales	39	0·2

Source: Form STATS2.
[1] As at January 1993.
[2] Percentages are calculated as a proportion of the total number of children with statements of special educational needs (including those being educated outside the local education authority area in which they are registered) in the local education authority.

NHS Trusts (Pay Awards)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from NHS trusts in Wales on the effect of the implementation of the current health service pay award on the numbers of staff the trusts employ.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 13 May, column 268.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from local authorities or their associations in relation to the execution of their duties to staff affected by staff transfer orders and other procedures occasioned by the reform of local government, particularly with respect to compliance with the duties of employees under the acquired rights directive and the collective redundancies directive of the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received several such representations, which I will take into account in guidance to the Staff Commission for Wales. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State set out the Government's view on how the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations—which implement the acquired rights directive—apply to local government reorganisation in Standing Committee A on 17 May.

Welsh Language

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when final results of the 1992 Welsh social survey relating to the Welsh language will be published.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Preliminary results relating to the Welsh language were issued in a Welsh Office statistical press release on 29 July 1993. An article on Welsh language aspects of the survey was published in the autumn 1993 edition of "Statistical News", issue 102, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. It is planned to produce a further report later this year. This timetable is later than that originally envisaged due to slower than expected progress with other work arising from the survey.

Training and Enterprise Councils.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he expects that his Department's financial appraisal and monitoring team will complete (a) the review of the monitoring and sample checking systems of the Welsh training and enterprise councils in relation to operating agreement compliance and (b) the review of the non-vocational qualifications claims under output-related funding of training provided by JHP Training in Wales and their verification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Department's financial appraisal and monitoring team reviews the systems of training and enterprise councils to ensure compliance with the operating agreement and that standards are maintained.

The review of NVQ claims following training provided by JHP Training in Wales will be completed by the end of August.

Ambulances (Bull Bars)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will instruct South and East Wales Ambulance trust to remove the bull bars fitted to their vehicles and instruct all ambulance services that the fitting of bull bars to emergency vehicles is prohibited on the grounds of safety.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The South and East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust has already made arrangements to remove bull bars from 10 ambulance vehicles. Elsewhere in Wales bull bars are not fitted to front-line ambulance vehicles.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

St. Ethelburga's Church

16. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to fund the rebuilding of St. Ethelburga's church from the millennium fund or the proceeds of the national lottery.

Mr. Sproat: The responsibility for the allocation of lottery proceeds is a matter for independent distributing bodies accountable to Parliament. These bodies—the Sports Councils, the Arts Councils, the National Heritage Memorial Fund, the Millennium Commission and the National Lottery Charities Board—will issue full guidance notes for applicants in the autumn. Those interested in receiving grants from the national lottery will need to apply to the relevant distributing body.

Film Industry

17. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has had with representatives of the film industry.

Mr. Brooke: Last year I held a series of 10 consultative meetings with all sectors of the film industry to consider the state of the industry and how the level of investment in British film production might be raised. I have subsequently had discussions with a number of key industry figures. I will announce the Government's conclusions in due course.

Arts Council

18. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how he intends to improve the accountability of the Arts Council.

Mr. Brooke: I have explored with the chairman of the Arts Council ways in which the council's accountability can be improved. The council has agreed a programme to implement a number of proposals, including an annual Arts Council lecture, twice-yearly public meetings outside London and a series of meetings on each of the different art forms. I welcome these proposals, as a positive move to improve public understanding of the council's operations and decisions.

Cross-media Ownership

20. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on Government policy towards cross-media ownership.

Mr. Brooke: I announced on 3 January that I would be reviewing the rules which restrict cross-media ownership. Ministers will be considering a report by officials during the summer. The timing of an announcement about the outcome will depend on a number of factors, including the nature of those recommendations and any legislative implications.

Science Museum

22. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to help fund the extension to the science museum.

Mr. Sproat: Any request for extra funds from the science museum will be considered when I decide the grant-in-aid allocations for the museums and galleries sponsored by my Department. These will be announced at the time of the Budget.

Competitive Sports

23. Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with the Sports Council regarding the development of competitive sports.

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the Sports Council regularly to discuss matters of mutual concern, including the development of competitive sports.

Anabolic Steroids

24. Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what initiatives he intends to take to implement an effective United Kingdom ban on the availability and use of anabolic steroids in sports.

Mr. Sproat: In 1993-94, the four sports councils spent over £910,000 on their programmes to combat drug abuse in sport and carried out nearly 4,000 tests. The availability of anabolic steroids is already controlled under the Medicines Act 1968 and the Government are currently considering whether to introduce further controls.

Televised Sporting Events

25. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he plans legislation to widen the list of those sporting events which are ensured a showing on a terrestrial television channel.

Mr. Brooke: I shall consider what the National Heritage Select Committee says in its report on sports sponsorship and television coverage which was published on 6 July.

Industrial Heritage Sites

26. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many sites of industrial national heritage he has visited in the last six months; and if he proposes to make additional funding available to such sites.

Mr. Brooke: Over the past six months I have visited two sites relating to our industrial heritage: the Quarry Bank Mill museum in Styal, Cheshire, and the Tiverton museum in Devon, with its lace machine gallery.

On the question of funding, my Department makes substantial resources available each year to English Heritage and the National Heritage Memorial Fund. Both organisations offer grants towards the preservation of our industrial heritage and in so doing have made significant contributions in Burnley, for example, towards the development of Queen Street Mill, as the hon. Member will be aware. The additional resources for the heritage expected from the national lottery will substantially increase the scope for preserving the best of our industrial past.

Arts (Disabled People)

27. Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps his Department is taking, via its sponsored bodies, to improve access to the arts for disabled people.

Mr. Sproat: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms Lynne) earlier today.

National Lottery

21. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects the first distribution of funds generated by the national lottery to take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I expect the bodies responsible for the distribution of national lottery proceeds to invite the first applications for funding from the beginning of 1995. The first funds should be distributed to successful applicants shortly thereafter.

28. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his estimate of the benefits disability organisations will derive from the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: Organisations for the disabled stand to gain considerably from the net proceeds of the national lottery. They will be able to apply for lottery funding for any project which is on or connected with the arts, sport or national heritage; is for a charitable purpose; or is to mark the year 2000 or beginning of the third millennium.

Television Licence Fee

29. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to help senior citizens living alone with their television licence fee.

Mr. Brooke: As the Government have made clear on many occasions, we are sympathetic to pensioners who find difficulty in meeting the cost of the licence fee, but we do not consider the licence fee a suitable instrument of social policy.

Children's Play Organisations

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to ensure that children's play organisations are able to receive directly funds from the national lottery.

Mr. Sproat: It is likely that the children's play projects will be eligible for funding from a number of the lottery distributing bodies. Guidance notes explaining the precise eligibility criteria will be published by these distributors later in the year.

Departmental Strategy Document

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish a strategy document for his Department's development and promotion of the nation's arts, culture, sport and heritage for the next five years.

Mr. Brooke: My Department's annual report for 1993-94 sets out the Government's overall aims for the national heritage and outline plans, subject to annual review, for the three years ahead. The Department has also issued a short booklet "Preserving the Past, Shaping the Future", which describes the Department's aims in greater detail.

Royal Palaces

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, column 346, what are the capital conservation and improvement schemes which the historic royal palaces agency will fund in 1994-95; how much will be spent on each; and how much will be spent on (a) building maintenance and (b) running costs.

Mr. Sproat: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Historic Royal Palaces Agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Beeton. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Beeton to Ms Marjorie Mowlam, dated 11 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your Question about the capital conservation and improvement schemes which the Historic Royal Palaces Agency will fund in 1994-95; how much will be spent on each; and how much will be spent on (a) building maintenance and (b) running costs.

Planned expenditure by Historic Royal Palaces on capital schemes in 1994-95 is £9·1 million in total (excluding VAT). Of this, the agency plans to spend approximately the following amounts on individual schemes costing more than £0·25 million:

	£ million
Agency Fire Prevention Programme
Tower of London	0·5
Hampton Court Palace	0·4
Kensington Palace	0·1
Banqueting House	0·2
Kew Palace	0·3
Tower of London
Jewel House and Waterloo Barracks	3·2
Renewal of Electricity Supply	0·2
Re-presentation of the White Tower	0·2
Catering—New Armouries Building	0·1
Hampton Court Palace
Privy Garden Parterre	0·7
Restoration of Georgian Rooms	0·6
Car Parking	0·1
Catering	0·1
Kensington Palace State Apartments
Restoration of King's Gallery	0·3

Planned expenditure in 1994-95 on building maintenance is £1·5 million and on running costs is £11·1 million (excluding VAT).

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory basis.

Mr. Sproat: None of the advisory bodies sponsored by my Department has a statutory basis. However, some of the executive bodies which are established by statute do have an advisory role. Examples are the British Tourist Authority, set up under the Development of Tourism Act 1969, and English Heritage, set up under the National Heritage Act 1983.

Audio-described Television

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what research has been undertaken by his Department into the availability of audio-described television for visually impaired people in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: None. A consortium, which includes the Royal National Institute for the Blind, the Independent Television Commission, the BBC, and the ITV Association, is developing the AUDETEL project, which aims to provide an audio description commentary on television. I understand that the BBC and ITV hope to begin experimental transmissions within the next week.

Gaelic Radio Service

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received regarding the development of a national Gaelic radio service in Scotland.

Mr. Brooke: Since the publication of the Government's consultation document on the future of the BBC in November 1992, I have received representations about the development of a national Gaelic radio service in Scotland from three bodies: An Comunn Gaidhealach, Commun na Ghaidhlig and Foram luchd-ionnsachaidh.

GM Vauxhall Conference

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received from the GM Vauxhall conference about its case for parity.

Mr. Sproat: I met Mr. William King, chairman, and Mr. Peter Hunter, secretary, of the GM Vauxhall Conference on 1 November 1993 to discuss the funding of safety improvements at GMVC club grounds. During the meeting the GMVC representatives formally submitted their case for parity. On 11 March this year they provided me with additional information.

Sports Ground Safety

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what representations he has received from the Rugby Football League about their ground safety plans; (2) when he last met representatives of the Rugby Football League; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Sproat: I met Mr. Rodney Walker, chairman, and Mr. Maurice Lindsay, chief executive, of the Rugby Football League on 22 November 1993 to discuss the funding of safety improvements at Rugby Football League grounds. I have received no further representations from the Rugby Football League since then, although I have had since further informal discussions.

Football Trust

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with the Pools Promoters Association about widening the remit of the Football Trust to include other sports, with particular reference to rugby and cricket.

Mr. Sproat: My officials held a meeting with representatives from the Pools Promoters Association on 22 June. Negotiations are at an early stage.

British Library

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what areas will be covered by the most recent report he has commissioned on the British library project from Kennedy and Donkin; what will be the cost to the Exchequer; and if he will place the report in the public domain.

Mr. Brooke: The most recent report commissioned from Kennedy and Donkin Building Services Ltd. was for an independent survey of the mechanical and electrical services installed in the first phase of the new British Library building. The report investigated whether services as installed complied with statutory requirements and relevant British Standards and, including follow-up work, has cost £165,000. I do not plan to publish the report because it contains information which is potentially commercially sensitive.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the impact upon the arts and heritage in the United Kingdom of article 128 of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Brooke: Article 128 of the Maastricht Treaty gives the Community a role in support of member states' own action in specified areas of culture without enabling it to interfere in national cultural affairs. I am awaiting Commission proposals on what incentive measures should be provided under the new article. These will also suggest how the Community may take cultural aspects into account in its action under other aspects of the treaty.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half-year ended 30 June of individual works of art and museum objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historic or artistic interest which have been accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax, together with information, where applicable, as to conditions or wishes expressed by testators or executors in the matter of allocation; and if he will list the works of art and museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, with the respective dates of their acceptance in satisfaction of inheritance tax.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 7 July 1994]: The information is as follows:

Item	To whom allocated	Condition/wishes
Two Vuillard paintings	Fitzwilliam Museum (Femme Assisse Tasse de Cafe) Ashmolean Museum (Le Dejeuner)	Unconditional
Haydn Manuscripts	National Trust	Conditional
Constable painting	Bristol City Art Gallery	Conditional

Gainsborough portrait	National Gallery	Conditional

Unallocated items	Date accepted
Hilliard miniature portrait	15 December 1993
J. F. Herring painting	15 December 1993
Wrest Park papers and albums	15 December 1993
Gomm furniture	17 February 1994
Ardizzone sketchbooks	31 March 1994
Lawrence portrait	31 March 1994
Three works by Picasso and one work by Klee	27 April 1994
George I silver kettle and stand	24 May 1994

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Andrew Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish the attendance figures for the financial year ended 31 March reported by the national museums and galleries for which he is responsible, broken down into the individual institutions, but including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for the preceding year.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 7 July 1994]: The information is as follows:

	Number of visitors in 1992-93 (millions)	Number of visitors in 1993-94 (millions)	Percentage Increase/ Decrease over the previous year
British Museum	6·914	6·027	−12·8
Imperial War Museum	1·148	1·191	+3·7
National Gallery	4·200	4·015	−4·4
National Maritime Museum	0·541	0·530	−2·0
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside	1·207	1·340	+11·0
National Portrait Gallery	0·563	0·792	+41·0
Natural History Museum	1·729	1·744	+0·9
Science Museum	2·579	2·671	+3·6
Tate Gallery	2·185	2·747	+26·0
Victoria and Albert Museum	1·454	1·577	+8·5
Wallace Collection	0·198	0·154	−22·0
Total	22·718	22·788	+0·3

It is not possible to identify the number of visitors to the Royal Armouries which at present forms part of the Tower of London.

Export Licences

Mr. Andrew Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art during the half-year ended 30 June specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; and if he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 7 July 1994]: The information is as follows:

Description of item	Valuation (£)	Outcome
A marble effigy of the Duchesse de Nemours, by Chapu, dated between 1881-1883	79,987·50	Purchased by the Walker Art Gallery which is part of the National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside
A pastel portrait of Caroline, 4th Duchess of Marlborough, by Gainsborough, c. 1767-72	236,919·00	Export licence granted
A painting, 'Saint Sebastian Succoured by Two Angels', by Guercino, 1617	400,000·00	Decision deferred until after 31 July 1994
A painting, 'The Miraculous Transportation of the Holy House of Loreto', by Tiepolo (1696-1770)	3,200,000·00	Export licence granted
A marble bust of Lady Harriet Pellew, by Thorwaldsen, 1817	170,404·00	Export licence granted
A drawing 'A Canephorous in profile to the left', by in Parmigianino (1503-1540)	90,000·00	Decision deferred until after 7 August 1994
An electroplated teapot, by James Dixon & Sons, designed by Dr. Christopher Dresser, 1879	68,812·50	Decision deferred until after 7 August 1994

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what is the extent of subsidy to nursery places and holiday playschemes; if his Department (a) subscribes to "Childcare Solutions" and (b) makes child care vouchers available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 7 July 1994]: In the 1993-94 financial year, this Department spent £1,650, excluding running costs, on child care. This provides one day care place in a nursery which opened in November 1993. In this instance the place is subsidised as it can be justified in value for money terms.

ENVIRONMENT

Habitat and Species Directive

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of the responses he has received following his consultation on the European habitat and species directive.

Mr. Atkins: Copies of the responses to my Department's consultation paper have already been placed in the Library.

Species at Risk

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many species of (a) animal and (b) plant, which are native to the United Kingdom, were considered to be at risk in (a) 1964, (b) 1973, (c) 1983 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, 39 British species or families of animal and 62 species of plant were protected in 1983, reflecting the Government's concern for those species at risk. In 1993, 94 species of animals were protected, and 168 species of plant. All wild birds in Britain are protected under the Act.

In Northern Ireland, all wild birds are protected under the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, with 17 vulnerable species of animal and 55 species of plant.

Data on species at risk for 1964 and 1973 are not readily available.

The lists of protected species may be reviewed and amended in responses to species' changing conservation status.

Water Pollution, Worcester

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received from Kay and Co. on the Worcestershire Water pollution incident; and what assessment he has made of the representations.

Mr. Atkins: A report on the water pollution incident in Worcestershire has been received from Kay and Co. In its continuing investigation of this incident, the drinking water inspectorate will assess the points raised in the report. In investigating an incident of this nature, the inspectorate needs to check each piece of information at source and obtain independent expert advice including on toxicology.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received from Kay and Co. on the Worcestershire water pollution incident; and what assessment he has made of the representations.

Mr. Atkins: A report on the water pollution incident in Worcestershire has been received from Kay and Co. In its continuing investigation of this incident, the drinking water inspectorate will assess the points raised in the report. In investigating an incident of this nature, the inspectorate needs to check each piece of information at source and obtain independent expert advice including on toxicology.

Westminster Council

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the press conference held by Mr. Magill on 11 January; and who meets it.

Mr. Baldry: I have no information on this point.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost to date of the investigation into Westminster by Mr. Magill; and who will cover the costs.

Mr. Baldry: I understand from the Audit Commission that the cost of Mr. Magill's investigation into Westminster up to January 1994 was approximately £1¼ million. This has been paid by Westminster city council.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how often a district auditor has called a press conference to announce provisional findings of an investigation; and what guidance is given in respect of the propriety of holding such conferences.

Mr. Baldry: I am not aware of any press conferences being given to announce an auditor's provisional findings and views, although I understand that press statements in such circumstances are common practice. This is a matter for the auditor's discretion; it is always open to him or her to take legal advice.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impartiality of Mr. Magill following the press conference on 11 January.

Mr. Baldry: This is not a matter for the Government. District auditors are appointed by the Audit Commission and are bound by the commission's code of audit practice, which imposes a duty of impartiality. However, I have no reason to believe that Mr. Magill is not acting impartially in his conduct of the investigation at Westminster city council.

Land Use

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many applications for a certificate of lawfulness of existing use or development have been refused by local authorities in England in each of the last five years;

(2) how many applications for a certificate of lawfulness of existing use or development have been accepted in England in each of the last five years.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available. Although local authorities provide my Department with quarterly statistics of planning applications and decisions, these do not differentiate applications for certificates of lawfulness of existing use or development and other kinds of planning application. Moreover, the legislation providing for such applications did not come into force until July 1992.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of funding currently avilable to the Energy Saving Trust for programmes of work in 1994-95; what is the source of these funds; and what further resources are expected to be made available during the current financial year.

Mr. Atkins: The Energy Saving Trust is an independent organisation, but I understand that its programmes for 1994-95 are as follows:

(a) The Trust's pilot scheme for local energy advice centres is expected to spend about £3m, derived from a variety of sources, including this Department;

(b) The Trust's pilot scheme to promote domestic combined heat and power is expected to spend about £1m. This is funded by British Gas out of a corresponding increase in gas tariff income approved by OFGAS. Similar funding for any further schemes developed by the Trust and put forward by British Gas will be subject to decision by OFGAS;

(c) Regional Electricity Companies (RECs) have been set energy efficiency targets by OFFER in consultation with the Trust, and may raise around £22m from electricity franchise customers in 1994-95 to fund energy efficiency schemes. The savings achieved by schemes will be calculated by a method proposed by the Trust, and the Trust are devising various national schemes which would help achieve those savings.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the European Union's funds, programmes or grants available for local authorities or others to apply for in respect of the regeneration of deprived and depressed areas; how these link to the single regeneration budget; and where details of all these funds, programmes or grants, including the criteria for successful applications, are made publicly available.

Mr. Baldry: The principal sources of European funding available to local authorities and others in respect of the regeneration of deprived and depressed areas are two of the European Community structural funds. These are the European regional development fund and European social fund. As grants from the structural funds normally contribute part of the total cost of a project, the single regeneration budget will provide an important source of matching funding. Both programmes will be administered by Government offices in the regions.

Regional plans for the Merseyside objective 1 area, covering 1994-99; objective 2—areas in industrial decline —for 1994-96; and objective 5b—rural areas—for 1994-99, are currently being considered by the European Commission. Once these have been agreed, the formal arrangements for considering project applications, such as selection criteria, can be determined. Details of EC regulations and decisions relating to the funds are published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, and information about programmes and guidance for applicants, can be obtained from the Government offices in the regions.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent changes have been made to the composition and remit of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

Mr. Atkins: All appointments to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, except three, end on 31 August 1994. An announcement about membership of the Committee will be made in due course.

Benefit Hostels

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government are yet in a position to say whether it will introduce a licensing system for benefit hostels.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on Friday 8 July, Official Report, column 327.

Dog Fouling

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to announce the recommendations of his Department's advisory group on litter on national legislation for dog fouling and the definition of dog mess as litter together with his response on a day on which the House is sitting before the end of July.

Mr. Atkins: I intend to publish before the recess the report of the Department's advisory group on litter as a consultation document and I shall be encouraging all interested parties to let me have their views on its recommendations.

Multiple Occupation Houses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many fire inspections of bed-sitters and houses in multiple occupation have taken place in each year since 1983.

Sir George Young: This information is not held centrally. Local housing authorities are responsible for inspecting houses in multiple occupation for fire safety and other purposes.

Captive Animals

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is his Department's policy to apply regulation 2(2) (a) of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992 in relation to the state of any flora or fauna in the definition of the environment to animals held in captivity for scientific purposes.

Mr. Atkins: Where information falls within the scope of the regulations my Department's policy is to make it available unless there are good reasons, related to the regulations, for not doing so.

Whether information about animals held in captivity for scientific purposes is environmental information is a mixed question of fact and law which would need to be determined on a case by case basis.

Ofwat

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his policy on the spending by Ofwat of money on hiring Government relations consultants to communicate with hon. Members or others;

(2) what reasons he has been given by the Director General of Ofwat for hiring Ludgate Land Government Relations in order to write to hon. Members; what was the cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: These are matters for the Director General of Water Services.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much grant in aid has been made available to each urban development corporation since 1981 as a cash sum (a) at current prices and (b) at 1981 prices.

Mr. Baldry: The amount of grant in aid made available to each urban development corporation between April 1981 and March 1994, (a) at current prices and (b) at 1981 prices, is set out in the table.

Grant in aid

£ millions

	[1]At current prices	[1]At 1981 prices
Birmingham Heartlands	14·9	29·5
Black Country	222·7	439·9
Bristol	64·1	126·6
Central Manchester	59·0	116·5
Leeds	44·7	88·3
London Docklands	1,280·2	2,528·2
Merseyside	229·6	453·5
Plymouth	7·4	14·6
Sheffield	65·1	128·6
Teesside	206·2	407·3
Trafford Park	133·7	263·9
Tyne and Wear	197·8	390·6

[1] Actual grant in aid paid to urban development corporations has been adjusted in line with Her Majesty's Treasury's GDP Deflator Indices. Current prices are 1994-95 prices.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table showing the running costs of his Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Gummer: Information in the form requested is not available, but details of total running costs between 1987 and 1994 are published in the Department's annual reports.

Pollution Control

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide guidance to local planning authorities on the relationship between planning and pollution controls.

Mr. Curry: I have today published planning policy guidance note 23 "Planning and Pollution Control", which clarifies the roles of the planning and pollution control systems. This stresses the need to avoid duplication of controls while improving dialogue between the different regulatory bodies. It provides guidance on the relevant issues planning authorities should consider in drawing up their development plans and in determining planning applications for certain industrial development proposals.

It builds on the long-established policy that planning should not duplicate other legislative controls. We have significantly strengthened our pollution control systems in recent years. Planning authorities should therefore focus on the wider land-use implications of proposed development leaving the control of emissions to pollution control authorities.

Trees (Environmental Damage)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the damage to Britain's trees caused by (a) ozone smogs and (b) acid rain.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 28 June 1994]: An assessment of the impact of air pollution on tree health in the United Kingdom was made in the terrestrial environment review group's second report, produced for my Department and published in April 1993. A copy of the report is available in the Library of the House. My Department's critical loads advisory group and photochemical oxidants review group are currently engaged in a further assessment of the impacts of both acidic deposition and ozone on trees in the United Kingdom.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 8 July 1994]: To the best of my knowledge, there have been no occasions over the last 10 years on which Ministers of this Department have given a direction to award a contract against the advice of the civil service.

Written Answers to Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Ten O'clock Rule

Mr. Walden: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 628, if he will make an assessment of the suitability to current conditions of the Ten o'clock rule.

Mr. Newton: Although I am having discussions with the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) about the sittings of the House, I do not envisage putting forward proposals to change Ten o'clock as the normal end to the main parliamentary day. Nor was such a change envisaged in the report of the Select Committee on Sittings of the House, though it was an aim of that report's proposals that Members should more frequently be able to leave for their constituencies after about seven o'clock on Thursdays.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

BBC Television Archives

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate he has made of the cost to the BBC of digitising its television archives.

Mr. Brooke: None. The format in which the BBC keeps its archives is a matter for the corporation.

Longford Hall

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, column 976, if he will list the items of work which English Heritage indicated needed to be carried out within six months of its report on Longford hall, Stretford, to maintain the building in its then existing condition; which works were carried out; and which were not.

Mr. Brooke: Works carried out to Longford hall by Trafford metropolitan borough council in December 1993 to January 1994 comprised structural repairs to the Derby room and the south-east corner of the building, repairs to the roof, gutters and drainpipes, rot treatment of walls and floors within the basement to the rear of the original building and the ground floor above and the insertion of ventilation grilles and the removal of debris. Security works were also carried out last year. These were the only works of those in English Heritage's report dated 9 June 1993 which related to the original building and which were also necessary to preserve that part of the building pending a decision by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on its future.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gordon McNally

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasion prior to November 1991 he was present at functions where Mr. Gordon McNally was present.

The Prime Minister: None, so far as I am aware.

Coastguard Service

Ms Walley: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has held about the Department of Transport's proposed efficiency savings for the Coastguard Service; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have had no such discussions. However, as I stated on 7 July 1994, Official Report, column 446, in response to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has discussed with the chief executive of the Coastguard Agency the proposals he put forward in response to my right hon. Friend's target, that the Department as a whole should achieve a 20 per cent. efficiency gain. My right hon. Friend has not yet taken any decisions on these proposals.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 12 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 12 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

The Prime Minister: None of the organisations, agencies or other bodies under my departmental responsibility have been privatised since 1990. Plans for privatisation involving my departments will be considered on their merits as part of a prior options exercise and the results will be announced as appropriate.

Ukraine

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of 20 June, Official Report, column 11, if he will make a statement on discussions at the G7 summit in relation to nuclear technical assistance to the Government of the Ukraine.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my statement on the Group of Seven summit in Naples on 11 July 1994, Official Report, columns 667-69.

Former Members of Parliament

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the former hon. Members who were defeated in the last two general elections who have since become members of quangos and other organisations to which the Government nominates; and if he will state the organisation to which the former hon. Members were nominated, the duties undertaken and the salary.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally.

Ministerial Visits

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Prime Minister how many overseas visits have been made in 1994 by Ministers; during how many of them Ministers participated in fund-raising activities for the Conservative party; who were those Ministers; and in which countries those activities took place.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 4 July 1994]: As far as I am aware, Ministers made 287 overseas visits in their official capacity between 1 January and 30 June 1994. None of those was undertaken for purposes of fundraising for the Conservative party. No central record is kept of any occasions on which Ministers may have attended fundraising events which were incidental to their visit.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judges

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what specific measures he is taking to improve the forecasting of numbers and particular expertise needed at different levels of the judiciary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Circuits will be required to identify the number of vacancies which are expected to arise a year in advance of the financial year in which they will occur. Based on changes in work load, retirements and other factors they will be expected to identify the number and location of the likely vacancies. This will enable vacancies to be advertised well in advance and appropriate individuals to be identified to fill them quickly as and when they arise.

The Department is also developing an information system to determine the future number of High Court judges needed at any one time, having regard to the need to maintain the High Court bench as a compact collegiate body.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many responses he has received to his consultation paper "Developments in Judicial Appointments Procedures".

Mr. John M. Taylor: Some 22 responses had been received as at 7 July 1994.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total number of judges serving at 31 March as (a) High Court judges, (b) circuit judges, (c) district judges, (d) masters and registrars of the Supreme Court and district judges of the principal registry of the family division, (e) metropolitan stipendiary magistrates, (f) provincial stipendiary magistrates, (g) recorder and (h) assistant recorders; and how many in each are (i) part-time appointments, (ii) women, (iii) black and (iv) Asian.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of office holders as at 31 March 1994 is set out in the table. All the posts listed are full time except recorders and assistant recorders. The figures for black or Asian office-holders are believed to be correct, but arrangements for the formal recording of the ethnic origin of applicants for judicial office only began on 1 October 1991, so such information may be incomplete. In any event, the figures do not include those of other ethnic minority origin.

	Total	Women	Black	Asian
High Court Judges	95	6	—	—
Circuit Judges (includes Official Referees)	510	29	—	3
District Judges (excludes District Judges of the Principal Registry of the Family Division)	290	25	—	1
Masters and Registrars of the Supreme Court and District Judges of the Principal Registry of the Family Division	49	6	—	—
Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrates	46	6	—	—
Provincial Stipendiary Magistrates	34	2	—	1
Recorders	866	38	4	5
Assistant Recorders (excludes Assistant Recorders in Training)	385	58	6	2

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of (a) High Court judges, (b) circuit judges and (c) district judges in office on 31 March had served in the present posts at this level (i) for less than a year, (ii) for less than five years, (iii) for more than 10 years and (iv) for 20 years or more.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information relating to 31 March is not readily available. However, the percentages for the different periods of service, together with, in brackets, the relevant number of judges, as at 6 July 1994 is set out in the table below. Column B includes the figures in column A. Similarly, column C includes the figures in column D. Percentages are rounded to the nearest whole figure.

	A Less than 1 Year Per cent.		B Less than 5 Years Per cent.		C More than 10 Years Per cent.		D More than 20 Years Per cent.
High Court Judges	15	(14)	52	(49)	15	(14)	1	(1)
Circuit Judges	9	(46)	43	(220)	26	(132)	4	(21)
District Judges (including District Judges of Principal Registry of the Family Division)	12	(37)	44	(139)	34	(107)	6	(20)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judges have retired on health grounds since June 1979.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There have been 48 such retirements since June 1979.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consideration he is giving to the suggestion of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice that judicial performance should be more closely monitored.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Royal Commission's recommendations numbered 249 and 251 remain under active consideration by the Lord Chancellor in consultation with the senior judiciary and the chairman of the Judicial Studies Board. The recommendations have to be set in the context of the essential constitutional principle of the independence of the judiciary from the Executive and from each other. Any measures taken must have full regard to this overriding principle. The Government will respond to these two recommendations when their consideration of these difficult issues is complete.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the expected number of working days per year for each category of judge in England and Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: District judges are expected to sit 215 or more days per year. Circuit judges are expected to sit 210 or more days per year. High Court judges and judges of the Court of Appeal usually sit throughout the legal terms, 189 days, but may well sit outside those times. There is no expected number of working days for the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what parallel category of civil servants is used by the Top Salaries Review Body as a relevant basis for considering salary scales for the judiciary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Under the revised terms of reference which were introduced in July 1993 at its request, the Senior Salaries Review Body is required, when making recommendations, to have regard to the need to maintain broad linkages between the remuneration of the three main remit groups, while allowing sufficient flexibility to take account of the circumstance of each group.

The two linkages which presently exist between the judiciary and the senior civil service are between High Court judges and civil servants at grade 1 level, and between the Cabinet Secretary and the Lord Chief Justice.

In its 1994 report, the SSRB recommended that the practice of offering identical salaries across the remit groups should be discontinued in future years provided that, in accordance with its terms of reference, the review body ensures that a broad linkage is maintained. The Government have accepted that recommendation.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) under what circumstances a member of the judiciary can be dismissed;

(2) how many members of the judiciary have been dismissed (a) since June 1979 and (b) since May 1965 as of 31 March;

(3) what are the current disciplinary procedures for members of the judiciary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The independence of the judiciary is a fundamental principle of the constitution and is protected by the provisions governing judicial tenure. Lords of Appeal in Ordinary and Supreme Court judges may be removed by Her Majesty only on an address presented by both Houses of Parliament. Circuit judges may be removed by the Lord Chancellor on the grounds of incapacity or misbehaviour. The statutory provisions governing the removal from office of other members of the judiciary vary, but in general relate similarly to incapacity or misbehaviour, or the equivalent. One circuit judge was removed from office on the ground of misbehaviour in 1983. No other instance of removal from full-time judicial office since 1965 is known.

Given the independence of the judiciary, it is not generally open to the Lord Chancellor to comment on, or intervene in, decisions or comments made, or the conduct of legal proceedings, by a judge in the exercise of his judicial functions. The appropriate recourse in relation to such matters lies in the available processes of appeal or review. Subject to this overriding principle, where a question about the conduct of a judicial office holder is raised with the Lord Chancellor, he may see fit to seek the comments of the office holder concerned before considering what, if any, course of action he should take within the powers available to him.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what was the total number of judges serving in all categories as of 31 March;

(2) what was the total number of judges serving in all categories employed (a) full-time and (b) part-time as of 31 March.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total number of full-time judges at 31 March 1994 is set out in the following table:

	Number
Lords of Appeal in Ordinary	10
Heads of Division (excluding Lord Chancellor)	4
Lords Justices of Appeal	29
High Court Judges	95
Circuit Judges	510
District Judges (including District Judges of the Principal Registry of the Family Division)	308
Total	956

At 31 March 1994, some 185 practitioners had been authorised to sit as deputy High Court judges, 43 retired judges had been appointed to sit as deputy circuit judges and 745 practitioners and retired district judges were authorised to sit as deputy district judges. Some 866 practitioners were authorised to sit as recorders and 385 as assistant recorders. In addition, certain retired Supreme Court judges and Lords of Appeal in Ordinary are also willing to sit from time to time. There are other part-time judicial office-holders.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what information he has on the social class origins of current members of the judiciary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No information is held on the social class origins of current members of the judiciary. Aggregated information relating to the educational background of the judiciary is not readily available. The Lord Chancellor's policy is to appoint to judicial office, entirely on merit, those who satisfy the relevant statutory conditions for appointments and are considered best qualified to fill the posts.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judges currently serving would, if they retired at 70 years of age, leave after fewer than 20 years' service.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The table sets out the numbers of judges in office on 6 July 1994 who would have served in full-time judicial office in the United Kingdom for fewer than 20 years if they were to retire on their 70th birthday and, in the case of those already over 70, the numbers who had completed fewer than 20 years service by that date. The figures take into account previous service in other full-time judicial offices in this country, except in the case of serving circuit judges where information relating to earlier service is not readily available. The total numbers of judges in post on 6 July 1994 are shown in brackets.

	Number
Lords of Appeal in Ordinary	3 (10)
Supreme Court Judges	87 (128)
Circuit Judges	254 (510)
District Judges[1]	56 (313)

[1] Including District Judges of Principal Registry of the Family Division).

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what specific measures he is taking to increase the number of judges moving from the High Court family division to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Appointments to the Court of Appeal are made by the Queen on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. Before making his recommendations, the Prime Minister receives advice from the Lord Chancellor. The Lord Chancellor's advice on appointments to the Court of Appeal is based on the operational needs of the Court of Appeal and the suitability of the available candidates. He does not envisage special measures to increase the number of judges promoted to the Court of Appeal from the family division of the High Court.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to abolish judicial tenure.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. The role of the judiciary is to administer justice in accordance with the laws of England and Wales without fear or favour, affection or ill will. In order to do so, judges must be independent. Security of tenure for the judiciary as established by the Act of Settlement and subsequent statutory provisions is essential in maintaining and supporting the principle of judicial independence.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) if he will list the publications which will carry judicial advertisements; and on what basis those national publications will be chosen;

(2) when he expects to report on the results of his consultation on the judicial appointments system;

(3) in implementing the proposals in his consultation paper, in what circumstances he will disregard an interview panel's recommendations in favour of alternative information;

(4) if he will continue to take soundings regarding judicial appointments; and if these will be used to determine the short listing of applicants for posts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 4 July, Official Report, column 1. The consultation paper "Developments in Judicial Appointments Procedures" proposes that the interview panel's recommendations will constitute only one element of the information which the Lord Chancellor will have at his disposal, but that it will be a valuable and important one to which he will attach appropriate weight. The consultation paper also emphasises the Lord Chancellor's commitment to the continuation of the systematic collection of views and opinions about candidates and their work from a wide spread of judges and senior practitioners who are in a position to assess them. No decision has yet been taken in respect of the publications in which any advertisements might appear.

The Lord Chancellor is now considering the responses received to the consultation paper and will make an announcement as soon as practicable.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) High Court judges, (b) circuit judges and (c) district judges in office on 31 March received university education at Oxford or Cambridge.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Aggregated information relating to the university background of judges is not readily available, but the results of a special exercise carried out last year showed that at 1st January 1993, 68—81 per cent. —of the then 84 High Court judges had attended Oxford or Cambridge universities. The special exercise showed that the equivalent figure for the then 482 circuit judges was 261—54 per cent. The survey did not extend to district judges.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what considerations underlie his proposal that judges should serve 20 years to qualify for a pension.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The requirement that judges should serve 20 years to qualify for full pension benefits is contained in the new pensions scheme under the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993. This is to allow the judicial pension scheme to conform to the taxation requirements which now apply to all other private and public sector pension schemes as a result of the Finance Acts 1987 and 1989 and the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judges have retired on health grounds with fewer than 20 years' service since (a) June 1979 and (b) April 1992.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There have been 47 such retirements since June 1979, of which four have taken place since April 1992. These figures refer to Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, judges of the Supreme Court, circuit judges and district judges.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the pay scale of each category of judge in England and Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The salaries of the judges in England and Wales are as follows:

Lord Chancellor	120,179
Lord Chief Justice	118,179
Lords of Appeal	—
Master of the Rolls	109,435
Lords Justices of Appeal	—
President of the Family Division	—
Vice-Chancellor	104,922
High Court Judges	95,051
Official Referees	—
Senior Circuit Judges	82,641
Circuit Judges	—
Senior District Judge	69,497
District Judges	56,974

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many barristers have declined to become High Court judges in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: The numbers of barristers who have declined to allow their names to be recommended to Her Majesty the Queen for immediate appointment to the High Court bench in England and Wales in recent years are set out below. All those who declined, with one exception, have made it clear that they hope to be considered again for appointment to the High Court bench in the future. Numbers before 1988 are not readily available.

	Number
1988-89	—
1989-90	—
1990-91	—
1991-92	1
1992-93	6
1993-94	2
[1]1994-95	—

[1] To date.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what legislative action would be necessary for the changes he announced on 7 July 1993 to the judicial appointment system to take effect.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what specific consideration he is giving to the establishment of a judicial appointments commission.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. It remains the Government's view that the establishment of such a commission would impair direct ministerial accountability to Parliament for judicial appointments. Moreover, the Government have yet to hear any convincing argument that the quality of those appointed by a Commission would be likely to be any better than that of those appointed under present arrangements.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of each category of judge in office on 31 March were (a) under 50, (b) 50 to 60, (c) 60 to 70 and (d) over 70 years of age.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information relating to 31 March is not readily available. The information as at 6 July 1994 is set out in the table below. The age bands have been adjusted in the table to prevent double counting.

	Under 50	50-59	60-70	71 and over
Lords of Appeal in Ordinary	0	0	8	2
Supreme Court Judges	8	55	63	2
Circuit Judges	66	233	201	10
District Judges (including District Judges of the Principal Registry of the Family Division)	118	123	72	0

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) High Court judges, (b) circuit judges and (c) district judges in office at 31 March were appointed (i) as a result of promotion within the judiciary, (ii) as practising barristers, (iii) as practising solicitors and (iv) after serving on the High Court family division.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Thirteen of the 95 High Court judges in office on 31 March 1994 were appointed as a result of promotion within the full-time judiciary. One was previously an Advocate-General at the Court of Justice of the European Communities. The remaining 81 were appointed from the Bar, including two barristers who were not in private practice. One Chancery division judge and five Queen's bench division judges had previously served as judges in the family division of the High Court.

The complete information relating to circuit judges is not readily available. Of the 510 circuit judges in office on 31 March 1994, 450 had been barristers and 60 had been solicitors: these figures include those who were appointed to the circuit bench from other full-time judicial offices.

No district judges in office on 31 March 1994 were appointed as a result of promotion within the full-time judiciary. Of the 308 district judges then in office, including district judges of the principal registry of the family division, 296 were appointed from solicitors, including academic and employed solicitors, and 12 from the practising Bar.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received following his proposals that judges will have to serve 20 years to qualify for a pension.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The requirement that judges should serve 20 years to qualify for full pension benefits is introduced by the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993. Responses to the proposals in the consultation paper issued before the passing of the 1993 Act were received from the following groups or individuals, in order of receipt:

The President of the Pension Appeal Tribunal
The Judge Advocate General
The President of Social Security Appeal Tribunals and Medical Appeal Tribunals
The Council of Her Majesty's Circuit Judges
Sir Bryan Roberts KCMG
The Senior Master, Queen's Bench Division
The Chief Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate
The President of Industrial Tribunals
The Senior District Judge, Family Division
His Honour Judge Micklem
The Association of District Judges

The Provincial Stipendiary Magistrates
The Judges' Council
The Top Salaries Review Body
The Chief Taxing Master
The Chief Chancery Master
The Master of the Court of Protection
The Chief Social Security Commissioner
The Chief Immigration Adjudicator
The General Council of the Bar
The Law Society

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many copies of his consultation paper "Developments in Judicial Appointments Procedures" were sent to laypersons, as defined in the paper itself.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Approximately 700 copies of the consultation paper have been distributed to organisations and individuals including the National Consumer Council, the National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux, the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Commission for Racial Equality. Copies were also sent to any who requested them from my Department. It is not possible to determine how many of these are not lawyers.

High Court Bench (Solicitors)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many solicitors have been appointed to the High Court bench since section 71 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 came into force.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since section 71 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 came into force on 1 January 1991, one solicitor, who was a serving circuit judge, has been appointed to the High Court bench.

Legal Training

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what responsibilities he has relating to legal training.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's role is governed by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990. Under that Act, amendments made by authorised bodies to their rules and regulations require the approval of the Lord Chancellor and the four designated judges. The Lord Chancellor is also required to approve applications under section 55 of the 1990 Act—preparation of probate papers—and, in doing so, must be satisfied about the arrangements for training.

Judicial Posts (Election)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to hold elections for any judicial posts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. The Government do not believe that election would provide a suitable basis for appointment or be compatible with the principle of judicial independence. The Lord Chancellor's proposals for developments in the judicial appointments system were set out in a recent consultation paper. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 4 July, Official Report, column 1.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. A number of the functions of the departments, agencies and other bodies for which the Lord Chancellor is responsible are currently under review. Privatisation will be considered as one of a range of possible options. At present, no firm plans have been made concerning any of the functions under review.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Nigeria (Extradition)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the immigration or residency status of Colonel Tony Nyiam and Great Ogboru, formerly of Nigeria; what requests he received in respect of the extradition of those individuals following the failed military coup in Nigeria in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not our normal policy to disclose information relating to a person's immigration status, but no extradition requests in respect of these two individuals have been received.

May Inquiry

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the cost of the May inquiry into the Guildford and Woolwich bombings.

Mr. Maclean: The total reported costs of this inquiry, as at 7 July, is £2,150,000.

Ms Emma Humphreys

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will ask the Parole Board to reconsider its position regarding a release date for Ms Humphreys;

(2) what representation he has received concerning the case of Ms Emma Humphreys who is currently serving a life sentence at Holloway prison;

(3) what consultations he has had with the Parole Board about its recent refusal to grant Ms Humphreys a date for release or to move her to an open prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not the practice of the Secretary of State to consult the independent Parole Board when the board decides not to recommend the release or the transfer to open prison conditions of a prisoner serving the mandatory life sentence for murder. The Secretary of State has not consulted the Parole Board in the case of Ms Humphreys and sees no grounds for asking the Parole Board to reconsider its recent decision in her case. A further Parole Board review of her suitability for release will begin in May 1995.

From time to time, the Secretary of State has received representations about the safety of Ms Humphreys's conviction for murder. Those representations have not provided sufficient grounds for him to refer her case to the Court of Appeal under section 17 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968. Representations made by Ms Humphreys concerning her release on life licence were considered by the Parole Board when it last reviewed her case in May 1994.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many towns and cities there are known to be proposals to introduce closed circuit television for crime prevention;

(2) how many city centres now have closed circuit television for crime prevention; and what is his assessment of its effectiveness.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The most recent information available indicates that across the United Kingdom there are 220 CCTV schemes either in operation or planned. Local assessments show that CCTV systems have been extremely effective in reducing crime and the fear of crime in a number of areas, particularly when they have formed part of a package of crime prevention measures. A current Home Office study of the effectiveness of the Birmingham city centre system is being extended to include schemes in other areas.

Refugees and Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to diminish waiting times for asylum seekers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: With the implementation of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 last July, procedures have been streamlined and decision times reduced for applications received after implementation, which are being given priority. The new procedures and the level of applications are being closely monitored.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has made for the Vietnamese refugees in response to the Home Office report on refugees and asylum seekers;

(2) what plans he has made in response to the Home Office report on refugees and asylum seekers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The report of the first stage of the research into refugee settlement, which is currently being revised, does not contain specific policy recommendations. The report on the second stage, which includes Vietnamese refugees within its scope, is being prepared and has not yet been seen by Ministers. When completed, any findings which might have policy implications will receive careful consideration.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fires in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland, (d) England and (e) the United Kingdom as a whole occurred in houses or buildings which did not have smoke detectors in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The year 1994 is the first year in which the Home Office has collected data on the presence or absence of a smoke alarm in a fire attended by a local authority fire brigade. Before 1994, the Home Office collected only whether or not the fire was discovered by a smoke alarm.

Uninsured Drivers

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those convicted of driving without insurance received a fine of £5,000 last year.

Mr. Maclean: The information available to me shows that no fines of £5,000 were imposed during 1992 for driving without insurance. Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drivers have been disqualified from driving after having been convicted of driving without insurance in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The following table gives the available information which relates to the number of convictions for driving without insurance in England and Wales, for which disqualification from driving was imposed. The number of persons involved is likely to be less because some may have been convicted for more than one of these offences.

Disqualifications imposed for the offence of driving without insurance

Year	Number
1988	18,045
1989	18,747
1990	17,569
1991	19,531
1992	20,727

Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Prison Population

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) convicted and (b) remand prisoners are currently in custody from Wales (i) by county, (ii) by sex and (iii) in total.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewes to Mr. Allan Rogers, dated 12 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions asking how many (a) convicted and (b) remand prisoners are currently in custody from Wales (i) by county, (ii) by sex and (iii) in total.

The available provisional information is for 31 May 1994 and is given in the attached table. It relates to the population in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales who were recorded centrally as being first committed to custody by a Welsh court. Those persons for whom no court first committing was recorded accounted for five per cent. of the total population in custody, excluding those held in police cells and non-criminal prisoners.

Chief Superintendent Rank

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against retaining the rank of chief superintendent within the police force; if he will make it his policy to retain the rank of chief superintendent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government's decision to abolish the rank of chief superintendent and reallocate the range of current responsibilities of that rank within a restructured single superintendent rank is opposed by the superintendents' associations. Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary supports the reform of the superintending rank, and the Association of Chief Police Officers favours the retention of the rank of chief inspector rather than that of chief superintendent.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Howard: DTELS—formerly the Directorate of Telecommunications—was sold to National Telecommunications Ltd. on 1 March 1994. Epsom, Kempton Park and Sandown Park racecourses were sold by the Horserace Betting Levy Board on 29 April 1994 to Racecourse Holdings Trust. There are no firm plans for further privatisations.

Young Offenders

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision he plans for the accommodation of young offenders in Wales following the decision to send offenders aged 12 years and over to secure units and to cease to send boys aged 15 and 16 years to prison; if he will make it his policy that such offenders will not be sent outside Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Five new secure training centres are to be established for the purpose of detaining those 12 to 14-year-old juveniles who may be sentenced to serve the new secure training order. The centres will hold offenders sentenced by the courts in England and Wales, but on present plans, none will be located in Wales.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has already announced a grant amounting to £5·1 million to meet the capital cost of a new local authority secure unit at Neath in west Glamorgan. In due course, it is intended that the unit should accommodate inter alios most 15 and 16-year-old juveniles residing in Wales who may in future be remanded to local authority accommodation with a security requirement instead of to a Prison Service establishment, as well as those whose detention is ordered under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and who it is decided should be held in child care establishments.

Police Training

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources the Government intend to make available to the police service to enable adequate training to be given to all police staff as a result of the enactments of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill and the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 11 July 1994]: It is for individual chief officers to arrange, out of normal police funds, for the training of their officers, having regard to any relevant changes in legislation. Any requirements for centrally produced training material will be considered within the Police Training Council.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the amounts spent by the police on training in all areas in each of the last five years at 1990 constant prices.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 11 July 1994]: I regret that this information is not available.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Homes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 492, what has been (a) the total number of newly built council homes and (b) that number as a percentage of the stock, in each council area for the period since 1 April 1979.

Sir George Young: A table has been deposited in the Library showing the cumulative total of housebuilding completions for each local authority in England as reported by them for the period between 1 April 1979 and 31 March 1994. The table also shows this housebuilding as a percentage of the local authority dwelling stock reported as at 1 April 1993, and as estimated for 1 April 1979. Housing associations are now the main providers of new social housing.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by the Local Government Commission to date on opinion polling; and what assessment he has made of the usefulness of such polling.

Mr. Curry: The cost of opinion polling carried out for the Local Government Commission during the course of its reviews is a matter for the commission itself, within its overall budget. It is also for the commission itself to determine the value of those public opinion surveys.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the Local Government Commission has spent on direct communication with the public where it invites replies via freepost.

Mr. Curry: This is a matter for the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what formula the Local Government Commission uses to assess the intangible costs and benefits of local government reconstruction in North Yorkshire.

Mr. Baldry: Section 3 of the revised policy guidance which my Department issued to the Local Government Commission in November 1993 gives advice on the treatment of intangible costs and benefits. How the commission incorporates this advice into its recommendations on particular review areas is a matter for it.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hours per week Sir John Banham devotes to the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Curry: The time commitment of the chairman varies from month to month, according to the demands of the review timetable. He works on average two days a week.

Cemfuel

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy prior to the issue of any variation order to authorisation AI 2813 of 17 November 1993 made under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and issued for the burning of Cemfuel that he will engage in consultations with the cement company.

Mr. Atkins: I am advised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution that the authorisation AI 2813 relates to the burning of Cemfuel at Castle Cement's Ribblesdale works. The HMIP is in consultation with the company over a variation to this authorisation. No variation has yet been issued.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what circumstances an existing authorisation for the burning of Cemfuel might be subject to a variation order from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution such that the burning of the fuel would again be put on a trial basis.

Mr. Atkins: An existing authorisation for the burning of Cemfuel might be subject to a variation order from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to put the burning onto a trial basis if, in the light of up-to-date experience, the conditions attached to the authorisation were seen not to provide sufficient information to monitor the environmental effects of the burning.

Biological Diversity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the second session of the intergovernmental committee of the United Nations Convention on Biological Diversity held in Nairobi in June.

Mr. Atkins: The second meeting of the intergovernmental committee of the United Nations Convention on Biological Diversity took place in Nairobi from 20 June to 1 July 1994. Progress was made to prepare for the first meeting of the conference of the parties to be held in Nassau, the Bahamas from 28 November to 9 December 1994. The meeting reached consensus on important administrative and procedural issues for the conference of the parties, including most of the rules of procedure, a set of administrative financial rules and criteria for an open competition between organisations to host the permanent secretariat. Preliminary discussions took place on other substantive issues that the conference of the parties will consider, including the financial mechanism, biosafety, a clearing house mechanism and the scientific and technical subsidiary body.

Waste

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the proportionate contribution of each category of waste arising to the total waste generated in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The table shows the best available estimates of waste arisings, by sector. Most of the estimates are very approximate, and relate to the period around 1990. It is not possible to update them on an annual basis.

Estimated total annual waste arisings by sector

Local Councillors

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what circumstances it is possible for a person to be an employee of a local authority to which he is, or may consider becoming, an elected member.

Mr. Baldry: Under the provisions of section 80 of the Local Government Act 1972 a person who is employed by a local authority is disqualified from being elected to, or being a member of, that local authority. Under section 116, a person cannot be employed by an authority for 12 months after he or she ceases to be a member.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the degree of influence which the United Nations Commission for Sustainable Development has on (a) the World bank and (b) The International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Atkins: At its meeting in May, the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development agreed to aim at a more fruitful co-operation with the Bretton Woods institutions to promote sustainable development through sound macro-economic policies and a favourable international economic environment.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will urge the World Trade Organisation to allow the United Nations Commission for Sustainable Development to be represented at meetings of its committee on trade and the environment.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom fully supports the case for admitting the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development as an observer to the committee on trade and environment, to be established in the World Trade Organisation.

Housing Association Grants

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to amplify his advice to local planning authorities on sustainable development contained in PPG13; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend proposes to publish a good practice guide to PPG13 later this year. Together with the Department of Transport, my Department will also commission and publish research designed to improve our understanding of the relationship between transport and land use and will monitor the implementation of the policies contained in PPG13 through development plans, local transport policies and individual decisions.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps his Department will take to mitigate the effect on tenants on low incomes of changes in housing association grant rates for 1995-96;

(2) if he will make a statement regarding the changes in housing association grant rates for 1995-96.

Sir George Young: Decisions on the housing association grant rates that will apply in 1995-96 have not yet been taken. Before reaching a decision, I shall carefully consider the implications of lower grant rates on a range of issues, including the likely impact on the rents that tenants have to pay.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many complaints he has received about the operation of the Mobile Homes Act 1983 through harassment by landlords.

Sir George Young: From time to time, this Department receives letters from mobile home residents alleging harassment by site owners. Although we do not keep a numerical record of such complaints, they do not form a significant proportion of the correspondence we receive on mobile home issues. Harassment of an occupier of a mobile home can constitute a criminal offence under the Protection from Eviction Act 1977.

Environmental Protection Group (Newsletter)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he published his Department's most recent environmental protection group research newsletter; how many copies were printed; at what cost; and to whom it has been distributed or made available.

Mr. Atkins: The 1994-95 environmental protection group research newsletter was first published in April 1994. To date, 800 copies have been printed, at a cost of £578·13. The newsletter is available on request and has been sent to organisations within both the public and private sector as well as to individual members of the public.

Council Tax

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce a decision regarding council tax liability for severely mentally impaired people.

Mr. Curry: We are still considering this matter.

National Forest Strategy

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to implement the national forest strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The national forest is an ambitious and imaginative environmental project to create a new forest in the heart of the country, in an area where much of the land has been despoiled by mineral working. The consultation exercise carried out earlier this year by the Countryside Commission confirmed that there is overwhelming local support for the venture. I am now announcing my intention to set up a new lead body to take the project forward.

The establishment of this body marks a milestone towards achieving our manifesto commitment to development of the national forest. The forest will bring many benefits to the area through improved landscapes and other environmental benefits, economic and leisure opportunities. It is an excellent example of sustainable development—environmental improvement which will also bring economic regeneration. In the longer term the forest will provide a national asset of the same kind as the ancient forest of Dean or the New forest, to be enjoyed by future generations.

The Countryside Commission national forest development team has provided a firm foundation for the new body to build on. The creation of the forest will require the participation of several partners, including the Forestry Commission, the Countryside Commission, local authorities and private landowners. A new independent body will be able to co-ordinate and promote new partnerships and act as a catalyst for local and national initiatives in the forest area.

The body will be a company limited by guarantee. The members of the company will be myself and my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. We shall appoint a chairman and directors in due course. It is my intention to seek parliamentary approval, through an amendment to section 153 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, to provide financial support for the company's administration and special project initiatives.

Our long-term aim for the forest is to create new woodlands covering about one third of the 200 square mile area. All the planting in the forest will be voluntary. There is no question of compulsory land purchase. In addition to forest planting, the body will encourage the development of leisure and recreation, rural enterprise, habitat protection, restoration of mineral workings and community involvement. These ventures will be funded through the body's project funds and through existing forestry and other grant mechanisms.

Compulsory Purchase Order (Hastings)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he hopes to announce his decision on the Hastings Central Cricket and Recreation Ground Compulsory Purchase Order 1993.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend announced today his decision to confirm the compulsory purchase order and to issue the associated certificate relating to exchange land.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what levels of borrowing have been undertaken by each urban development corporation in each year since 1981.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The level of borrowing undertaken by each urban development corporation in each year since 1981 is as follows:

Urban development corporation	Amount (£)	Year
Birmingham Heartlands	Nil	—
Black Country	Nil	—
Bristol	Nil	—
Central Manchester	350,000	1992-93
Leeds	Nil	—
London Docklands	Nil	—
Merseyside	184,700	1982-83
Merseyside	130,000	1983-84
Merseyside	125,000	1984-85
Merseyside	605,000	1985-86
Merseyside	55,000	1986-87
Plymouth	Nil	—
Sheffield	Nil	—
Teesside	276,500	1987-88
Trafford Park	Nil	—
Tyne and Wear	Nil	—

Urban and Regeneration Expenditure

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount of urban and regeneration expenditure listed for each separate urban programme area in each year since 1980-81 at (a) cash prices and (b) current prices.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 4 July 1994]: Tables showing urban programme expenditure in cash and current price terms will be placed in the Library.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Contracting Out

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on the progress of the private sector advisory forum; and what further plans he has for strategic contracting out of civil service functions.

Mr. Waldegrave: The private sector forum met on 8 July to discuss issues emerging from the competing for quality programme. The forum provided an opportunity for the Government and the private sector to exchange experience on the progress of the competing for quality programme so far. No individual market tests were discussed, nor any specifics of Departments' future plans. We will be considering how to take these discussions forward with the private sector. I do not prejudge whether an activity should be contracted out strategically. For each activity which is examined in the competing for quality programme, a number of options, including abolition, privatisation, contracting out, market testing with an in-house bid, and securing in-house efficiencies are considered.

Efficiency Unit Scrutiny

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received the report of the efficiency unit scrutiny of Government research establishments; and if he will ensure its publication before the end of July.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report on the efficiency scrutiny of civil public sector research establishments was published yesterday, 11 July. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the full report of the efficiency unit's scrutiny of the use of consultants in Government Departments will be published; and whether the unit intends to draw up good practice guidance for Departments along the lines of that issued recently by the Audit Commission to local authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report of the efficiency unit's scrutiny on the Government's use of external consultants will be published shortly. It is a key task of the efficiency unit to disseminate "best practice" to Departments and agencies, and the scrutiny is likely to make recommendations which will assist in sharing and promoting good practice in the purchasing and managing of external consultancy.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Waldegrave: None of the organisations, agencies or other bodies under my departmental responsibility has been privatised since 1990. Plans for privatisation involving my departments will be considered on their merits as part of a prior options exercise and the results will be announced as appropriate.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the next steps that he will propose to the European Union for a resolution of the crisis in Greek-Macedonian relationships.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Member states of the European Union regularly discuss the dispute between Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. We support the European Commission's action in referring to the European Court of Justice the unjustified trade restrictions placed by Greece on the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. We were disappointed by the Court's decision not to indicate interim measures, although the main case continues. We support the United Nations mediation process under Mr. Vance, and urge both parties to re-engage constructively in negotiations with him.

UNESCO

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the cost of rejoining UNESCO might be if (a) the United Kingdom rejoined without the United States of America and (b) the United Kingdom and the United States of America both rejoined; what the benefits of rejoining might be; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The annual cost of resumed United Kingdom membership of UNESCO would be around £8 million if the United States also rejoined, or £11 million if it did not. The principal benefit to the United Kingdom of rejoining UNESCO would be the enhancement of our ability to participate in the work of the organisation, but any benefit must be weighed against the financial costs. We keep the issue of resumption of membership under close review. No decision has yet been reached.

Hong Kong

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to offer protection to critics of the Government of China currently resident in Hong Kong after 1997.

Mr. Goodlad: The Sino-British joint declaration, which is a legally binding international treaty, provides that the rights and freedoms provided for by Hong Kong's present laws shall be maintained after 1 July 1997. Freedom of speech, freedom of the press and the freedom to demonstrate will remain protected.

Mr. Han Dong Fan

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet Mr. Han Dong Fan, chairman of the independent Chinese trade union movement, on his forthcoming visit to Britain.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans to do so.

Social Development Summit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the United Kingdom Government's objectives at the world summit on social development.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our objectives for the world summit on social development are to strengthen effective international cooperation and co-ordination around the three core issues of the summit, which are:

(i) the enhancement of social integration
(ii) the alleviation and reduction of poverty
(iii) the expansion of productive employment

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the Falkland Islands about the ratification of the non-proliferation treaty of Tlatelolco.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom ratified the two additional protocols to the treaty for the prohibition of nuclear weapons in Latin America, treaty of Tlatelolco, on 11 December 1969. Under article 1 of additional protocol 1, the United Kingdom agreed to apply various articles of the treaty, including article 1—denuclearisation in respect of warlike purposes—in those territories for which it is internationally responsible within the treaty zone. This includes the Falkland Islands.

Although there is no nuclear activity in the Falkland Islands, the Legislative Council of the islands, as required by the protocol, passed a Bill entitled "The Nuclear Safeguards Ordinance 1993" on 16 November 1993. This ordinance will give effect, in the Falklands, to an agreement between the United Kingdom, the IAEA and Euratom for the application of safeguards as envisaged in the treaty of Tlatelolco.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Goodlad: We have decided to privatise the Crown Agents for Overseas Governments and Administrations as an independent foundation (Cm 2376) and to study options for the future ownership of the Natural Resources Institute. A "Prior Options" study of Wilton Park executive agency will commence in September 1994.

EU Enlargement

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list any provisions of the treaty for enlargement of the European Union signed in Corfu on 24 June which change the powers, constitution, or procedures of the institutions of the European Communities other than by changes of numbers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The following provisions in the treaty of accession change the powers, constitution or procedures of the institutions of the European Communities other than by numerical change to allow for the representation of the new member states in these institutions:

Article 2(2) of the treaty gives the Council (acting unanimously) power to decide upon indispensable adjustments in the case that not all the applicant states deposit their instruments of ratification in due time.

Article 12 of the Act of Accession alters the second paragraph of the EC Treaty and the corresponding Articles of the other Community Treaties, to give the Council (acting unanimously) power to determine the order in which the office of the President shall be held by each member state.

Articles 154, 155, 156 and 157 of the Act of Accession give the European Parliament, the Council, the Commission and the Court of Justice respectively, powers to make such adaptations to their rules of procedure as are rendered necessary by accession.

Article 4 of Protocol 8 to the Act of Accession gives the European Parliament the power to verify the credentials of representatives elected to the Parliament in the Member States in the period between ratification of the Treaty and its entry into force.

Clayoquot Sound (Conservation)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of the United Kingdom Government to the Government of Canada, concerning conservation in Clayoquot sound.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 8 July 1994]: The decision on land use in the Clayoquot sound area of Vancouver Island was for the Government of British Columbia to make. The Canadian Government and the British Columbia authorities are well aware of public concern in the United Kingdom about logging in the Clayoquot sound region.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Latin America

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretaryof State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what study Her Majesty's Government have been making with the European Commission of late to the expansion of waterways allowing Bolivia access to the Atlantic; and what help is being given through EC sources or directly.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Mercosur countries—Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay—and Bolivia are working together to design the Hidrovias project to re-condition the navigation and port facilities along a stretch of waterways between Caceres in Brazil and Nueva Palmira in Uruguay. They have approached the European Community for assistance in implementation. Following the agreement between the Hidrovia intergovernmental committee and the Inter-American Development bank, the Commission is considering a request to meet the costs of technical feasibility studies for development of ports, incluing Puerto Bush and Puerto Quijarro in Bolivia.

We have not been involved in these activities bilaterally, but will play an active role in discussions in Brussels of the proposals.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what EC programmes to transfer technology to Latin America the United Kingdom is participating.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Latin America benefits from both DG XII's life science and technology for developing countries programme and the international scientific co-operation initiative. United Kingom laboratories, principally in universities and Govenrment centres, participate actively in both programmes. In both cases, the focus is on joint scientific research.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value of EC aid to Latin America, earmarked for the relief of poverty in cities.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: For 1994, the total value of the European Community's budget lines for "Technical and Financial Assistance" and for food aid for Latin America is 232·5 mecu, about £182 million. Technical and financial assistance in Latin American developing countries includes operations concerning the environment, women, drug abuse control, democratisation, regional co-operation and disaster prevention and reconstruction measures.

The Commission does not earmark funds to specific sectors but high priority is given to aid projects designed to alleviate urban poverty. Projects of this kind are at present under preparation for Brazil, Colombia, Peru and Guatemala. Projects for Brazil and Guatemala have recently been approved.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value of the Alpha programme, designed to update the curriculum of Latin American universities; and what is the value of the United Kingdom's contribution to the programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ALFA programme is worth 40 mecu, about £31 million, over five years, of which 32 mecu, about £25 million, will come from the European Community economic co-operation programme with Latin America. The United Kingdom contributes to this by means of its contributions to the Community budget.

Brazil

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value of (i) British and (ii) EC aid to anti-pollution projects on (a) the Sao Paulo river, (b) the Tieté river cleaning project and (iii) the Nitecoy bay cleaning project; what consideration has been given to the public health and environmental impact of both projects; and what encouragement has been given to private capital in Europe to invest in the projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is no British bilateral or European Community aid to any pollution projects on the Sao Paulo river, Tieté river or in Nitecoy bay. Several bodies encourage private investment in the region, including: the European Community investment partners scheme, the European Investment bank and the Commonwealth Development Corporation. Neither the Overseas Development Administration nor the European Commission is aware of any application to these schemes for financing projects in those areas.

Indo-British Forestry Initiative

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the papers to be presented from the United Kingdom to the Indo-British forestry initiative workshop to be held in New Delhi in July.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 8 July 1994]: Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses shortly. I will also include the papers being presented to the workshop by the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation, which were prepared with British assistance.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Luxury Cars (Italian Tax)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has made to the Italian Government on the subject of the taxation of luxury cars in Italy;

(2) what representations he has made to the European Commission on the subject of the taxation of luxury cars in Italy;

(3) what representations he has received on the effect of the Italian taxation system on exports of luxury cars to Italy.

Mr. Needham: Officials have made written and oral representations in Brussels in support of a formal complaint to the Commission by a British car manufacturer. The British embassy in Rome has raised the issue with the Italian Government. We have made clear our willingness to discuss further action to help British car manufacturers affected by the Italian tax.

Import Restrictions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what non-military products from eastern and central European countries are subject to restrictions on imports into the European Union in the form of (a) quotas, (b) tariffs, (c) certificates of quality or (d) other requirements.

Mr. Needham: Details of the trading arrangements between the Community and the eastern and central European countries are set out in the association agreements and their annexes and protocols concluded between the EC and Poland, Hungary, the Czech and Slovak Republics, Romania and Bulgaria. Copies of these agreements have been placed in the Library of the House.

In addition, anti-dumping remedies exist against certain imports of chemicals, pharmaceuticals, iron and steel products and polyester fibres. There are also Community-wide tariff quotas in place on imports of certain steel products from the Czech and Slovak Republics. Goods supplied to the Community market are subject, product for product, to common testing, certification, standardisation and safety requirements as appropriate and necessary whether imported or of domestic EC manufacture.

Free Trade

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress is being made on the development of free trade between the European Union and (a) Russia, (b) other CIS states, (c) the Baltic republics, (d) the Visegrad group, (e) Romania, (f) Bulgaria, (g) Slovenia and (h) Albania.

Mr. Needham: The European Union recently signed partnership and co-operation agreements with Russia and Ukraine. Each of those agreements provides for the parties to examine in 1998 whether circumstances allow the beginning of negotiations on the establishment of a free trade area between the EU and Russia and Ukraine respectively. Similar agreements now under negotiation with other republics of the former Soviet Union are not so specific but allow for development of the trade provisions as circumstances permit. Negotiations for free trade agreements have recently been concluded with Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. These should enter into force on 1 January 1995.

The trade provisions of the association agreements signed between the EU and the Visegrad countries, Romania and Bulgaria envisage free trade with all those countries by 2002 at the latest. The EU is committed to opening its market first, and has put into effect a number of further concessions agreed at the European Council in Copenhagen in June 1993. From 1 January 1995, nearly all imports of industrial products from the Visegrad countries will enter the EU without restrictions.

The EU will shortly begin negotiations with Slovenia for a similar association agreement with free trade as one of its aims. The EU has a bilateral trade and co-operation agreement with Albania. There are no plans at present to go beyond this by entering into a free trade agreement.

Universal Postal Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 116, which body at Community level will define the list of reserved services made available to the operators of the universal postal service under the proposed reserved services directive of the European Union.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand that the European Commission has not yet reached a view on whether the legal basis for its proposed directive defining the set of services which may be reserved at national level should be article 90 or article 100A of the treaty of Rome. In either event, we would expect the European Council and the European Parliament to play a full part in the process.

Seville Expo '92

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the final cost to Her Majesty's Government of the Seville Expo '92; and if he will separately identify costs and contingent liabilities consequent upon the liquidation of Joanna Bickerton Associates.

Mr. Needham: The final costs have yet to be settled. As stated in my answer of 3 May 1994, Official Report, column 415, I will write to the hon. Member when they are. The final costs will include the ex gratia payments of £220,307 made by the Department, without any admission of liability, to the liquidator of Joanne Bickerton Associates and certain suppliers of Joanna Bickerton Associates.

Chinese Silk and Silk Products (Imports)

Mr. Duncan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he expects to be able to renegotiate the size of the United Kingdom's EC quota for the import of silk and silk products from China;

(2) what representations he has received about the size of the United Kingdom's EC quota for the import of silk and silk products from China;

(3) what plans he has to increase the size of the United Kingdom's EC quota for the imports of silk and silk products from China;

(4) what percentage of the EC's imports of silk and silk products from China is allocated to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: The silk quotas are set and allocated on an EC-wide basis: no member state has a pre-determined share. Traditional silk importers throughout the EC receive an allocation based on a percentage of their trade in 1992, while newcomers receive a small fixed amount. Following over 2,000 complaints about the quotas from United Kingdom traders, the Government have been pressing hard for an increase in the levels for this year and the Commission is expected to make a proposal to this effect shortly. For 1995, the Commission has already opened negotiations with China for a bilateral agreement on silk imports as part of which the Government will be looking for a significant increase in future access levels.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on answering parliamentary questions which seek information previously published in the monthly review of external trade statistics.

Mr. Needham: The CSO is resuming publication of the monthly review of external trade statistics, this month, as "Business Monitor MM24". All the statistical series published in it are available from the Central Statistical Office's central shared database, access to which is available from the Library of the House. The policy on questions seeking information published in the monthly review will be consistent with that for other publications which are available in the Library of the House, or whose contents are available on the central shared database.

Fur Imports Ban

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what documentation his Department has received from the Canadian Government in support of their application for a one-year suspension of the fur import ban provided for in EC Regulation No. 3254;

(2) if he will give details of the representations he has received during the last year from (a) the Canadian Government, (b) the Canadian fur trade and (c) the British fur trade regarding EC Regulation No. 3254 banning the import of certain furs;

(3) how many times he or his officials have met members of (a) the Canadian Government and (b) the Canadian fur trade during the past year to discuss the effects of EC Regulation No. 3254.

Mr. Needham: EC Regulation 3254/91, which was due to come into force on 1 January 1995, has been suspended for one year. Work is continuing in the international standards organisation on a trap standard. Ministers and officials in my Department regularly meet our Canadian opposite numbers. We have met the Canadian Government over the last year on a number of occasions to discuss trade issues, including the EC leghold trap regulation. In the course of those contacts, Canada provided information on the progress made in replacing leghold traps with alternative trapping methods. The Government took this information into account when preparing the United Kingdom position on the Commission proposal to suspend the regulation. Neither the Canadian nor the United Kingdom fur trade has made any representations to my Department during the last year.

Health Care Sector Group

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, 4 July, Official Report, column 10, who will serve on the health care sector group; and when he expects it to be operational.

Mr. Needham: I intend that membership should be drawn from a wide cross section of the health care sector. I hope to appoint a chairman in the near future and that the group will be operational in the autumn.

Nuclear Plants (Ukraine)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what examination his Department, consultants to his Department or the Atomic Energy Authority has re-conducted of the analysis conducted by the European bank for reconstruction and development for the G7 nations into the future visibility and capacity of Goskomatom, Ukraine's civil nuclear operator, safely to manage its nuclear plants; and if he will arrange for a copy of the EBRD study to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: At the request of the G7, the EBRD and the World bank carried out a joint fact-finding mission to Kiev to assess the options for, and cost of, improving nuclear safety in Ukraine. It would not be normal practice to place a report of such a mission in the Library of the House.

Clean Technology (South Africa)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to promote environmentally clean technology on his forthcoming visit to South Africa; and whether any representatives of the British Nuclear Industrial Forum will accompany him on his trip.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has no plans specifically to promote environmental clean technology on his forthcoming visit to South Africa. No representatives of the British nuclear industrial forum will accompany him on his trip, although two member companies will be represented.

Electrical Goods (Imports)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the amount of electrical goods imported in each of the years 1989 to 1994 from (a) Japan, (b) Taiwan, (c) South Korea and (d) Singapore.

Mr. Needham: The information is in the following table.

Value of Electrical Goods Imported into the United Kingdom (£ millions, current prices)

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	January to April 1994
Japan	2,983	2,801	2,897	3,058	3,358	1,176
Taiwan	498	429	460	565	751	289
South Korea	408	313	287	337	477	157
Singapore	510	583	686	662	1,109	357

Note:
Electrical goods are classified as heading 716 and divisions 75-77 of the Standard International Trade Classification.
Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Futons (Safety)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the risk to health of the continued use of boric acid powder as a fire retardant in futons.

Mr. McLoughlin: A review of the scientific literature has been undertaken by the Department of Health and no evidence has been found that suggests that boric acid used as a fire retardant in a futon presents a risk to the user.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing imports and exports of finished consumer goods, intermediate goods and capital goods each quarter since the second quarter of 1992, distinguishing between EEC and non-EEC countries.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is stored in the Central Statistical Office's central shared database, access to which is available from the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will publish a table showing imports and exports of semi-finished and finished manufactures from and to each EEC country for each quarter since the second quarter of 1992.

Mr. Needham: Information for 1992 is published in "Business Monitor MM20" whilst information for 1993 is published in "Business Monitor MQ20". Copies of these publications are available from the Library of the House.

Imported Retail Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will undertake a survey to find out (a) the proportion of non-food, non-fuel, non-alcoholic goods sold retail which are imported and (b) the effect movements in the exchange rate have had on prices.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1990, the following privatisations have been undertaken by the Department of Trade and Industry and the former Department of Energy:

1990 Sale of 12 Regional Electricity Companies
1991 Sale of National Power and PowerGen
1992 Sale of British Technology Group

Plans for future privatisations are as follows:

(i) On 17 February this year, I announced the Government's intention to privatise the commercial activities of the Atomic Energy Authority, Official Report, columns 922-924.

(ii) My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced plans for the future of the National Engineering Laboratory, Laboratory of the Government Chemist and National Physical Laboratory on 14 April this year, Official Report, columns 251-253.

(iii) The Government expect to return the coal mining activities of British Coal Corporation to the private sector by the end of the year.

On 30 June, the Department published a Green Paper on "The Future Of Postal Services" (Cm 2614). The Green Paper set out a number of options for the future of the Post Office. The Government's preferred option is to allow Royal Mail and Parcelforce to operate as a private company owned by the public and employees, with the Government retaining 49 per cent. of the shares. This is subject to a consultation period, after which a decision will be made.

My right hon. Friend is reviewing the scope for privatisation or contractorisation of the Patent Office and Companies House as part of the required periodic agency review process, which considers a range of possibilities from abolition to maintenance of the status quo.

Latin America

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what help he gives to British companies in producing catalogues designed to promote British goods in Latin America.

Mr. Needham: A commercial publicity support package is available to companies participating in an overseas trade fair, exhibition or outward mission.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he had had with the Institute of Export about training people in Latin American studies.

Mr. Needham: My Department liaises with the Institute of Export on a number of matters. The institute, through its 21 regional centres and its magazine "Export Today", ensures that its members are fully informed of opportunities in Latin America and elsewhere, drawing on the support and advice of the Overseas Trade Services.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from the engineering industry and related consultants on the export of invisibles to Latin America and problems of credit cover.

Mr. Needham: There have been no representations to my Department from the engineering industry or related consultants on the export of invisibles to Latin America and the provision of export credit support for the same sector.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what help he is giving to British water companies to export expertise to Latin America.

Mr. Needham: I have established a water sector group of the Overseas Project Board under the chairmanship of my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King). Its overall aim is to help the United Kingdom water industry to maximise its share of overseas markets for its products and skills. In addition, British water companies are given maximum support in exploiting opportunities in Latin American markets by Whitehall Departments and our embassies overseas.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the credit cover given to Latin American countries by (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the United Kingdom's major industrial competitors.

Mr. Needham: The Government are committed to improving the competitiveness of United Kingdom exporters. We have capped the premium rates in certain markets where these may be out of line with the rates charged by our main competitors. We have restored export credit cover for markets emerging from the debt crisis earlier than would normally have been the case. We have recently revised the project financing and overseas investment insurance scheme to provide more flexible support for exporters. A summary of the official export credit support provided by the Government to United Kingdom companies exporting to Latin America is being sent to the hon. Member and to the House of Commons Library. The cover available from the United Kingdom is broadly comparable with that provided by our major industrial competitors.

1 = Relatively rich countries with officially supported finance at Commercial Interest Reference Rates (CIRRs). Maximum credit period 5 years (exceptionally 8·5 years).

2A = Intermediate countries, with officially supported finance at Commercial Interest Reference Rates (CIRRs). Maximum credit period 8·5 years.

2B = Intermediate countries, with officially supported finance at Commercial Interest Reference Rates (CIRRs). Maximum credit period 10 years.

3 = Relatively poor countries, with officially supported financing at SDR-based rate or CIRRs. Maximum credit period 10 years.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what encouragement he gives to British exporters to make contact with trading organisations and decision-making provincial Governments in the provinces of Argentina and with greater Buenos Aires.

Mr. Needham: The British embassy in Buenos Aires encourages individual United Kingdom companies and trade missions to visit the provinces of Argentina where many business opportunities can be found.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussion he has had with the incoming Government of Venezuela about trading with the Venezuelan utilities.

Mr. Needham: Discussions have taken place between officials, including the DTI export promoter, and representatives of the Venezuelan Government about the supply of United Kingdom goods and services to utilities in the gas, electricity and water sectors.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress he has made in the marketing plan process in relation to South America.

Mr. Needham: Market plans have been prepared for each of the United Kingdom's major markets in Latin America and are updated to reflect changes in the markets.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has about the number of export promoters he has brought in from the private sector to his Department to promote trade to South America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Eight export promoters covering Latin America have been seconded from the private sector.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the results of the study undertaken by his Department between October 1992 and March 1993 on exports to Colombia, particularly in relation to railway rehabilitation.

Mr. Needham: The report of the United Kingdom-Colombia trade facilitation group was published and a copy has been placed in the House of Commons Library. Railways were identified as a sector offering good opportunities for United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade why he has raised the cost of ECGD cover to Argentina; and what estimate he has made of the effect on United Kingdom trade.

Mr. Needham: ECGD premium rates vary as a result of regular reviews of the risks associated with doing business in different markets.

It is difficult to assess in isolation the effect of ECGD premium rates on trade, but the impact of the recent increase for Argentina is likely to be negligible.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contracts Her Majesty's Government have with chambers of commerce in major Latin American cities.

Mr. Needham: British embassies, visiting export promoters and officials from my Department have frequent contacts with chambers of commerce in the major cities of Latin America. Visiting United Kingdom business men are also encouraged to contact them as these chambers can offer valuable assistance.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade at what level in their companies were the business men who accompanied the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on his visit to Latin America; and what his policy is towards persuading British companies to send their most senior executives to Latin America.

Mr. Needham: It is a matter for individual Ministers to decide whether it is appropriate for a business team to accompany them, although this is now increasingly done. United Kingdom companies invited to join the business teams are encouraged to be represented at levels which will maximise the opportunities offered by the visits. This is generally at senior executive or board level which was the case, for example, with the recent visit to Brazil by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury.

Unfair Consumer Contracts Directive

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 231, on what basis he has formed the view that the European directive on unfair consumer contracts does not apply to the sale of real property; what steps he has taken to ensure that this is the view of the European Commission and the European court; and what assistance and support is available to any British company required to defend an action in Europe seeking to apply the directive to real property.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1994]: The recitals to the directive make it clear that the intention is to prevent the use of unfair terms in contracts for the sale or supply of goods or services. Since real property is neither a good nor a service the presumption must be that the scope of the directive does not extend to transactions in real property, but it would be for the courts, if necessary, to rule on whether a particular contract term fell within the scope of the Directive. Any dispute must be settled by the parties to that dispute.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 231, if he will make a statement setting out precisely his understanding of the term "goods" in connection with the European directive on unfair consumer contracts.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1994]: The term goods is not defined in the Unfair Contract Terms Directive. In the United Kingdom goods are generally taken to mean moveable as opposed to fixed property. It would be for the courts, if necessary, to interpret the terms used in the directive.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what were the green ticket payments made to Electricité de France in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 for electricity supplied through the interconnector;

(2) which regional electricity companies act as agents for Electricité de France in the distribution of green ticket payments for electricity supplied through the inter connector.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 11 July 1994]: These are commercial matters for the parties concerned.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much electricity in megawatt hours and percentage terms was supplied to the English and Welsh electricity markets from (a) British fossil-fuelled power stations, (b) hydro-electric stations, (c) other British renewable sources, (d) Electricité de France from nuclear and or hydro-electric sources and (e) Electricité de France from fossil-fuelled power stations.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 11 July 1994]: In 1993, the electricity supplied to the public distribution system in the United Kingdom—that is, excluding electricity generated by companies for their own use—was as follows:

	GWh	Per cent.
Fossil fuelled power stations	215,667	68·0
Nuclear stations	80,979	25·0
Hydro-electric stations	3,676	1·0
Other renewable sources	1,470	0·5
Net imports from France	16,716	5·0

The electricity imports from France are from Electricité de France. Those regional electricity companies with output contracts with EdF can show that the electricity that they import from France is supplied from designated nuclear stations.

Fossil Fuel Levy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much in cash and percentage terms of the fossil fuel levy paid by the electricity consumers was paid in each of the last three financial years to (a) Nuclear Electric, (b) British renewable energy electricity generators and (c) Electricité de France.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Electricité de France does not receive payments from the fossil fuel levy. Payments to Nuclear Electric and British renewable electricity generators, in cash terms and as a percentage of levy receipts in the relevant year, have been as follows:

	Nuclear Electric		Renewables
Year	£ millions	per cent.	£ millions	per cent.
1991-92	1,281	97	12	1
1992-93	1,291	96	29	2
1993-94	1,139	92	68	6

Note: The balance of levy receipts is used to finance payments to British Nuclear Fuels plc in respect of nuclear electricity generated by its plant, and to cover certain other costs such as administration costs.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the total expenditure in 1993-94 on regional finance assistance to industry to the (a) Northern, (b) Yorkshire and Humberside, (c) east midlands, (d) south-west, (e) west midlands and (f) north-west regions.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 7 July 1994]: Information on total expenditure on regional financial assistance in 1993-94 is not yet finalised. It will be published in the next edition of "Regional Trends" produced by Central Statistical Office.

Post Offices (Peckham)

Ms Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the future of all branch and sub-post offices in Peckham in the event of any change in status of the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 7 July 1994]: The Government have set out their views on the future of the nationwide network of post offices in their Green Paper "The Future of Postal Services". I know of no reason why post offices in Peckham should be treated differently from those in other parts of the country.

Fire Safety Regulations

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to alter fire safety regulations on flame-proof material for children's night clothing and for furnishings.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The fire safety regulations that control the fire retardency of children's night clothing are the Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985. The regulations concerned with furnishings are the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended. Both those sets of regulations were considered as part of the overall review of legislation under the Deregulation initiative. To establish whether any changes to those regulations were necessary, my Department has taken account of the responses received during consultation with individual businesses, trade associations, local authorities, fire prevention, medical and consumer interests. After considering the results of the review, I have no plans to propose amendments to the nightwear regulations or the furniture and furnishings regulations.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide a table showing the running costs of his Department in each region for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Following is the running cost expenditure for each regional, now Government, office:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94

[1] Responsibility for import licensing transferred to North East Region during 1989-90.
[2] Separate office for Eastern region established in October 1989 (formerly part of South East Office).

WALES

Snowdonia

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were killed or injured while walking or climbing in the Snowdonia national park in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many legal actions were initiated by the Development Board for Rural Wales which were (a) discontinued and (b) settled out of court for each year in the period 1983 to 1993;

(2) if the legal fees incurred by the Development Board for Rural Wales form part of its management running costs;

(3) how much the Development Board for Rural Wales spent on legal fees in each year in the period 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Redwood: I have asked the chief executive of the Development Board for Rural Wales to write to the hon. Member and will arrange for a copy of his reply to be placed in the Library of the House.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many legal actions were initiated by the Welsh Development Agency which were (a) discontinued and (b) settled out of court for each year in the period 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Redwood: I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the legal fees incurred by the Welsh Development Agency form part of its management running costs.

Mr. Redwood: Legal fees are charged to the relevant budget within the agency, including, where appropriate, management running costs.

South Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the legal fees incurred by the South Glamorgan health authority form part of its management running costs.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: South Glamorgan health authority's procurer management running costs for 1993-94 included legal fees.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many legal actions were initiated by the South Glamorgan health authority which were (a) discontinued and (b) settled out of court for each year in the period 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much the South Glamorgan health authority spent on legal fees in each year in the period 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is as follows:

South Glamorgan health authority's expenditure on legal fees

1983-84	24,698
1984-85	0
1985-86	0

Dental Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for the period January to March the statistics on the active registrations of capitation patients for dental treatment in each family health service authority area in Wales, disaggregating the figures by each category and, for each, giving the actual number of patients and the take-up rate for each age group per 100 local population.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the following table, showing patients according to the age groups used by the Dental Practice Board.

Active registrations of capitation patients by family health service authority and age group at end March 1994[1]

Fishing, River Dee

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from nets fishermen on the River Dee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department has received a number of letters about the introduction in 1992 of National Rivers Authority byelaws for the protection of migratory fish stocks, and about National Rivers Authority proposals to reduce the commercial net fishing season to protect spring salmon runs.

Economic Planning Council

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to set up an economic planning council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. I announced on 16 March 1994 my intention to establish a Welsh Economic Council, an advisory body, which I have now done. The second meeting of the council is scheduled for later this month.

Community Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what extra moneys he intends to provide to assist local authorities in their delivery of community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 25 January 1994, Official Report, column 229.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioner fundholding (a) practices and (b) applications there are in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are 18 GP fundholding practices in Clwyd covering 43 per cent. of the population. Another practice is preparing to become a fundholder from 1 April 1995, which will increase population coverage to 45 per cent.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of general practitioner fundholding in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are 117 fundholding practices in Wales, covering one third of the population. A further 29 practices are preparing to become fundholders from 1 April 1995, at which time population coverage will increase to 40 per cent.

Patients Charter

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of collecting and publishing the information contained in the patients charter comparative performance guide 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The budget for the comparative performance tables exercise was £45,000.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Redwood: Since 1990, no decisions have been taken to privatise any organisations for which my Department has executive responsibility, but the possibilities are kept under continuing review.

Pollution

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what warnings he has issued in relation to tropospheric ozone levels, nitrogen oxide and other noxious gases concentrations in the atmosphere in (a) Cardiff and (b) elsewhere in Wales over the past three years; what provision he has made to inform asthmatics, bronchitics, children and pregnant women of smog risks during days of high concentrations of pollution; what arrangements he has made for requests to reduce the use of cars in cities at such times of high concentrations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations he has had with the South Glamorgan health authority in relation to the issuing of warnings to relevant vulnerable groups concerning concentrations of pollution above World Health Organisation maximum safety levels in Cardiff.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The Department of the Environment operates a United Kingdom-wide public information service on air quality. Under those arrangements, air pollution information is sent, free of charge, to the BBC, ITN, the Press Association and all national newspapers which receive the Met Office forecasts. A freephone air quality and health advice information line and bulletins for CEEFAX and TELETEXT forms part of this system. The information released includes, in times of poor air quality, advice on what individuals can do to help reduce pollution, for example by cutting down on car usage. Advice on what asthma sufferers and others can do to minimise any health effects is also provided.

When air quality is expected to be poor the Department of the Environment also issues warnings of this via specific press notices: this has happened on two occasions in the last three years, on 20 December 1991 and 1 July 1994. In view of those arrangements, no specific consultation has been considered necessary on this matter with South Glamorgan health authority.

HEALTH

General Whitley Council

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are involved in servicing the general Whitley council and its committees; what is the annual cost of running the council; and how many NHS staff are covered by the Whitley council.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are currently four staff working in the General Whitley Council management side secretariat. It is not possible to provide information about the running of the full council except at disproportionate cost. All national health service staff employed on national terms and conditions are covered by the general Whitley council.

Health Authorities

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what pilot studies and other research have been conducted into the merging of family health services authorities and district health authorities; and whether she will make a statement;

(2) what consultancy or start-up costs have been expended to date in respect of the possible merging of family health service authorities and district health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: All district health authorities and family health services authorities are expected to develop effective joint working, and there have been many commentaries on the benefits of this well-established Government policy. There can be no research or pilot studies on merging authorities as no such merger can take place without a change in legislation, and consequently no costs have been expended in this area.

Perinatal and Neonatal Mortality

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the perinatal mortality rate and (b) the neonatal mortality rate in each district health authority in England and Wales for 1985, 1990 and 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The available information will be placed in the Library.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the plans of the Social Services inspectorate to follow up a thematic study in relation to the mental health services in 1994-95.

Mr. Bowis: The social services inspectorate is planning to hold a workshop for staff of the local authorities who participated in the mental health thematic study.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the 1993 report by the Social Services inspectorate and the NHS executive of the special study on the impact of new community care arrangements on mental health services has yet been published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The 1993 report by the social services inspectorate, together with the national health service executive, of the study on the impact of new community care arrangements on mental health services entitled "Monitoring and Development: Community Care Monitoring, Special Study, Mental Health Services" was published in April. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a report by the Social Services inspectorate on the inspection of local authorities' arrangements to support mentally ill patients discharged from hospital will be published.

Mr. Bowis: Later this year.

Children's Homes

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will give details of the further studies to be undertaken by the social services inspectorate into the placement of children in homes unregistrable under the Children Act 1989;

(2) if she will publish the results of the further studies to be undertaken by the social services inspectorate into the placement of children in homes unregistrable under the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Bowis: In the light of the social services inspectorate study of the provision of small unregistered children's homes in the north-west of England, published in February, a further study of a wider sample of local authority social services departments' practice is being undertaken. The aims of the study include the establishment of a national data base and a review of the application and understanding of the relevant regulations made under the Children Act.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what period of time a child can be placed in a home registrable under the Children Act 1989, but whose application has not been granted; and what regulations govern the placement.

Mr. Bowis: An application for registration as a registered children's home which has not been granted or refused within 12 months is, under paragraph 1(9) of schedule 6 of the Children Act 1989, deemed to have been refused by the local authority. The placement of a child by a local authority in an establishment awaiting decision on an application for registration is governed by the Arrangements for Placement of Children (General) Regulations 1991, the Review of Children's Cases Regulations 1991, the Representations Procedures (Children) Regulations 1991, the Contact with Children Regulations 1991 and the Definition of Independent Visitors (Children) Regulations 1991.

Hospital Treatment

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances a person needing hospital treatment must pay in order to receive treatment in a hospital of their own choice within the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: None. It is a fundamental principle of the national health service that NHS treatment is free of charge unless there is a specific statutory power to charge.

Elderly People (Continual Care)

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of elderly people in need of continual care were accommodated in (a) NHS beds, (b) private nursing homes, (c) local authority residential homes and (d) private residential homes in each district health authority in England for the years 1989-90, 1991-92 and the latest available figures.

Mr. Bowis: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of places in England available for people with long-term care needs are shown in the table. The figures include provision for elderly mentally ill people and people who need continuing specialised medical or nursing care in other age groups. Information by district health authority on local social services and private sector residential care could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

	Number of places as at 31 March:
	1990	1991	1992	1993
National Health Service beds[1]	73,000	68,300	62,700	59,600
Private nursing homes[2]	89,600	109,000	124,000	144,300
Local authority residential homes[3]	103,600	96,100	85,000	75,400
Private residential homes[3]	144,700	154,500	158,200	161,400

Foster Families

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what period of time a child can be placed on a fee-paying basis with a family who are not registered as foster carers; and what regulations govern the placement.

Mr. Bowis: Private fostering is governed by part IX of the Children Act 1989 and the regulations made under it. For children placed by a local authority with foster carers, this is, inter alia, governed by the Foster Placement (Children) Regulations 1991 which provide, in regulation 3(1), that, except in the case of an immediate placement, a child is not to be placed unless the foster parent is approved under that regulation.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 413, what was the most recent report from her Department or the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food before the pending report of the July 1993 survey, showing how many children among any section of the population were in families with a nutritionally inadequate diet and had intakes which were, specifically, for any three or more of the nutrients measured for a necessary diet, below the levels recommended in any, or all, of the reference nutrient intake, estimated average requirement or the lower reference nutrient intake, or any of their immediate predecessors.

Mr. Sackville: The most recent relevant report is the report from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy on the "Diets of British Schoolchildren", published in 1989. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

Disabled Young Adults

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress health authorities have made in implementing the recommendations made in the report,

"An Assessment of Health Related Needs of Physically Handicapped Young Adults"; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The report was independent and was commissioned by the Department of Health. It was distributed to regional and district health authorities in March 1993 to help them consider how best to meet the needs of disabled young adults. The priorities and planning guidance 1994-95 (EL(93)54), issued to the national health service in June 1993, requires district health authorities to ensure that rehabilitation services address the special needs of disabled young adults, particularly those moving from child to adult services. The Department has made available £149,000 in 1994-95 to fund a series of projects within the national health service, which aim to develop and improve transition services for physically disabled school leavers.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the contribution made by television programmes encouraging young persons to experiment with anabolic steroids; and what research her Department has carried out on this subject.

Mr. Bowis: The Government are concerned at the risk to health arising from the misuse of anabolic steroids. The Department has not carried out any research on the impact of television programmes on young people. We are currently discussing with media companies initiatives to encourage young people not to experiment with drugs or solvents.

Departmental Staff (Travel Costs)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of how many return trips are taken by Department of Health staff between London and Leeds (a) per week, (b) per month and (c) annually; and at what cost.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available in the form requested.

NHS Executive Outposts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the numbers of staff employed by the NHS executive outposts.

Dr. Mawhinney: On 31 March, a total of 53 staff were employed in the seven national health service executive outposts.

NHS Trust Hospitals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each wave the start-up costs for each NHS trust hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary gave the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) on 17 May 1993, Official Report, column 29 and to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 18 May 1992, Official Report, column 63, and to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 12 May, Official Report, column 222.

NHS Trust Applications

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each wave (a) the cost of assessing applications to become NHS trusts, (b) the number of applications assessed and (c) the consultants used to make the assessment.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 3 November 1993, Official Report, column 225. Updated information for the fourth wave is shown.

Hospitals (Comparative Performance)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of collecting and publishing the information contained in the patients charter comparative performance guide 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: The final cost of producing the first set of national health service performance tables has not yet been finalised.

AIDS

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the reasons for the reduction in the AIDS support grant to the London borough of Brent.

Mr. Sackville: For 1993-94, AIDS support grant allocations were made on the basis of bids submitted by local authorities. Local authorities not receiving AIDS support grant were given money under the healthy alliances scheme for HIV prevention and joint working with health authorities. For 1994-95, local authorities were invited to submit expenditure plans against indicative allocations of both AIDS support grant and healthy alliances moneys. Those allocations were based on confidential information available for the first time and supplied to the Department by the public health laboratory service on the distribution of AIDS cases by local authority area. Where this formula would mean a reduction in grant in 1994-95, local authorities were advised that there might, in exceptional circumstances, be some scope to adjust allocations on a transitional basis and that applications for additional grant could be made.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from which organisations representing old people she has received representations alleging age discrimination within the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has received representations from the following organisations:

Age Concern (England);
Association of Retired Persons;
British Geriatrics Society;
Pensioners' Liaison Forum, North West;
Pensioners' Action Committee, Tameside;
Age Concern Leicestershire;
Age Concern Coventry;

Northern Pensioners' Association, Crewe and District Branch;
Bury Pensioners' Association;
National Federation of Post Office and BT Pensioners;
The Methodist Church, Brentwood.

Those representations have not identified individual instances of discrimination.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that age discrimination is eliminated from the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have consistently made it clear that there are no exceptions within the health service to the fundamental principle of equal treatment on the basis of clinical need. The patients charter reaffirms this right. Decisions about individual patient care are for the clinicians responsible for the case, but the patient's ability to benefit must always be the primary consideration.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individual complaints she has received to date from (a) Coventry, (b) the west midlands and (c) nationally about age discrimination in the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has received approximately 400 letters since April, many of them identical, expressing concern about alleged discrimination. We are not aware of any identified instances relating to services in Coventry or the west midlands.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to her departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans she has for further privatisation.

Mr. Sackville: No part of the Department of Health, its agencies, or related bodies have been privatised since 1990. Apart from the possible sale of a small part of the Public Health Laboratory Service involving up to four staff, there are no firm plans to privatise any parts of these organisations at present. However, privatisation is one of the "prior options" which must be considered before a next steps agency is created; or when an agency or non-departmental public body is the subject, respectively, of a framework or quinquennial review.

Equal Treatment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ensure that equal treatment for all on the basis of clinical need is adhered to.

Mr. Sackville: Providing equal treatment for all on the basis of clinical need is one of the principles of the national health service. This right is reflected in the patients charter.

Day Nurseries

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of three to five-year-olds attend publicly funded day nurseries.

Mr. Bowis: Information collected by the Department of Health relates to the number of children aged under five attending local authority day nurseries and the number placed and paid for by local authorities in other types of day nursery. At 31 March 1993, there were 8·8 children per thousand aged under five in these two categories.

Bradford Community Health Trust

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions she has had with representatives of Bradford community health trust; what matters were discussed; and what action she has taken following such discussions;

(2) if she will instruct the Bradford community health trust to close the secure unit located at Lynfield Mount hospital in Bradford; and if she will establish an independent public inquiry into how a remand prisoner escaped from the grounds of the hospital at the end of June.

Mr. Bowis: Officials from the national health service executive have regular discussions with Bradford community health national health service trust and have asked Professor Michael Schofield, chairman of the trust, to keep them informed, following the escape of a patient from Lynfield Mount hospital. We understand that the trust is to establish an independent external review panel to look at the policies and procedures of the special care unit at the hospital and that the panel's recommendations will be made public.

Sigthin

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times the drug Sigthin has been prescribed on the national health service over the past three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are unaware of any drug by the name of Sigthin.

NHS Management

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of the NHS executive and how many chief executives of (a) purchasers, (b) providers, (c) family health service authorities and (d) NHSE outposts have no graduate qualifications; and how she controls the quality of senior NHS management.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 27 June 1994]: Of the 17 directors in the national health service executive, including the chief executive, 15 are graduates and one has accountancy qualifications. They are subject to departmental annual appraisal procedures, including mid-year reviews based on set objectives. Information on the number of chief executives in the national health service without graduate qualifications is not available centrally. Senior NHS management are also subject to individual appraisal review of their success in meeting locally set objectives for delivering health care. Their levels of remuneration are firmly linked to their performance.

Death Rate

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each year from 1979 (a) the number of deaths that were expected annually in each health region and (b) the number of actual deaths that occurred in each health region using (i) England as standard, (ii) Wessex region as standard and (iii) Northern region as standard.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 July 1994]: This information will be placed in the Library.

Lesbians (Parental Rights)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will bring forward proposals to prevent lesbians being given parental rights.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply. There are no plans to bring forward such proposals.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received from the Gay Hussar group in regard to strategies for reforming the EU common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jack: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have received any such representations.

Biological Diversity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representation her Department had at the second session of the intergovernmental committee of the convention on biological diversity held in June in Nairobi; and if she will make a statement on the relevance of the decisions taken at the meeting for the completion of partnership agreements between the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation and the International Agricultural Research Centre involved in gene bank development.

Mr. Jack: The United Kingdom delegation comprised officials from the Department of the Environment, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Overseas Development Administration, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. Delegates to the meeting recognised and supported the intention of the Food and Agriculture Organisation to conclude agreements with the international agricultural research centres to place certain of their seed banks under its auspices.

Animal Health and Veterinary Group

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she expects to make an announcement of the conclusions of the review of her Department's animal health and veterinary group.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I intend to issue a consultation document shortly.

EC Intervention Stocks

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of stock of beef, in tonnes, held in intervention in the United Kingdom; and if she will give details of the age profile of the stock.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to the Intervention Board. I have asked the chief executive to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from Guy Stapleton to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 12 July 1994:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question about current beef stocks in intervention in the United Kingdom, and the age profile of these stocks.

The information is set out in the attached table:

Beef stocks at end of May 1994

Year of origin	Weight (tonnes)
1990	784
1991	6,980
1992	30,845
1993	15,139
1994	Nil
Total	53,658

DEFENCE

China

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of arms spending by China.

Mr. Aitken: China's official defence budget for 1994 is 54·4 billion yuan—about US$6 billion—although there is also a considerable amount of military-related expenditure which does not fall to the Chinese defence budget.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Aitken: No part of my departmental area of responsibility has been privatised since 1990. The next areas likely to reach that stage are the royal dockyards, for which tenders will be issued in due course. As announced in "Next Steps Review 1993" (Cm 2430), possible defence agency candidates covering a wide range of defence support activity are subject to a prior options review during which the scope for privatisation is explored. Likewise, the scope for privatisation is considered in other areas as part of my Department's "Competing for Quality" programme. For instance, as announced by the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 31 March 1993 Official Report, column 197, work is continuing to transfer the services' married quarters estate to a housing trust in the private sector on 1 April 1995. The scope for private sector involvement in defence support business has also been considered as part of the defence costs study on which we shall be making an announcement shortly.

RNAD Trecwn

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when RNAD Trecwn was declared surplus; when tenders were invited to market RNAD Trecwn; and what were the reasons for the delay.

Mr. Hanley: RNAD Trecwn was declared surplus on 1 August 1992 and tenders were invited from estate agents and surveyors to market the site on 28 January 1994. The intervening period was used to allow consideration to be given to the possibility of establishing a European armaments decommissioning facility at Trecwn.

RAF Hendon and Peninsula Barracks

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date information was provided to the hon. R. Philipps or Crown Ridge Industries Ltd., on the details of (a) RAF Hendon (East Camp) and (b) Peninsula barracks, Winchester.

Mr. Hanley: In addition to being available from other sources, details of my Department's sites are widely disseminated by officials to many companies and individuals and no central records are maintained. As far as can be ascertained, however, no specific details of RAF Hendon (East Camp) or Peninsula barracks have been supplied to the hon. Rhodri Philipps and/or Crownridge Industries.

The hon. R. Philipps was, however, provided in October 1993 with a list which is available to the public on request, naming all major sites in disposal or coming up for disposal. This is likely to have included brief details of Peninsula barracks and RAF Hendon (East Camp).

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the decisions were made (a) to dispose of Peninsula barracks, Winchester and (b) to invite tenders.

Mr. Hanley: The initial decision to vacate and dispose of Peninsula barracks was made in 1980, but this was dependent upon reprovision of the barracks on a green field site north of Winchester. Occupation of the new barracks started in 1986 and vacation of Peninsula barracks was completed in 1988.

The site was initially marketed in July 1988, but the developer selected went into liquidation in 1990. The MOD with the Crown Estate, as joint owners of the site, pursued the planning application submitted by this developer and finally obtained planning permission in September 1993.

Peninsula barracks was remarketed in January 1994 and an offer for the freehold was accepted in June 1994.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the decisions were made (a) to dispose of RAF Hendon (East Camp), and (b) to invite tenders.

Mr. Hanley: The initial decision to dispose of RAF Hendon (East Camp) was made in 1988 and the site has been marketed since 1989. Since that time some 7 acres of the site have been sold and a further five acres provisionally allocated for the use of the adjoining RAF museum.

The remainder of the site was remarketed in January 1994, with a closing date for informal tenders of 31 March 1994.

Testing Laboratories

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the MOD establishments which are accredited NAMAS—national measurement accreditation service—testing laboratories.

Mr. Aitken: Establishments in my Department and in defence agencies which are NAMAS accredited for calibration or testing purposes are listed in the table:

Royal Air Force Electrical Standards Laboratory, Deeside, Clwyd
Defence Research Agency, Aquila, Kent
Defence Radiological Standards Centre, Aldermaston
Army Calibration and Standards Laboratory, Army Base Repair Organisation, Old Dalby, Leicestershire Defence Radiological Protection Service, Gosport, Hampshire
Defence Research Agency Dunfermline, Rosyth, Scotland
Defence Research Agency, Fort Halstead, Kent
Defence Research Agency, Bridgwater, Somerset
Defence Research Agency, Civil Marine Group, Portsmouth, Hampshire
Environmental Test Centre, Foulness, Essex
Proof and Experimental Establishment, Pendine, Dyfed
Proof and Experimental Establishment, Eskmeals, Cumbria
Proof and Experimental Establishment, Shoeburyness, Essex
Proof and Experimental Establishment, Lavington, Wiltshire
Test and Evaluation Establishment, Chertsey, Surrey
Defence Clothing and Textile Authority (Quality and Product Support Division) Oxfordshire
Royal Military College of Science, Swindon, Wiltshire

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent by RAE Aberperth on sending electronic equipment for calibration at NAMAS accredited laboratories in each of the last three years.

Mr. Aitken: The figures for calibration of electronic equipment not arranged within the MOD and thus incurring charges are as follows:

1993-91	523·34
1992-93	1,511·78
1993-94	2,135·57

Stores Depot (Exeter)

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent on refurbishing the Royal Navy stores depot in Exeter in each of the last five financial years.

Mr. Hanley: It is not possible to break down all the costs of expenditure on specific refurbishment from that of general works, maintenance and fire prevention measures at RNSD Exeter; however, overall expenditure in these areas in each of the last five financial years is as follows:

	Cost £
1989-90	515,000
1990-91	1,000,000
1991-92	650,000
1992-93	900,000
1993-94	1,400,000

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of closing the Royal Navy stores depot in Exeter;

(2) what plans his Department has to conduct a full impact study of the effects of closing the Royal Naval stores depot in Exeter.

Mr. Hanley: Stores depots, including Exeter, were examined by the defence costs study, the outcome of which we hope to announce shortly.

Chinook Helicopter Crash

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the Chinook helicopter that crashed on the Mull of Kintyre on 2 June was scheduled to land.

Mr. Hanley: The Chinook helicopter that crashed on the Mull of Kintyre on 2 June was scheduled to land at Fort George, Inverness.

EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the amount of expenditure by his Department on training employment, enterprise, employment measures and labour market services in each year since 1979-80 in each region in (a) cash terms and (b) 1993-94 prices.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested.

Business Initiative Schemes

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate for the business basics scheme for 1994-95.

Miss Widdecombe: Funds for the business start-up scheme have been transferred to the single regeneration budget in 1994-95. Provision for the single regeneration budget includes £70·122 million for business start-up support in that year.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money was spent on business initiative 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: Expenditure in 1993-94 on the business start-up scheme was £82 million.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the extent of (a) financial support and (b) training time offered by the business basics programme.

Miss Widdecombe: Although now within the single regeneration budget, the business start-up scheme is expected to continue in 1994-95 to offer financial support within the previous range of £20 to £90 per week, plus a training element, both determined locally by training and enterprise councils. TECs may, however, provide start-up support in whatever form they consider appropriate to their local circumstances.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) women and (b) men took up the business initiative scheme in each month from April 1993 to April 1994, and give the extent of (i) financial support and (ii) training time.

Miss Widdecombe: Support is given under the business start-up scheme to help unemployed people set up their own businesses. The scheme is delivered by training and enterprise councils, which may provide these services under different titles. The numbers of people taking up the support between April 1993 and April 1994 are set out in the table. Financial support in 1993-94 ranged from allowances of £20 to £90 per week, for between 26 and 66 weeks. Training time was at the discretion of the local TECs.

Business Start-Up Scheme 1993-94—England. 4-Weekly Entrant Statistics

Period Ending	Entrants
25 April 1993	2,771
23 May 1993	2,699
20 June 1993	2,553
18 July 1993	2,470
15 August 1993	2,357
12 September 1993	2,544
10 October 1993	2,680
07 November 1993	2,730
05 December 1993	2,587
02 January 1994	1,819
30 January 1994	2,560
27 February 1994	2,732
27 March 1994	4,005
1993-94	34,507

Individual totals for women and men for the various periods are not available. However, available data suggest that the overall proportion for the year—women: men—was approximately 31 per cent: 69 per cent.

Crown Notices

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Crown notices have been served and Crown prosecutions initiated in each of the past 10 years; and whether he has any proposal relating to Crown immunity in Government Departments and agencies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following table shows the number of Crown enforcement notices issued over the last 10 years for which figures are available:

Crown enforcement notices issued by Health and Safety Executive's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates (a), 1983—1992-93

Year of issue (b)	Improvement	Deferred prohibition	Immediate prohibition	Total
1983	47	3	11	61
1984	38	—	12	50
1985	27	2	6	35
1986-87	7	1	2	10
1987-88	13	1	5	19
1988-89	8	—	5	13
1989-90	5	—	7	12
1990-91	18	—	4	22
1991-92	5	—	5	10
1992-93	4	2	5	11

(a) Includes notices issued by the Quarries Inspectorate for years since 1990-91.

(b) Figures for the calendar years 1983 to 1985 and the financial years beginning 1 April for subsequent years.

Under the present law, Crown bodies cannot be prosecuted, but administrative procedures are in place for the censure of Crown bodies in circumstances where prosecution would otherwise be considered. The number of censures in each of the past 10 years is shown in the following table:

Year	Number
1985	—
1986	—
1987	—
1988	1
1989	—
1990	3
1991	—
1992	3
1994	1

The Government have no immediate plans to change the current position, which is that Crown bodies are bound by health and safety legislation and Health and Safety Executive inspectors seek to ensure that the law is complied with and that Crown employers meet standards of good practice found elsewhere. I understand that the HSE is considering the implications of removing Crown immunity from prosecution under health and safety legislation.

Work Experience

Mr. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to encourage work experience schemes for pupils in their final year at school.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government announced on 24 May, Official Report, column 198, that they have asked training and enterprise councils and their partners to ensure that all pupils in their final year of compulsory education can have at least one week's work experience. An additional £23 million will be provided over the three years to 1997-98 to support this.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The majority of the Employment Department's skillcentres were privatised in 1990. There has been no other privatisation since.

We intend to privatise the Health and Safety Executive's electrical equipment certification service when a suitable legislative vehicle is available.

Engineering Industry (Training)

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has now completed his review of the engineering construction industry training board; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I am pleased to announce that the review of the Engineering Construction Industry Training Board has now been completed.

The review was wide-ranging and thorough. It included consultation with representatives of employers and employees in the engineering construction industry and an independent survey of all employers in scope to the board. There was widespread support from the industry for the retention of a statutory board with the power to raise a levy on employers.

While it remains Government policy that sector training arrangements should normally be non-statutory, the Government are persuaded that different considerations continue to apply in the engineering construction industry. Since becoming an independent board in 1991, the ECITB has made substantial progress towards modernising training in its industry. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has decided that it will be reconstituted as a statutory training board with effect from 23 July, until the end of March 1998, which will enable it to build on these achievements.

I shall be writing to the chairman of the new board in due course to set out in more detail the Government's expectations of the board. A copy of that letter will be placed in the Library.

May Day Bank Holiday

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on which day the May day bank holiday will fall during 1995 and 1996; and if he will list the dates of all the public holidays that have been fixed for 1995.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 8 July 1994]: On 16 December 1993 I announced that, for 1995 only, the early May bank holiday in England, Wales and Northern Ireland will be moved from the first Monday in May to the second Monday, 8 May, to link with events on and near VE day commemorating the 50th anniversary of the ending of the second world war. In Scotland, the anniversary will be marked by an additional day's bank holiday on the second Monday in May for 1995 only. In 1996, the early May bank holiday will revert to the first Monday in May. The bank and public holidays fixed for 1995 are set out in the following table:

Railway Signalmen

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 354, concerning the increase in real earnings of railway signalmen compared with white collar workers, if he will break down the figures to show the deciles in each case for 1979 to 1989 and 1989 to 1993 together with the actual earnings in April 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available is set out in the table. Railway signalmen are classified as skilled manual workers and therefore information for manual workers is also included in the table.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether railway signalmen are classified as skilled workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: For statistical purposes, railway singalmen are classified as skilled manual workers.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in real earnings of non-manual workers in (a) electricity, (b) office machinery, etc., (c) retail distribution, (d) railways, (e) banking etc., (f) banking and bill discounting, (g) business services, (h) accountants, auditors and tax experts, (i) social security, (j) higher education and (k) school education since 1989.

SCOTLAND

Maternity Units

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make funds available for the introduction of video monitoring cameras at all maternity units;

(2) if he will estimate the cost of bar-code tagging newly born infants at all maternity units;

(3) if he will consult urgently the Royal College of Midwives on proposals for security at maternity units;

(4) if he will extend the pilot schemes for tagging newly born infants at Edinburgh Simpson hospital and Law hospital;

(5) what proposals he has for introducing better security procedures at maternity units.

Mr. Stewart: It is for health boards and NHS trusts to consider and implement the most appropriate security measures to meet the needs of individual maternity units. It is for health boards to decide on the priorities for the extra funds which have been made available to them. My right hon. Friend does not propose to consult the Royal College of Midwives on this matter but any views which the college wishes to offer should be conveyed to health boards and NHS trusts. In addition he will arrange for the lessons drawn from the pilot schemes at Law hospital and Simpson Memorial maternity pavilion, Edinburgh to be disseminated.

The cost of bar code tagging would be relatively inexpensive since the electronic tags themselves are cheap, but the main costs would be on the scanning and alarm systems. There are several different types of security systems on the market, but an average cost would be between £15,000 and £20,000 for a large maternity unit.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of non-administrative staff in maternity units are part-time or temporary workers.

Mr. Stewart: Identification of temporary staff and of staff working solely within maternity units is not possible from data held centrally.

Legal Aid

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions his Department has given to consultants regarding a review of the functions of the Scottish Legal Aid Board; and if he will make it his policy to place a copy of any report in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In accordance with current practice, the Scottish Office Home and Health Department is at present seeking the views of interested parties on the quinquennial policy and financial management review of the Scottish Legal Aid Board. As part of that process, a small number of interviews with a range of interested individuals are being organised by the Scottish Office central research unit. Professor Alan Alexander, professor of local and public management at the university of Strathclyde, who is a member of the steering group set up to oversee the review, is providing assistance with the analysis of the results of these interviews. No further consultancy input to the review has yet been commissioned. My right hon. Friend will consider in due course how the results of the review should be publicised.

Scottish Enterprise and SDA

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Scottish Enterprise and the Scottish Development Agency spent on legal fees in each year in the period 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested for the Scottish Development Agency was not maintained centrally and is therefore not available. The level of spend on legal fees by Scottish Enterprise is an operational matter for that body and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Occupational Therapy (Children)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that a locally based paediatric occupational therapy service is provided for children in the Forth Valley health board area.

Mr. Stewart: Forth Valley health board has proposed, as part of its development plans for 1994-95, to set up a community paediatric occupational therapy service which will form part of a local community paediatric team.

Sherriff Court Actions

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many ordinary actions were raised in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Paisley, Dundee, Airdrie and Stornaway sheriff courts in (a) November 1992, (b) November 1993, (c) January 1994 and (d) May 1994.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures for ordinary actions are set out in the table:

	November 1992	November 1993	January 1994	May 1994
Glasgow	946	803	458	669

Perinatal and Neonatal Mortality

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the perinatal mortality rate and (b) the neonatal mortality rate in each health board for 1985, 1990 and 1993.

Mr. Stewart: The information is given in the table.

Health board	Perinatal mortality for Scotland Per 1,000 total births live and still 1985	1990	1993	Neonatal mortality for Scotland Per 1,000 live births 1985	1990	1993

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the legal fees incurred by Scottish Enterprise form part of its management running costs.

Mr. Stewart: Legal fees incurred by Scottish Enterprise do not form part of its management running costs but are part of a programme budget operated by the Legal Department, and from which the cost of any appropriate external legal advice would be met.

NHS Trust Hospitals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by wave the start-up costs for each NHS trust hospital.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 7 December 1993 Official Report, column 77.

Spanish and Portuguese

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many schools (a) Spanish and (b) Portuguese are taught; and how many (i) teachers and (ii) pupils are involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Results from the September 1993 schools census show that there were 9,981 pupils taking Spanish in 167 education authority secondary schools in Scotland. No pupils took Portuguese. At September 1992, the latest year for which information is available, there were 274 teachers teaching Spanish in education authority secondary schools; teachers teaching Portuguese are not separately identified in the school census.

At September 1993, 571 pupils in 10 education authority primary schools had contact with a subject specialist teacher in Spanish. No primary pupils had contact with a subject specialist in Portuguese. No information is held centrally on the numbers of teachers involved in teaching Spanish or Portuguese in primary schools.

River Pollution

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the results of the meeting of officials of his Department with Lothian River Purification Board and the ferruginous pollution problems of the River Almond and Breich water.

Sir Hector Monro: Senior officials of the Scottish Office Environment Department attended the launch of the Forth River Purification Board's water quality initiative on 16 May 1994. Topics highlighted by the board included the problem of ferruginous pollution from abandoned mines. No substantive discussions took place about individual rivers.

Courts

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what targets have been set for completing office business in the sheriff courts and supreme courts; and what performance was secured in 1993-94.

Mr. Lang: The targets set for completion of office business in the sheriff courts in 1993-94 are set out later. These targets remain in force for 1994-95. The percentage figures following each target indicate the proportion of sheriff courts achieving the target figures or better in the course of the year. More detailed information on the performance of individual court offices will be made available to local court advisory committees. Similar targets are in force in the supreme courts and all of these were achieved in 1993-94.

Targets for sheriff clerk offices and performance 1993-94

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what objectives for reducing court waiting periods have been established; what targets have been set for 1994-95 in respect of court waiting periods for the supreme and sheriff courts; and if he will make a statement about the performance of the supreme courts and each of the sheriff courts in 1993-94.

Mr. Lang: The programming of court business is a matter for the judiciary. Acting in co-operation with the judiciary in the supreme and sheriff courts, the Government seek to provide the resources which will allow speedy access to justice. Having regard to the time required by parties to have their cases properly prepared the following objectives have been adopted:

the Lord President of the Court of Session has accepted the recommendations of a Committee chaired by Lord Maxwell relating to the reduction of waiting periods in the Supreme Courts: the target is to reduce waiting periods to the recommended levels and, subject to any acceleration in the rate of increase in court work, maintain waiting periods at that level: for certain categories of hearing, additional targets involving much reduced waiting periods, have been set;

Sheriffs Principal have agreed to overall targets of reducing waiting periods for summary criminal trials in the Sheriff Courts to 12 weeks or less and to hold them at that level; and to maintain waiting periods at 12 weeks or less for civil cases in the Sheriff Courts.

The main targets for waiting periods for 1994-95 are set down as follows: "waiting period" is the period between a trial or proof being requested or an appeal being received and the date assigned expressed in weeks. Similar targets applied in 1993-94 and national performance for that year is noted in the second column in the table.

	Target	1993-94 Performance
Criminal Appeal Business
Summary prosecutions: Notes of Appeal against Sentence and Stated cases (accused in custody)	4	4
Court of Session
(a) Ordinary proofs	20	20
(b) Defended Consistorial proofs	17	18
Sheriff Courts (National average as at 31 March 1994
(a) Civil proofs/debates	12	11·6
(b) Summary Criminal Trials	12	15·2

In 1993-94 waiting periods of 12 weeks or less were achieved for civil debates/proofs in 81 per cent. of sheriff courts.

Waiting periods of 12 weeks or less were achieved for summary criminal business in 72 per cent. of sheriff courts.

Performance of individual sheriff courts at 31 March 1994 is set out in the following table.

In addition, the sheriffs principal have agreed that sheriff court programmes should be designed to ensure that the number of trials adjourned due to lack of court time should not exceed 5 per cent. of the total number set down, a target met in 83 per cent. of sheriff courts.

NHS Statutory Audit

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he proposes to make in the arrangements for NHS statutory audit in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to announce that, following discussions between the Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland and my officials, I have agreed to transfer responsibility for NHS statutory audit to the commission under the terms of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 as amended by section 36 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. The Accounts Commission for Scotland, as it will then be called, will take responsibility for all the statutory audit work of health boards, NHS trusts, GP fundholders and other health bodies in Scotland from 1 April 1995. It is envisaged that the audit programme will continue to be shared between the public sector and private audit firms.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the forthcoming policy and financial management review of Scottish Homes.

Mr. Lang: As part of the Government's rolling programme of five-yearly policy and financial management reviews of non-departmental public bodies, my Department will conduct a thorough review of Scottish Homes during 1994-95. The first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study. This will include an examination of the scope for discontinuing, privatising, contracting out or transferring to another body some or all of the functions carried out by Scottish Homes. This will include looking at how it takes forward the Government's housing policies in Scotland, the key objectives of which are: promoting greater housing choice, in particular home ownership; improving housing supply and quality; and making best use of scarce public sector resources. This study is now under way and I would welcome comments from interested parties. Comments should be sent by 16 September 1994 to:

Forestry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums have been expended on grants for planting of (a) broadleaf trees and (b) conifers in each of the last three years under each of the various incentive schemes in force; and what has been the average area of each planting on which grant was paid in those years.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The information is set out in the table.

Planting grants paid in Scotland (£'000s)

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
Conifer	3,500	5,600	5,700
Broadleaf	4,400	4,100	7,300
Total	7,900	9,700	13,000

Average area approved (hectares)

1991-92	1992-93	1993-94

Empty Properties

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the current level of empty properties owned by (a) the private sector, (b) local authorities, (c) housing associations and (d) Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The number of empty properties owned by local authorities and Scottish Homes was 18,611 and 1,632 respectively at 31 March 1993. Information on empty properties owned by the private sector and housing associations is not held centrally.

Public Bodies

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to compile a register of members' interests of the non-executive members of NHS trusts and health boards.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State recently issued to health boards and NHS trusts codes of conduct and accountability which provide for relevant interests to be entered in a register which will be available to the public.

Operation Cancellation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients, for each hospital, were not admitted within a month of a second cancellation of their operation in the last five years.

Mr. Stewart: Information on the incidence of cancellations in each hospital is set out in the "NHS Patient Treatment and Waiting Time Bulletin". Copies of the bulletin, which is published quarterly, have been placed in the Library of the House.

The systems for collecting information on the incidence of cancellations in hospitals in Scotland do not at present provide for identification of the numbers not admitted within a month of a second cancellation.

Gaelic Education

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when a copy of the summary of reponses to Her Majesty's inspectorate report, "Provision for Gaelic Education in Scotland" will be made available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1994]: A summary of the 123 comments received on the report is currently being produced by my officials and should be available in the Library within the next few weeks.

Housing Subsidy

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much subsidy in 1993 was directed to (a) council housing and (b) other public sector housing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1994]: In 1993-94, direct subsidies to council housing through housing support grant and general fund contributions amounted to £36·1 million. In the same year, subsidies to other Scottish public sector housing amounted to £21·3 million.

House Condition Survey

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the data on health issues collected during the Scottish house condition survey.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The information collected in the 1991 Scottish house condition survey consisted of two main strands: a survey to assess the physical condition of the occupied housing stock across all tenures and a socio-economic survey of the residents. The resulting data was analysed by Scottish Homes and poublished in July 1993.

The survey was not designed to collect information on health issues.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has of the numbers and percentages of patients admitted within three months and within 12 months of being listed, and for each hospital.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The information is shown in the table.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish, for each hospital, the percentage of patients seen within half an hour of appointment times for each of the past five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Information on how long patients have to wait to be seen after their appointment time at out-patient clinics is monitored by health boards and is not collected centrally. Health boards report that few patients overall wait longer than 30 minutes; that where they do they are given an explanation and an indication of how much longer the wait is likely to be; and that where monitoring reveals a particular problem action is taken to remedy it.

GP Fundholders

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner fundholders he expects there to be in each health board area by January 1995; and how many there are currently in each area.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: According to the latest information provided by health boards the current number of operational fundholders and estimated numbers by January 1995 are as set out in the table.

Ambulances

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct ambulance services to remove the bull bars fitted to their vehicles immediately and instruct all ambulance services that the fitting of bull bars to emergency vehicles is prohibited on the grounds of safety.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: There are no bull bars fitted to the fleet of accident and emergency ambulances usd by the Scottish Ambulance Service and there are no plans to do so. Only 13 Land Rovers have bull bars. These vehicles are useful for work in rough terrain. The bars were supplied and fitted by the manufacturer. The Scottish Ambulance Service would comply with any safety guidance issued by the manufacturer or the Department of Transport.

Ambulance Arrival Times

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the numbers and percentages of emergency ambulances arriving within 14 minutes in urban areas and 19 minutes in rural areas, for the past five years.

Mr. Stewart: The information available is as follows:

	[1]High		Medium		Sparse
Year	Number of calls	Percentage in 14 minutes	Number of calls	Percentage in 18 minutes	Number of calls	Percentage in 21 minutes

Highly populated > 3 per acre	14 minutes
Medium populated < 3 > 0·5 per acre	18 minutes
Sparsely populated < 0·5 per acre	21 minutes

[3] Figures are not available for 1990-91 and 1989-90.

Housing

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the real-terms increase or decrease in his Department's spending on each sector of housing since 1979, setting aside borrowing consents and income gained from sale of housing stock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Expenditure by the Scottish Office Environment Department and the Scottish Office Industry Department, for housing in the new towns, on housing subsidies to local authorities and new towns, which accounted for around one third of the net housing programme in 1979-80, decreased in real terms by 93 per cent. and 70·3 per cent. respectively between 1979-80 and 1993-94 consistent with our policy of ending indiscriminate subsidies and concentrating resources on tenants in greatest need through housing benefit. The Scottish Special Housing Association and Housing Corporation in Scotland were subsumed by Scottish Homes in 1989 which is funded on a different basis; no comparison with 1979-80 can therefore be made.

Pollution

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the number of patients suffering ill health or death from carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide, tobacco smoke, formaldehyde, asbestos, microbes and radon pollution in their homes.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Morbidity details are not available. The death data for 1992 are set out in the table.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish, for each accident and emergency unit, the percentage of patients seen within five minutes of arrival for each of the last five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Information on waiting times in accident and emergency departments has not previously been collected centrally. On 31 March 1994, my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State announced waiting time targets which each health board in Scotland had agreed with hospitals providing accident and emergency services. The targets cover the maximum time to be seen and assessed; the maximum time to be seen by a doctor and have treatment comence and the maximum time for completion of treatment. Arrangements are in hand for the monitoring of performance against these targets to be carried out later in the year. Information on waiting times in accident and emergency departments is scheduled for publication in 1995.

Hospital League Tables

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statistics he will collect in order to prepare hospital league tables.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The statistical requirements of the patients charter are under constant review. Over the past few years the "NHS Patient Treatment and Waiting Time Bulletin" has expanded as more, and reliable, statistics on performance against charter standards have become available. This process will continue.

Water Piping (Dissolved Lead)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest information for each region of the level of dissolved lead in water piping.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Such detailed information is not held centrally. Results of analysis of water samples taken from consumers' taps are held on public registers maintained by the water authorities. Summaries of this information are included in the authorities' annual reports on drinking water quality, available from each authority. Further summaries are included in the annual drinking water quality in Scotland report published by the Scottish Office, copies of which are in the Library.

TREASURY

Pensions Contributions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the E/T ratio for each year since 1964 for working on two-thirds average and twice average earnings, where E represents the direct cost of employment, including national insurance and pension contributions, and T represents take-home pay after deducting normal PAYE and national insurance and representative pension contributions.

Mr. Dorrell: The information on pension contributions which would be necessary to answer this question is not available.

Living Standards

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on living standards.

Mr. Portillo: Government policies provide a firm basis for sustained growth with low inflation. That is the best way to protect the living standards of all groups.

Privatisation

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the net contributions to public finances from the formerly publicly owned companies in the five years prior to their privatisation.

Mr. Dorrell: The net contributions to public finances, represented by the negative external financing requirements—EFRS—for ex-nationalised industries in the years leading to their privatisations, is shown in the table below. The positive EFRs represent a cost to the public finances. Data in previous years are not available on a consistent basis.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of corporation tax received from formerly publicly owned companies since each privatisation has taken place.

Mr. Dorrell: Corporation tax paid by formerly publicly-owned companies since 1987-88 is as follows:

Year	£ billion
1987-88	1·5
1988-89	1·6
1989-90	1·5
1990-91	2·1

Pensioners (Income Tax)

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount of income tax paid, in the most recent year for which figures are available, by people aged (a) over 65 years, (b) over 70 years and (c) over 75 years.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisional estimates for 1994-95 are given below:

Total income tax liability

	£ billion
Taxpayers aged 65 years or over	5·0
Taxpayers aged 70 years or over	3·0
Taxpayers aged 75 years or over	1·6
All taxpayers	69·7

Royal Taxation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the broad categories of spending which are tax deductible under the memorandum of understanding on royal taxation; and what limitations there are on the items which are classified as tax deductible.

Mr. Dorrell: Appendix A to the memorandum of understanding sets out rules for determining the head of state expenses deductible from Privy Purse income, so that income tax falls only on the income used for the Queen's personal expenditure. Paragraph 4 lists nine categories of deductible expenses. Similarly, appendix B to the memorandum sets out four categories of expenses for the income of the Prince of Wales from the Duchy of Cornwall. The memorandum of understanding makes it clear that only official expenses within these categories are deductible.

Venture Capital Trusts

Mr. Horam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he is making with consultations on the consultative document on venture capital trusts issued last March.

Mr. Dorrell: We have undertaken extensive consultations on the venture capital trust proposals and are now reflecting on the points that have been made.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 9 March, Official Report, column 220, if he will make it his policy to require those landowners benefiting from conditional exemption from inheritance tax on the grounds that there is public access across their land to cause notices to be erected at suitable intervals around the perimeter of the land indicating a right of public access.

Mr. Dorrell: As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member on 8 March, Official Report, column 98, the owner of land which is conditionally exempt from inheritance tax is required to publicise the agreed public access arrangements. Each case is considered individually and the extent and nature of the publicity will depend on all the facts of each particular case. For new designations of scenic land in England, owners are required to display at all points of entry on to their land map boards showing the agreed public access.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total acreage of land in England where the landowners benefit from conditional exemption from inheritance tax by virtue of there being a right of public access.

Mr. Dorrell: The area, rounded, of land in England of outstanding scenic interest which is conditionally exempt from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax is 51,000 hectares.

Higher Rate Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1993, Official Report, column 970, if he will provide comparable information on higher rate tax forgone by reigon for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The available data were given in my reply of 17 December.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what factors Her Majesty's Government took into account before entry into the exchange rate mechanism; what estimates of the effect on United Kingdom exports and imports were made at the time; and what was the outturn up to September 1992;

(2) what has been the change in the nominal rate for the pound sterling against the (a) deutschmark and (b) ecu since December 1989; and what has been the effect on exports, imports, output and employment in the principal import-competing and export industries, distinguishing between trade with EC countries and trade with the rest of the world;

(3) what was the change in the real and nominal exchange rates of the pound against (a) the dollar, (b) EU countries and (c) the rest of world from (i) September 1992 and (ii) February 1993 to latest available date.

Mr. Nelson: The Government took into account a broad range of economic and political factors before sterling's entry into the exchange rate mechanism in 1990. The exchange rate is only one factor affecting exports, imports, output and employment. It is difficult to isolate the effects of the exchange rate from that of other factors such as activity and prices in the United Kingdom and its trading partners. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 March, Official Report, column 15, which provides references to exchange rate and price data which can be used to calculate the information requested.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the import share of goods sold retail which are covered by the retail prices index; what has been the relative price increase since August 1992 of (a) such imported goods and (b) domestically produced goods.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is not available.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the yield from capital gains tax in each of the last five years and what were the costs of collection in each year; what proportion of the yield and costs in each year derived from the taxation of investments in unquoted companies; and what estimates he has made of each figure for each of the next two years.

Mr. Dorrell: The requested figures for capital gains tax yield and costs of collection are:

£ million

	Total Net Receipts[1]	Cost of Collection[1,2]
1989-90	1,854	34·3
1990-91	1,852	39·0
1991-92	1,140	43·3
1992-93	982	38·4
[3]1993-94	711	[4]N/A
[3]1994-95	900	N/A
[3]1995-96	1,000	N/A

[1] The figures quoted exclude tax on gains made by companies included in corporation tax. Some of the costs associated with companies, however, cannot be separately identified and are therefore included in the costs figures for CGT rather than for corporation tax.

[2] Costs are based on total departmental expenditure. Manpower usage and costs of administration for 1989-90 onwards have been adjusted to reflect a new basis of costing therefore direct comparisons of this and later figures with earlier years may be misleading. More detail regarding this adjustment is given in the Board of Inland Revenue's Report for the year ending 31st March 1991.

[3] Summer Economic Forecast rounded to the nearest £100 million.

[4] The 1993-94 cost of collection is not yet available and will be given in the Board of Inland Revenue's Report for the year ending 31st March 1994 to be published in September 1994.

[5] Provisional.

I regret that routine information on CGT yield and costs analysed by type of asset is not available. However, a recent survey of capital gains taxpayers with liabilities in 1990-91 showed that around one sixth of the disposals and one third of net chargeable gains arose from shares in unquoted companies. This survey was before changes were made to retirement relief and the introduction of reinvestment relief, which will affect the proportion of tax coming from investment in unquoted trading companies.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the annual loss of revenue from capital gains tax resulting from a change of tax residence by individual taxpayers.

Mr. Dorrell: The information on which to base a reliable estimate is not available.

Tax Receipts

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total receipts from (a) value added tax and (b) income tax for 1979 and for each subsequent financial year for which figures are available.

Sir John Cope: The information requested is given in the table below. It also appears monthly in "Financial Statistics" which is produced by the Central Statistical Office.

VAT and Income tax receipts

Year	VAT (£ billion)	Income tax (£ billion)
1979-80	8·2	20·6
1980-81	11·0	24·3

Alcohol Duties

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amounts and percentages of the total revenue raised by duties on alcohol arose from (a) spirits, (b) wines and (c) beers in each month since 1 December 1993 or other convenient period.

Sir John Cope: A breakdown of excise revenue for spirits, beer and wine from December 1993 to May 1994 is as follows:

£ million

	December 1993	January 1994	February 1994	March 1994	April 1994	May 1994
Spirits	307	115	68	112	126	128
Percentage of alcohol revenue	43·6	25·4	26·5	32·3	28·9	30
Beer	242	235	133	161	214	201
Percentage of alcohol revenue	34·3	51·9	51·6	46·8	49·1	47·2
Wine	148	93	53	67	86	87
Percentage of alcohol revenue	21	20·5	20·5	19·2	19·7	20·4

Note:—The figures for April and May 1994 are provisional.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners receiving compensation for the cost of value added tax on fuel will pay income tax on that money.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 June 1994]: Some 3·4 million pensioners, out of a total of 10 million, pay income tax.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the compensation for the cost of value added tax on fuel given to pensioners will return to the Treasury in the form of income tax.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 June 1994]: The Inland Revenue estimates that in 1994-95, about £20 million of income tax will come from the increase in benefits to pensioners given in the value added tax compensation package.

Consultants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultancy income has been paid under Government contracts to (i) Touche Ross, (ii) Arthur Andersen, (iii) Coopers and Lybrand, (iv) Ernst and Young, (v) KPMG Peat Marwick and (vi) Price Waterhouse in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 1 July 1994]: This information is not held centrally.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 8 July 1994]: I know of no such cases.

Luxury Cars

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he will take to ensure that non-Italian luxury cars are subject to a taxation system when sold in Italy that does not discriminate against cars made in other EU countries.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

Officials have made written and oral representations in Brussels in support of a formal complaint to the Commission by a British car manufacturer. The British embassy in Rome has raised the issue with the Italian Government. We have made clear our willingness to discuss further action to help British car manufacturers affected by the Italian tax.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the number of fathers who have left their jobs following assessment by the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available. It is, however, unlikely that many fathers would leave their jobs to avoid paying maintenance for their children. Following the legislative changes in February, the maintenance assessment formula ensures that all absent parents, and their second families, are at least £30 a week better off after payment of maintenance than they would be if unemployed and receiving income support. In addition, someone who has left work voluntarily is not entitled to unemployment benefit, and income support is payable at a reduced rate.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints he has received about the workings of the Child Support Agency since its creation.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. T. Hughes to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 12 July 1994:

In her absence the Chief Executive, Mrs. Hepplewhite, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of complaints that have been received about the Child Support Agency since its creation.

Between 5 April 1993 and 31 March 1994, 10,886 complaints were recorded, which represents just over 1 per cent. of the 850,000 cases the Agency has taken on.

I hope you will find this reply helpful.

War Pensions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently in receipt of (a) war widows' pension or (b) war disablement pension.

Mr. Hague: On 30 June 1994 there were:

(a) 49,272 war widows' pensions in payment; and

(b) 250,315 war disablement pensions in payment.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has of the total cost of war widows' pension payments in (a) 1978-79, (b) 1983-84, (c) 1987-88, (d) 1992-93, (e) 1993-94 and (f) 1994-95.

Mr. Hague: Table A details actual expenditure in respect of war widows for the financial years 1978-79, 1983-84, 1987-88, and 1992-93

Table A

Financial year	Amount (£ millions)
1978-79	117
1983-84	177
1987-88	190
1992-93	225

Total actual expenditure for 1993-94 is not yet available. Table B details the current estimate of expenditure in respect of war widows for that year and the estimate for 1994-95.

Table B

Financial year	Amount (£ millions)

Disabled People

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, when the hearing of a case involving a disabled person has to be resited because of difficulties of access for that disabled person from what would have been its normal venue, the resultant additional expenses can be reimbursed by the appropriate administrative department.

Mr. Scott: Any appellant who attends the hearing of an appeal has all travelling and associated expenses reimbursed.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the amounts payable and the earnings limits for adult dependency increases payable with invalidity benefit since 1971, (b) the changes in eligibility conditions for adult dependency increases payable with invalidity benefit since 1971, (c) the arrangements for transitional protection for each and (d) numbers of claimants receiving transitional protection under each heading.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the tables:

(i) adult dependency increases: rates and earnings limits

Date	Weekly rate £	Earnings limit £
September 1971	3·70	9·50
October 1972	4·15	9·50

April 1992	32·55	43·10
April 1993	33·70	44·65
April 1994	34·50	45·45

Note: Until 16 September 1985, the increase was withdrawn on a tapered basis when earnings exceeded the limit shown above by 0·10p or more. From that date except in transitionally protected cases the increase is wholly extinguished when earnings exceed the limit shown above by any amount.

(ii) Changes in eligibility conditions and details of transitional protection

Date and description of change	Details of transitional protection
November 1981
Payment for a prescribed relative discontinued	Right to protection continues for a maximum of two years whilst entitlement remains. No longer applies.
November 1983
Provision made for a dependent husband if his earnings are no more than the increase payable.	Not required—beneficial change.
November 1984
Occupational pensions treated as earnings.	Protection continues whilst increase remains in payment. Number still benefitting unknown.
Provision made for a male adult dependant caring for a child.	Not required—beneficial change.
September 1985
Tapered earnings rule abolished (see note to Table (i)).	Right to protection continues whilst entitlement remains. 3,000[1] recipients estimated as benefitting at 4 April 1992.
October 1989
Personal pensions treated as earnings.	Protection continues whilst increase remains in payment. Number still benefitting unknown.

[1] Rounded to the nearest thousand.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people on invalidity benefit who were found (a) capable of alternative work and (b) capable of normal occupation in each of the quarters between the quarter ended June 1993 and quarter ended June 1994 subsequently received (i) unemployment benefit, (ii) income support, by virtue of signing on as unemployed and (iii) regained entitlement to invaldity benefit.

Mr. Scott: Information about subsequent activities of people found capable of work following a medical examination by the Benefits Agency medical service is being collected as part of the arrangements for monitoring the revised medical control procedures introduced from April 1993. The sample size from this exercise is not yet sufficient to provide statistically reliable information.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total sum currently withheld from recipients of invalidity benefit in respect of the Government's appeal against the decision of the social security commissioner regarding equal treatment for women and men in entitlement to the benefit.

Mr. Scott: Around 37,000 women are having their increase of benefit suspended pending the outcome of the appeal. Information about the amount of money involved is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals concerning invalidity benefit where received by his Department during each of the quarters between the quarter ended June 1993 to the quarter ended June 1994; and what percentage of these were found in the claimant's favour.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table:

Appeals registered with Social Security Appeal Tribunals: Invalidity Benefit

Benefits Claims

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action is being taken to establish and investigate inconsistencies in information given in relation to claims for different benefits made by the same person.

Mr. Lilley: I have authorised a series of exercises to compare information held on different departmental computer files to ensure that inconsistencies are identified. Work has already started to match data for income support, family credit and child benefit. Any inconsistencies identified from such work will be investigated.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Hague: None.

Residence Qualification

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons foreigners entering the United Kingdom immediately qualify for social security benefits; which other EC countries have a similar policy; and if he will now take steps to amend the recent United Kingdom situation so as to require a minimum of six months' residence to qualify for benefit.

Mr. Burt: In general, income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit are not available to people who come from outside the European Economic Area. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced yesterday new regulations which will reduce eligibility further. From 1 August claimants to these benefits will have to satisfy a habitual residence test, unless they are workers, refugees or given exceptional leave to remain in this country. The qualifying conditions for other social security benefits vary but are usually dependant on a contribution condition. Eligibility conditions for income-related safety net benefits in other EEA countries vary widely, but most have a residence condition, the changes announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, yesterday bring us into line with them.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many British pensioners residing overseas in countries where their pensions are frozen are over (a) 80, (b) 75 and (c) 70 years of age; and what would be the cost of unfreezing their pensions above these respective age thresholds.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

	Number of pensioners
Pensioners aged 80 and over	79,273
Pensioners aged 75 and over	123,366
Pensioners aged 70 and over	228,377

Estimated cost of unfreezing pensions

	£ million
Pensioners aged 80 and over	107
Pensioners aged 75 and over	138
Pensioners aged 70 and over	192

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals are in receipt of frozen British state retirement pensions; and what is the average level of weekly payment in (a) Australia, (b) Canada, (c) New Zealand, (d) South Africa and (e) the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Country	Number of retirement pension and widow beneficiaries at 29 January 1994	Estimated average level of weekly payment £
Australia	159,235	21·54
Canada	118,362	17·86
New Zealand	32,042	20·57
South Africa	33,208	21·17
Falkland Islands	17	29·26

Benefits Agency

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each Benefits Agency district office in Birmingham (a) how many people were in receipt of (i) invalidity benefit and (ii) disability premium at the beginning of each of the last three financial years, (b) how many people (1) in receipt of invalidity benefit and (2) in receipt of disability premium were referred to a regional medical officer for a medical examination in each of the last three financial years and how many were found to be (x) incapable of work, (y) fit for work within limits and (z) fit for work.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 11 July 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about benefit recipients in Birmingham.

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because Benefit Agency (BA) District boundaries do not correspond exactly with county or borough boundaries.

Birmingham postal districts B1 to B45 are dealt with by the BA Districts of Birmingham, Chamberlain, Birmingham Heartlands, Birmingham North West, Birmingham South East and Birmingham South West collectively. Other Birmingham postal districts are dealt with by BA Districts which also cover areas outside the Birmingham grographical region. Statistics relating to recipients of Invalidity Benefit (IVB) and Disability Premium payable with Income Support dealt with by these Districts and who were resident in a Birmingham postal district could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

At Appendix 1, I have provided the numbers of people claiming IVB in each of the Birmingham Districts covering postal districts B1 to B45. The figures show the position on the last working day of March in each year from and including 1992. This information was obtained from a monthly 100% clerical count of cases in each District's offices, and represents the most accurate statistics available to show the position at the beginning of each financial year.

No corresponding information can be provided for March 1991. IVB recipients were not identified separately until May 1991. Prior to this date, numbers of IVB cases were aggregated with Sickness Benefit cases. In addition, there is no requirement for Districts to retain statistics relating to numbers of claims for more than two years.

The statistics provided for IVB recipients to include a small number of customers who have claimed but are not receiving benefit; eg. where there is underlying title to IVB but a higher, overlapping benefit is in payment.

At Appendix 2 I have provided numbers of people receiving Disability Premium with their entitlement to Income Support from the BA Birmingham Districts on the last working day of March each year since 1992. Statistics relating to Income Support recipients are not routinely collected in relation to financial years. The figures provided represent the most accurate available to reflect the position on the dates in question.

Information regarding numbers of recipients of Invalidity Benefit and Disability Premium referred to the Medical Reference Service of the Benefits Agency Medical Service (BAMS), (formerly the Regional Medical Service), in the last three financial years; and the outcomes of any medical examinations; is only available at disproportionate cost.

BA Districts in Birmingham refer cases to the BAMS, Birmingham, reference office. However, this office also receives references from a much larger geographical area. Such information as is available relating to the Birmingham reference office has been provided at Appendix 3. These statistics have only been maintained since 1 January 1993 and therefore no earlier information is available.

BAMS provide an opinion on a customer's capacity for work. However, the decision on this question lies with the Adjudication Officer (AO), the independent adjudication authority. The AO considers the BAMS report along with all other available evidence.

Where the customer has a regular employment, BAMS provide an opinion on capacity for work in that regular employment and any suitable alternative work. Statistics relating to numbers of cases found incapable of work; fit for suitable alternative work; and fit for work; by an AO following reference to BAMS, could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Social Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for (a) social fund grants and (b) social fund loans, that met the criteria, were refused because of budgetary constraints in each social security office in the United Kingdom in each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 11 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Social Fund (SF) applications refused on grounds of budgetary constraints in the United Kingdom since 1989-90.

I have confined my answer to the former Department of Social Security Local Offices and Benefits Agency Districts, as questions concerning Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

I should explain that District budgets, which must not be exceeded, have to be managed so that, as far as possible, similar levels of need can be met throughout the year. Therefore, Social Fund Officers (SFOs) ensure that the highest priority needs are met whilst adopting as consistent an approach as possible.

Information for the year 1989-90 is not available by Local Office but you may wish to know that the number of loans and grants refused nationally on the grounds of insufficient priority in that year was 138,997 and 50,342 respectively.

Details of loans and grants refused on grounds of insufficient priority for the year 1990-91 by former Departmental Local Office and for the years 1991-92 to 1993-94 by Benefits Agency District are enclosed and copies have been placed in the Library under the heading Department of Social Security, Social Fund, Applications Refused on the Grounds of Budgetary Constraints 1990-91—1993-94.

The new Social Fund Computer System (SFCS) introduced in 1993-94, collects additional statistics which were not held on the old system. Many statistical items are collected differently and are not directly comparable with previous years. The previous system recorded reasons for refusal per application whereas SFCS records reasons for refusal per item requested. In cases where a partial award is made a reason for refusal will also be appropriate. As SFCS was introduced into Districts on a rollout basis throughout the year, the figures for 1993-94 will be a combination of the information held on the two systems.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Excise Duty Discs

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of vehicle excise duty discs that are stolen from vehicles each year.

Mr. Key: Precise figures are not available for the number of VED discs stolen from vehicles each year. However, approximately 200,000 discs are either lost or stolen annually.

Railway Industry Posts (Pay Policy)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what levels of post the public sector pay policy applies in the railway industry.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's approach to public sector pay applies to the total pay bills of the various components of the railway industry.

Public Transport Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he keeps regarding the proportion of gross domestic product spent on (a) buses, (b) trains and (c) all public transport, annually, for the years 1979 to 1993, inclusive.

Mr. Freeman: Expenditure on public transport, by passengers and through grants and subsidies, as a percentage of GDP was as follows:

Total of grants/subsidies and receipts

Year	Rail		Bus		Taxi	Total

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Norris: The following organisations have been privatised since 1990: five trust ports—Clyde, Forth, Medway, Tees and Hartlepool, and Tilbury; two operating subsidiaries of London Buses Ltd.—London Coaches Ltd. and Stanwell Buses Ltd.; DVOIT, the former IT arm of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency; and three subsidiaries of British Rail—Transmark, Meldon quarry, and special trains unit.

The position on further privatisation is as follows:

The Government believe that the future of a number of the remaining larger trust ports should be within the private sector; London Transport are planning to sell the remaining 10 operating subsidiaries of London Buses Ltd. and London Transport Advertising Ltd. by the end of this year; my right hon. Friend announced on 30 March his decision to privatise the Transport Research Laboratory, which we hope can be achieved during 1995-96. In addition, plans to privatise the railways include:

Three rolling stock leasing companies (Eversholt, Angel, and Porterbrook) to be offered for sale in 1995.

Twenty-five passenger franchises to be offered for sale as follows:

during 1995:

East Coast Main Line; Great Western Main Line; ScotRail; Gatwick Express; London, Tilbury and Southend; South West.

during 1996:

Anglia; Merseyrail; South Wales and West; South London and Sussex Coast Lines; Cardiff Valleys; Midland Main Line; West Coast Main Line.

for later sale:

Central Region; Cross Country; North East Region; Thames; West Anglia and Great Northern; Kent Link and Kent Coast Lines; Northampton and North London Lines; Chiltern Line; Great Eastern; North West Region; Thameslink.

Railtrack to be privatised in due course. There is no timetable for sale.

Freight businesses: Freightliner (BR's container business) and Red Star (express parcels) were advertised for sale in May 1994. BR's trainload freight services, and the Rail Express systems (mail train business) will be offered for sale in 1995. The Channel Tunnel freight services will be privatised once they have been established fully.

Fourteen Infrastructure Service Units. Sales due to be completed by April 1996.

European Passengers Services (a Government owned company). The intention is for EPS to be transferred in 1995, along with Union Railways (a subsidiary of the British Railways Board), to the consortium chosen to build and own the Channel Tunnel Rail Link.

Some 30 other businesses which provide support services to the railway industry will be offered for sale as soon as possible. they include:

British Rail Telecommunications plc;
British Rail Maintenance Ltd. and Level 5 depots;
The Works Division;
Marketing Services;
Technical Services;
Business Systems;
Quality and Safety Systems;
Training activities and establishments

Note: Two of these businesses will be offered to the private sector

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what role his Department has had in negotiations between Manchester airport and the Highways Agency; when he expects the negotiations will be concluded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I have kept in close touch with with the negotiations between Manchester Airport plc, the Highways Agency and officials of the Government Office for the North-West over the provision of road access to Manchester airport if consent is given for the construction of a second runway. These discussions continue.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

The Attorney-General: None. As to the future, I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) on 8 July 1994, Official Report, column 337.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Orders In Council

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the titles of the Orders in Council enacted under the (a) affirmative, (b) negative and (c) emergency procedures for each year since 1979.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: A list of the Orders in Council that have been made under Northern Ireland Act 1974 since 1979 will be placed in the Library.

Schools (Capital Grants)

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all applications for capital grants from (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) integrated schools from 1990 to 1993; and if he will list those grants approved, the date approved and the capital fund requested and granted.

Mr. Ancram: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Benefit

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claimants living in private rented accommodation had their housing benefit reduced in the last year; and what was the average level of reduction.

Mr. Ancram: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Renovation and Replacement Grants

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount of renovation and replacement grants paid out in each year since 1989-90; and what is the latest available information for each district council area in the Province.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. However I am advised by its Chief Executive that the information requested is as follows:

Table 1: Expenditure by grant type

£ million

	Renovation[1]	Replacement[2]	Other[3]	Total
1989-90	22·50	nil	11·1	33·6

1992-93	21·00	nil	9·1	30·1
1993-94	23·94	0·66	7·8	32·4

The Housing (NI) Order 1992 introduced a new grants regime and the figures supplied reflect comparable grants under the new and old schemes.
[1] The figures for Renovation Grants include Improvement Grants and grants associated with disabled facilities.
[2] Replacement grants were first introduced in the financial year 1991-92 and expenditure did not accrue until the 1993-94 financial year.
[3] "Other" includes Repair, Intermediate, Houses in Multiple Occupation, and Minor Works Grants.

Further expenditure of £29·3m was incurred under the previous scheme but is not available by Council area.

Omagh-Ballygawley Road

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to commence the upgrading of the Omagh to Ballygawley road.

Mr. Tim Smith: Two schemes at Brackagh and Augher Point have been completed and a scheme to provide a climbing lane at Garvaghy will start in the 1997-98 financial year, subject to the continuing availability of finance.

Cookstown Bypass

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Department of the Environment has to commence the completion of the Cookstown bypass.

Mr. Tim Smith: The completion of the Cookstown bypass is not included in the Department's current five-year major road works programme.

Workspace, Draperstown Ltd.

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what grants have been received from central Government, the International Fund for Ireland and European sources by Workspace, Draperstown Ltd.

Mr. Tim Smith: Grants received by Workspace, Draperstown Ltd. and its subsidiaries from central Government and European sources are as follows:

Local Enterprise Development Unit	986,990
European Regional Development Fund	197,400
Department of Agriculture	2,138
EU LEADER Programme	21,470
Training and Employment Agency	[1]3,608,873
EU HORIZON Programme	130,380

[1] Last two years only.

The question of the amount of grant aid received from the International Fund for Ireland is a matter for the board of the fund, which is independent of Her Majesty's Government.

Child Care

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much the Department of Health spends on child care; on what provision this sum is spent; and how many children receive the child care.

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Health and Social Services encourages the development of child care by grant aiding regional voluntary child care organisations in Northern Ireland. In the current financial year, over £241,000 is being provided. That is in addition to the support that health and social services boards provide to local day care projects, which in 1991-92, the latest year for which the information is available, amounted to £1,598,000. In that year, boards also spent £148,000 on family day centres, although those do not cater exclusively for parents with young children. In January 1994, the Department also allocated £310,000 to the health and social services boards on a once-only basis in support of local initiatives in the child care sector.

Details of the forms of provision and number of places available, as at 31 March 1993, are as follows:

Type	Places available
Pre-school playgroups	14,742
Day nurseries	2,080
Childminders	13,492
Total	30,314

Prison Statistics

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners are at present being held (a) Magilligan, (b) Maze, (c) Crumlin and (d) Maghaberry prisons.

Sir John Wheeler: The prison population in these establishments on 7 July 1994 was as follows:

Establishment	Number of prisoners
HM Prison Magilligan	297
HM Prison Maze	575
MR Prison Belfast	547
HM Prison Maghaberry	327

Integrated Schools

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the location of each (a) primary and (b) secondary integrated school in Northern Ireland, together with the catchment area from which its pupils are drawn, the number of children at each school and its capacity; and if he will give the number of (i) voluntary grammar, (ii) maintained primary and secondary schools and (iii) controlled primary and secondary schools within each such catchment area, showing the number of pupils at those schools and their capacity, or as much of such information as is readily available to him.

Mr. Ancram: The "open enrolment" regulations currently in operation allow parents to state a preference for the school which they wish their child to attend. If the school has places, it must accept the child. Catchment areas as such are not prescribed and the Department does not hold information on the catchment area of each school.

The information readily available on integrated schools is as follows:

Integrated schools in Northern Ireland

School name	Location	Capacity	Enrolments (1993-94)

[1] As these schools have not been open for the full seven years of primary level education and five years of secondary level education. The figures represent planned long-term capacity.

Benefits

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland were in receipt of (a) disability allowance, (b) attendance allowance, (c) family credit, (d) income support and (e) invalidity benefit, at the latest available date.

Mr. Ancram: The information available is given as follows:

Number of claimants in receipt of certain benefits in Northern Ireland May 1994

Type of benefit	Number
Attendance Allowance	49,237
Disability Living Allowance	67,980
Family Credit	19,952
Income Support	222,621
Invalidity Benefit	67,813

Child Support Agency

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many cases the Child Support Agency has used earnings deduction orders to obtain maintenance payments.

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Child Support Agency under its chief executive, Patrick Devlin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Pat Devlin to Rev. William McCrea, dated 5 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about the number of cases where a Deduction from Earnings Order is used to obtain maintenance.

Between April 1993 and 30 June 1994 Deductions from Earnings Orders were imposed in 297 cases.

I hope you find this information useful.

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases have been dealt with by the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Child Support Agency under its chief executive, Patrick Devlin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Pat Devlin to Rev. William McCrea, dated 5 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about the number of cases dealt with by the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland.

Between April 1993 and 1 July 1994 the Agency contacted 25,423 persons with care of children and in 16,990 cases application was returned. The Agency has cleared 14,121 cases in the same period.

I hope you find this information useful.

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases the Child Support Agency has pursued to date where there is a court agreement regarding maintenance in existence.

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Child Support Agency under its chief executive, Patrick Devlin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Pat Devlin to Rev. William McCrea, dated 5 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about the number of cases the Child Support Agency has pursued to date where there is a court order agreement regarding maintenance in existence.

Information on the number of cases assessed where there was a previous court agreement is not collected routinely and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this information useful.

Job Creation

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs have been created through (a) the Industrial Development Board and (b) Local Enterprise Development Unit initiatives in each Northern Ireland constituency in each year since 1990.

Mr. Tim Smith: Information on job creations is not available in the form requested. Statistics for job creations are not available before 1991-92. The table below gives details of IDB and LEDU job creations for Northern Ireland since 1991-92.

	New jobs created
	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
Industrial Development Board	2,490	2,815	3,289
Local Enterprise Development Unit	1,750	2,630	2,870

Roads

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the allocation of Department of the Environment finances for (a) road maintenance, (b) major and (c) minor roadworks in each of the 26 district council areas in the last financial year.

Mr. Tim Smith: Expenditure for the 1993-94 financial year is as follows:

District council	Road maintenance	Major works[1]	Minor Works
Antrim	2,213	1,415	419
Ards	1,988	75	383
Armagh	3,028	0	881

Omagh	3,106	107	698
Strabane	2,517	150	541
Total	61,045	19,183	15,119

[1] Major works are not allocated on a District Council basis. These figures represent expenditure on specific schemes some of which may have been completed prior to 1993-94.
[2] Includes expenditure on Belfast Cross Harbour Bridges.

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what investigations have been carried out in Northern Ireland in relation to the link between the road network and employment and prosperity.

Mr. Tim Smith: While no specific investigations have been carried out by the Department, the link between the road network and the economy is one of the factors considered in the formulation of road policy.

Education Costs

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average cost of educating a child at (a) a controlled primary school, (b) a controlled secondary school, (c) a voluntary grammar school, (d) an integrated primary school, (e) an integrated secondary school and (f) an integrated primary school in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The average expenditure per pupil in Northern Ireland in 1992-93 was as follows:

Controlled primary school	1,393
Controlled secondary school	2,294
Voluntary grammar school	2,157
Integrated primary school	1,697
Integrated secondary school	2,268

Public Bodies

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether his appointments to public bodies and non-departmental public bodies are subject to investigation by the Fair Employment Commission.

Sir John Wheeler: The vast majority of appointments made by my right hon. and learned Friend to public bodies in Northern Ireland do not constitute employment within the meaning of the provisions of the Fair Employment Acts, and would therefore lie outside the scope of the investigative powers of the Fair Employment Commission. However, a small number of public appointments, where the chairman of the public body concerned is also the chief executive, would come within the investigative powers of the Fair Employment Commission. Appointments which do not fall within the scope of the Fair Employment Acts are subject to the anti-discrimination provisions of section 19 of the Northern Ireland Constitution Act 1973.

Capital Works

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been extended in each education board area in Northern Ireland on capital works in each of the last five years for which figures are available on (a) the integrated sector, (b) the voluntary grammar schools, (c) the controlled primary and secondary schools and (d) the maintained primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Ancram: Capital expenditure by education and library boards for each of the years from 1988-89 to 1991-92 is analysed by area and by school sector in the statements and summary of the education and library boards' accounts, Cmnd 1105, 1531, 1977, and 2249, copies of which are available in the Library. The figures for 1992-93 will be published on 27 July 1994, Cmnd No. 2603. Capital grants paid by the Department of Education to grant-maintained integrated schools and voluntary schools over the five year period 1988-89 to 1992-93 are set out in the table:

Perinatal and Neonatal Mortality

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (a) the perinatal mortality rate and (b) the neonatal mortality rate in each health and social services board for 1985, 1990 and 1993.

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

	1985		1990		1992
	Perinatal	Neonatal	Perinatal	Neonatal	Perinatal	Neonatal
Eastern Health and Social Services Board	10·4	4·8	7·3	3·5	8·7	3·8
Northern Health and Social Services Board	10·4	5·2	7·1	4·2	7·6	3·5
Southern Health and Social Services Board	12·8	7·7	6·4	4·0	8·5	3·8
Western Health and Social Services Board	11·4	5·5	10·2	4·9	7·8	5·6

Note: 1993 figures are not yet available. Perinatal are per 1,000 live and still births. Neonatal are per 1,000 live births.

Chill Factor Definition

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will define the chill factor which he requires to be taken into account for health provision in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The chill factor refers to the requirement for health and social services boards, in planning the provision of services, to ensure that no section of the community would perceive itself to be unduly disadvantaged in terms of its continued access to services as a result of changes in their location.

Countryside Protection Schemes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost in 1993 in Northern Ireland of payments made under (a) the countryside stewardship scheme, (b) the hedgerow incentive scheme, (c) the countryside premium scheme and (d) the wildlife enhancement scheme; and what is his estimate of the cost in 1994.

Mr. Ancram: None of the listed schemes apply in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost in 1993 in Northern Ireland of payments under (a) the environmentally sensitive area scheme, (b) the nitrate sensitive area scheme, (c) the farm and conservation grant scheme, (d) the pilot beef and sheep extensification schemes, (e) the woodland grant scheme, (f) the farm woodland premium scheme, (g) the orchard grubbing scheme, (h) the optional five year set-aside scheme, (i) the habitat scheme, (j) the moorland scheme, (k) the countryside access scheme and (l) the organic aid scheme; and what is his estimate of the cost in 1994.

Mr. Ancram: The information in respect of the schemes is as follows:

Scheme	Expenditure by £'000 1993-94	Estimate by £'000 1994-95
Environmentally sensitive areas	586	700
Farm and conservation grant	6,250	4,580
Pilot beef and sheep extensification	15	15
Woodland grant	729	842
Farm woodland premium	68	95
Orchard grubbing	Nil	1
Optional 5-year set aside	63	34

Nitrate sensitive areas and countryside access schemes do not apply in Northern Ireland, while the habitat improvement scheme, moorland scheme and organic aid scheme will be launched later in 1994 and expenditure will not arise before 1995-96.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Sir John Wheeler: Northern Ireland Electricity's four generating stations were sold to private interests in 1992, and the remainder of the business—transmission, distribution and supply—was successfully floated in June 1993, thus completing privatisation of the electricity supply industry in Northern Ireland. The process of privatising Northern Ireland Airports Ltd. has begun, with a target date of mid-1994 for completion by means of a trade sale.

The Government remain committed to the privatisation of water and sewerage services at the earliest possible date but recognise that, for a number of technical reasons, this will not be possible in the lifetime of the present Parliament. Legislation is being promoted to enable ports in Northern Ireland to be privatised, while the Department of the Environment is considering the extent to which the non-core activities of Northern Ireland Railways and Ulsterbus/Citybus may be sold.

Health Visitors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many health visitors were employed in each health and personal social services board area in September 1988 and in September 1992.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 7 July 1994]: The information as requested is not readily available. However, figures for all nursing staff, in the specialty of health visiting is given as follows. Staffing figures prior to 1990 were not collected on a comparable basis.

Health visiting staff in Northern Ireland	1990		1992
	Number	WTE	Number	WTE
Eastern Board	124	117	234	209
Northern Board	92	86	95	90
Southern Board	54	50	90	84
Western Board	77	71	79	72
Northern Ireland Total	347	324	498	455

WTE—Whole time equivalent.

The following nursing grades are included in the specialty of health visiting and are included in the figures provided:

Assistant Director Nursing Services (Grade 1), Assistant Director Nursing Services (Grade 7), District Nursing Sister G, Enrolled Nurse E, Enrolled Nurse F, Fieldwork Teacher H, Health Visitor, Health Visitor (Grade G), Health Visitor (Grade H), Home Care Worker, Nursing Auxiliary B, Nursing Sister/Charge Nurse H, Post Basic Student D, Post Basic Student E, School Nurse E, School Nurse F, Senior Nurse/Nursing Officer I, Staff Nurse E, Staff Nurse F, Student Health Visitor, Team Leader/Health Visitor, Team Leader (Health Visiting/District Nursing), Unit Senior Manager 2.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer, 8 July 1994]: The information requested could not be obtained by the Northern Ireland Office in the time available, except at disproportionate cost. However, within the Northern Ireland Departments, the Minister responsible for the Department of Health and Social Services, on one occasion, directed that a contract be awarded to a firm other than that recommended by his officials. This contract, for providing catering facilities, was awarded on 22 November 1990 and was valued at £265,548.

EDUCATION

Full-time Further Education

15. Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many people applied to study full time for a degree or equivalent qualification at an institution of higher education for the academic years 1992-93 and 1993-94; and what are the latest available figures for the coming academic year.

Mr. Boswell: Applicants through central schemes to full-time higher education courses totalled some 395,000 in 1992 and 419,000 in 1993. As at May, applicants for admission in 1994 stood at some 378,000—virtually the same level as at May last year.

Voluntary Activity

17. Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will take steps to encourage volunteering on the part of students in schools and further and higher education.

Mr. Boswell: The Government are seeking to promote voluntary activity among all age groups through their make a difference initiative. The make a difference team will be considering the role of young people as part of the development of a United Kingdom volunteering strategy. Many students are already volunteers, and it is primarily for educational establishments to consider what further steps to take to encourage students to volunteer.

Primary Schools (Funding)

18. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to reform the funding of large primary schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Decisions about funding levels for such schools are for local education authorities to make in the context of their own schemes for the local management of schools.

Road Safety

19. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to improve understanding among school pupils of road safety.

Mr. Forth: The Department encourages schools to make full use of opportunities within the national curriculum and the wider school curriculum to teach pupils about road safety.

Grant-maintained Schools

20. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many times a year he meets chief education officers to discuss grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend and other Ministers meet chief education officers throughout the year as the need arises and discuss a wide variety of topics, including grant-maintained schools.

27. Mr. Liddington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the opinions of parents whose children attend grant-maintained schools about the quality of education which those schools provide.

Mr. Robin Squire: Growing numbers of parents are choosing self-governing schools for their children. Some 70 per cent. of grant-maintained schools responding to a recent survey reported increases in pupil numbers. Pupil numbers at secondary schools which have been grant-maintained for the last four years have grown three times faster than the secondary pupil population as a whole. This is clear evidence of parents' confidence in the quality of education provided by self-governing schools.

School Performance Tables

21. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many requests his Department received for copies of last year's school performance tables.

Mr. Robin Squire: Copies of the 1993 tables were sent to schools which appeared in the secondary school tables, and to all maintained primary schools, for distribution to parents and students considering their options for transfer to secondary school or to education post-16. A further 125,000 copies have since been distributed in response to supplementary requests to the Department.

Sixth Forms

22. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of grant-maintained secondary schools have their own sixth form.

Mr. Robin Squire: Of the 594 grant-maintained secondary schools currently operating, 68 per cent. have sixth forms.

Returning Teachers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish figures giving his current estimates on potential returners to the teaching profession, broken down by employment status, age and gender.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 4 July 1994]: The latest available estimates are for 1990-91:

Thousands, rounded

Employment status	Men	Women	Total
Part-time and supply teachers in maintained sector	3	88	90
In independent schools or teacher-related employment	8	32	40
Employment other than teaching	70	92	162
Not in paid employment	7	66	73
TOTAL	88	276	365

Information by age is not readily available. However, these figures exclude out-of-service teachers aged over 55 years as well as those who qualified before 1965 and have not taught after that date and those not resident in England.

Independent And Grant-maintained Schools

23. Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to prevent local education authorities from discriminating against independent and grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: Section 129 of the 1993 Education Act provides that local education authorities, in performing their duties and exercising their powers, must treat pupils at grant-maintained schools no less favourably than pupils at schools maintained by a local education authority. The Department will continue to investigate allegations of discrimination against GM schools. Pupils at independent schools are not covered by equivalent statutory protection.

Specialisms

24. Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what support he proposes to give to those schools which wish to develop a specialism in (a) music, (b) art, (c) languages and (d) other areas of the curriculum.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government are committed to extending choice and diversity in secondary school provision and want to see more schools develop their own specialisms. We are currently examining in detail how new types of specialist schools can best be supported, within available resources. We expect to make an announcement in due course.

Lecturers (Contracts of Employment)

25. Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received regarding further education lecturers' contracts of employment.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of letters on this matter, both directly and through hon. Members.

University Places

26. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he is taking to ensure that all suitably qualified students are offered university places over the next three years.

Mr. Boswell: It is for universities and colleges to decide how many places to offer in the light of maximum aggregate student numbers notified to them by the Higher Education Funding Council for England. They are best placed to judge whether a candidate is suitably qualified for a place. The Government's spending plans allow for the current record proportion of almost one in three young people entering high education to be maintained for the next three years.

Further Education (Funding)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will review the current funding arrangements for further education.

Mr. Boswell: The way in which funds are allocated to colleges in the further education sector is a matter for the Further Education Funding Council to determine, having regard to the funding aims set by Government. The council has, after extensive and detailed consultation with colleges, put in place a new funding methodology for 1994-95, which has been widely welcomed. It is pledged to review the methodology year by year and has already started work for 1995-96.

Pupil Expenditure

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the expenditure on books and equipment in 1992-93 in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools per pupil.

Mr. Robin Squire: Separate information is not collected for nursery and primary schools. Local education authorities' spending on books and equipment in 1992-93 was £59 per pupil in LEA-maintained nursery and primary schools and £98 per pupil in LEA-maintained secondary schools. Equivalent information is not available for grant-maintained schools.

Work Experience

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions he has had with his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment on the subject of ensuring the effective provision of work experience in schools, with particular reference to the issues of health and safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment announced on 24 May, Official Report, column 198, the Government are asking training and enterprise councils and their partners to ensure that all pupils in their last year of compulsory education can have at least one week's work experience and will make available an additional £23 million over three years to 1997-98 to support this. Guidance on work experience placements, including health and safety aspects, is contained in the Department for Education booklets "Education at Work".

Higher Education (Access Funds)

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what resources will be available for access funds for students in higher education institutions in 1994-95; and when he proposes to issue new guidance on the use of the funds.

Mr. Boswell: The Department is making available £20·9 million for access funds for students in higher education in England for 1994-95. The sum is being allocated between the three funds as shown below:

	£ million
Undergraduate Fund	15·30
Postgraduate Fund	5·30
Further Education Fund	0·34

The Department has now written to the Higher Education Funding Council for England with guidance to be given to HE institutions about allocation and use of the funds for 1994-95.

Portuguese and Spanish

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in how many schools (a) Portuguese and (b) Spanish are taught; and how many teachers and pupils are involved.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department does not have full details on the numbers of schools where Portuguese and Spanish are taught. However, the database of GCSE and GCE A-level and AS-level examination results used for the publication of school and college performance tables for England in November 1993 shows that 162 schools entered 213 pupils for GCSE Portuguese and 1,621 schools entered 25,500 pupils for GCSE Spanish in 1992-93.

The estimates from the 1992 secondary school staffing survey, which covered approximately a 10 per cent. sample of schools in England, showed that at national level there were around 3,400 full-time and part-time teachers teaching Spanish in England in 1992. Figures for teachers of Portuguese cannot be reliably estimated.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Forth: No organisations within my right hon. Friend's area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990 and there are no plans for privatisation, although the forthcoming periodic review of the Teachers' Pensions Agency will include consideration of the scope for privatising the agency as part of the "prior options" study.

School Inspections

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools are due to receive Ofsted inspections in the autumn term 1994; for those inspections, how many contracts have not yet been awarded; how many schools have not yet been informed of the date of their inspection; and how many schools he expects will not receive inspections in the autumn term due to lack of contracts being awarded.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to the hon. Member.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 13 July 1994

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish the report on the civil service fast stream entry.

Mr. Waldegrave: As I announced on 18 February, the team reviewing the civil service fast stream entry, as recommended by the career management and succession planning study, was asked to report by the end of June 1994. Its report will be published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The review team's report reaches five main conclusions:

the fast-stream schemes make an essential contribution to meeting Departments' needs for high quality recruits; but

Departments need to update and clarify what they expect from, and offer to, recruits to the main generalist fast-stream scheme for the Home Civil Service, and how that relates to the training and development of staff recruited by other routes;

the way the Service is presented to potential recruits needs to be improved to reflect more accurately the nature of the Civil Service in the late 1990s and to strengthen and broaden its appeal; the selection process itself, although already well researched, should be subject to indpendent audit to ensure that it operates effectively;

there needs to be a clearer distinction between the recruitment schemes and the later distinct process of indentifying people with top management potential. The term "fast-stream" confuses the two and should be abandoned.

The Government will now consider these recommendations and would welcome comments on them in the context of the White Paper on the civil service, which is being published today, and in accordance with the procedure set out in paragraph 1.8 of that paper.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will publish the report of the review team which has been considering the respective responsibilities of the Civil Service Commissioners and Government Departments.

Mr. Waldegrave: The head of the home civil service commissioned in January an internal review of responsibilities for civil service recruitment, with the following terms of reference:

"In the light of experience in practice and increasing open competition for posts to re-examine the specific split of responsibilities made between the Commissioners, the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency and departments in 1991 by, in particular:

—considering whether changes are required to improve effectiveness;

—identifying any issues here which affect RAS's performance;

—reviewing the definition of Commissioners' recruitment."

The review team has now completed its work. Copies of its report, entitled "Responsibilities for Civil Service Recruitment", have been placed in the Library of the House. The review team has made a number of recommendations designed to reinforce the principles of openness, fairness and merit in civil service recruitment and to clarify responsibilities for ensuring that these principles are properly and effectively applied. The main proposals are that:

The Civil Service Commissioners should be given strengthened powers to maintain the principles of fair and open competition and selection on merit as they apply to all Civil Service recruitment.

Departments and Agencies should be more clearly accountable for undertaking recruitment in accordance with those principles.

The Commissioners should audit recruitment policies and practices within the Service and report on the outcome in their annual reports.

The Commissioners should be required to approve individually only the most senior appointments, removing the present requirement for them to process around 700 cases a year in more junior grades. The Government proposes that the Commissioners' approval should be required for recruitment to the new Senior Civil Service as envisaged in the White Paper on the Civil Service.

There should be a clear separation between the role of the Commissioners and that of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency.

The Government welcome the review team's report and would also welcome comments on it. These should be addressed to Miss E. Goodison, the Office of the Civil Service Commissioners, Alencon Link, Basingstoke RG21 1JB and should be received by 30 September 1994. Copies of the report can be obtained free of charge from the same address.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the efficiency unit's report on "Career Management and Succession Planning in the Civil Service".

Mr. Waldegrave: The statement I made to the House today and the accompanying White Paper on the civil service set out the main lines of the Government's response to the efficiency unit report, and build further upon it. I am placing in the Library of the House today a note of the detailed response to each of the report's recommendations.

Chessington Computer Centre

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what key performance targets he has set for Chessington Computer Centre trading fund for the current year.

Mr. David Davis: The key performance targets for Chessington Computer Centre trading fund for 1994-95 are:

* an operating surplus of £1·1 million;
* an increase in pay clerk productivity of 6 per cent. (over 1993-94 performance);
* increasing usage of the online data capture system (SPIRE) to 82·5 per cent.;
* raising minimum online service and availability to 98·5 per cent;
* continually improving services to customers by updating software.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out the criteria used in determining the allocation of a contract under the Government's policy of market testing.

Mr. Waldegrave: All Government purchasers are encouraged to base all procurement of both goods and services on value for money criteria. They should take into account, as appropriate, the requirements of EC procurement directives, which in the case of services, have been put into effect in the United Kingdom by the Public Services Contracts Regulations 1993, SI 3228. Section 9 of the Government's "Guide to Market Testing", which is in the Library, outlines the main criteria which Departments should take into account in market testing.

European Particle Physics Laboratory

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the United Kingdom's current annual commitment to CERN; what are the budget projections for the next six years; and if he will make a statement on the effects of those spending proposals on the development of the large hadron collider.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom's subscription to CERN for 1994-95 is £60·5 million, which is some 13·6 per cent. of CERN's overall budget. Our contribution for the next six years, at most recent exchange rates, are estimated to be:

	£ million
1995-96	61·0
1996-97	61·7
1997-98	62·4
1998-99	63·1
1999-00	63·8
2000-01	64·5

These figures are likely to change due to fluctuations in exchange rates and in the relative net national incomes of CERN members.

These spending proposals, taken in association with the normal subscriptions to CERN of other member states, will make possible the construction of the large hadron collider. For the construction of the LHC to be on schedule, however, additional income will be required. CERN is currently in discussion with host states and non-member states to secure additional contributions towards the project.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Small Claims Court

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average value, as stated by plaintiffs, of those claims heard in the small claims court for each year since 1990.

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 29 June 1994]: The information requested is not recorded and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I previously gave a holding answer to enable further investigation to take place. This showed that it is not possible to extract relevant data at a reasonable cost.

Disability

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what involvement his Department will have in the Government's forthcoming consultation on disability.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People will be co-ordinating action on this front and will involve other Departments as necessary.

TREASURY

Environmental Protection

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to ensure that discussion of economic policy at the Group of Seven summit meeting will include consideration of the ecological sustainability of economic activity.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 11 July, Official Report, column 376.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the details of his public sector pay policy and indicate what the permitted level is; how it was arrived at; to which posts in the public sector it applies; and to what extent its effectiveness is measured by the (a) total wage or salary bill of a public sector organisation, (b) rates of pay or (c) comparability with outside rates.

Mr. Portillo: The Government expect pay across the public sector in 1994-95 to be considered in accordance with the approach which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in my statement of 14 September 1993 and which was reflected in the expenditure programmes announced in the Budget on 30 November. That approach will play a role in restraining the overall level of public expenditure and ensuring that within established ceilings resources can be devoted to public services and investment rather than running costs and pay.

The effective application of this approach to public sector pay will constrain the overall Government pay bill and ensure that the costs of pay settlements are offset by efficiencies and other savings. Within this framework there is flexibility for different public sector groups to reach different pay settlements consistent with their own particular circumstances and under their usual pay determination procedures.

Resource Accounting and Budgeting

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish detailed proposals on resource accounting and budgeting.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My November 1993 Budget statement contained a commitment to produce detailed proposals on the introduction of resource-based accruals accounting in Government Departments. It also said that the Government would look at the implications of this development for the current arrangements for public expenditure planning and control. This initial review is now complete and I am today publishing a Green Paper entitled "Better Accounting for the Taxpayer's Money: Resource Accounting and Budgeting in Government". Copies are available from the Vote Office.

The Green Paper announces the intention to proceed with the introduction of resource accounting for Departments and that all Departments prepare these accounts by April 1998. The Green Paper also announces a commitment in principle to build on the introduction of resource accounting by developing a system of resource budgeting, which would mean changing the basis of the public expenditure survey and in-year control arrangements to reflect the full cost of resources, while retaining controls relating to cash.

The Green Paper provides for a consultation period of six months, until January 1995.

Government Staff

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 April.

Mr. Portillo: On 1 April 1994 there were 533,350 permanent staff in post in central Government, which is a new post-war low. This is a decrease of nearly 20,900 in the last year.

Of the total staff in post 487,435 were non-industrials and 45,915 were classified as being in industrial work.

A summary showing staff in post by Department has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Monetary Union

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers the Monetary Commission and the Commission of the European Union have to initiate alterations in the conditions for nations proceeding to monetary union set out in the Maastricht treaty; and if he will make a statement on the current discussions between the Commission and the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The conditions under which member states may proceed towards economic and monetary union are set out in the Maastricht treaty. The Commission has the right to propose amendments to that treaty but such amendments would require the unanimous consent of an intergovernmental conference. Discussions between the Commission and the Government of the Republic of Ireland are a matter for them.

"The Arts and Compulsory Competitive Tendering"

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to respond to the report on "The Arts and Compulsory Competitive Tendering" commissioned from the consultants Positive Solutions Ltd.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

I will make a statement as soon as possible.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what view he is taking about the quality of response by the Government of Kenya to previous World bank and International Monetary Fund criticisms; and what action will be urged by the British Government's director at the World bank in forthcoming debates in Kenya.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: I have been asked to reply. The IMF and World bank believe that there has been good progress recently in the implementation of Kenya's economic reform programme. We share that view. Macroeconomic stability is being restored; and the agreed structural reforms are broadly on schedule. We shall encourage the continued vigorous implementation of the economic reform agenda.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the consequences of World bank programmes on the poor of Kenya, the role of the Kenyan Government in promoting or alleviating poverty, and the action that should be taken in future programmes to alleviate poverty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

We have been assisting in the preparation of a poverty assessment, sponsored by the Kenyan Government and a number of donors, including the World bank. This aims to provide a thorough analysis of both the nature of poverty, and the impact on the poor of the Government's structural adjustment programme, which includes a social dimension. Poverty in Kenya will be reduced by faster economic growth, which effective implementation of the adjustment programme will help to achieve, and by direct interventions favouring specific poor groups.

HEALTH

Departmental Running Costs

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to her answer of 21 June, Official Report, columns 117-18, if she will break down to the smallest possible unit the budget heads for all expenditure on non-staffing costs within the Department of Health administration budget;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 306, with regard to her Department's administrative budget, if she will detail the amounts spent on those items listed in her answer including (a) buildings—rent, maintenance, fuel and utilities, security, cleaning and other services, (b) meetings of expert advisory committees and working groups, conferences, seminars and publications, (c) payments to other Government Departments and (d) consultancy, staff training and travel.

Mr. Sackville: Details of expenditure for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are shown in the table. The full information requested is not available centrally because individual managers set budgets for different types of non-staffing expenditure according to the particular needs of their business area. It is not possible to give the same level of detail prior to 1992-93.

Expenditure details for 1992-93 and 1993-94

Notes:
1. Figures have not been adjusted for inflation.
2. Expenditure of less than £1 million is shown separately under Other Expenditure.

Dental Deregistrations

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give a regional breakdown of the number of dental deregistrations across England and Wales for each year since June 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information will be placed in the Library. Patient deregistrations in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Violent Patients

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of state for Health if she will make a statement on guidance to general practitioners and family health services authorities about the change in general practitioners' terms of service to allow the immediate removal of particularly abusive or violent patients from general practitioners' lists.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service executive issued guidance, FHSL(94)24, in April which explained the new arrangements for removing violent patients from general practitioners' lists.

Mental Illness

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what investigations she has undertaken into the treatment and resuscitation of patients with a history of mental illness;

(2) what guidelines or advice she has issued concerning the treatment and resuscitation of patients with a history of mental illness.

Mr. Bowis: No recent investigations have been carried out. Hospital consultants are responsible for having clear policies for making decisions about resuscitation. Decisions should take account of the best interests of individual patients.

The Department has not issued any specific guidelines about the resuscitation of patients with a mental illness. The Chief Medical Officer wrote to all regional and district directors of public health on 20 December 1991, PL/CMO(91)22, to make it clear that responsibility for resuscitation policy lies with hospital consultants, who should ensure that their policy is known to junior medical staff. Copies of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Kawasaki Disease

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will fund research into the cause, detection and treatment of Kawasaki disease;

(2) what information she has on the incidence of Kawasaki disease in (a) England and Wales, (b) the west midlands and (c) Birmingham in each of the last 12 years;

(3) what action she has taken to reduce deaths from Kawasaki disease;

(4) if she will ask the Chief Medical Officer to issue advice to general practitioners on the diagnosis and treatment of Kawasaki disease.

Mr. Sackville: Kawasaki disease is an uncommon disease of childhood. Most children make a full recovery but, in a minority of cases, cardiac complications can arise. The following information is available centrally on the prevalence of the condition and deaths recorded:

Annual total cases

Year	Total number of cases: England and Wales	Total number of cases: West Midlands region
1986	59	4
1987	72	3
1988	87	5
1990	123	14

Information about the diagnosis and treatment of Kawasaki's disease is available to doctors. Although we are not aware of any current research directed specifically at this disease, basic research being carried out on pathology in childhood is relevant. The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is always willing to consider for support soundly based new scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

Hospital Treatment

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances a person in need of hospital care may choose the hospital in which they receive treatment under the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: It is a fundamental objective of the current national health service reforms to improve patient choice and it is the responsibility of district health authorities, in consultation with general practitioners and local people, to agree contracts with those hospitals where patients prefer to be treated. GPs will sometimes wish to refer a patient to a hospital or service with which the DHA has no contract in place and DHAs hold funds to meet the cost of these extra-contractual referrals.

Green Belt Hospitals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service hospitals that (a) are in use and (b) have been closed and are surplus to requirements lie in the green belt.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Conferences

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost to the national health service of officials attending conferences; and what guidelines she proposes to issue.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many chairs, chief executives and non-executive directors of NHS trusts and health authorities attended the recent NAHAT conference; who paid their fees; and what was the overall cost to public funds.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available centrally. We have no plans to issue central guidance. It is for individual health authorities and NHS trusts to decide what priority they attach to attendance at conferences. In doing so, however, we expect them to have proper regard to value for money and the potential benefits to the NHS and its staff, compared with other kinds of developmental training.

Counselling

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 420, when he expects a report from the current departmental review of the cost and cost-effectiveness of counselling.

Mr. Bowis: The report of the Department's review of strategic policy on psychotherapy services, which will include a review of research evidence on the cost-effectiveness of counselling, is expected to be available towards the end of this year.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 6 July, Official Report, column 215, if she will provide whatever figures are available from the prescribing analyses and costs data produced by the Prescription Pricing Authority on the quantity of minor tranquillisers prescribed in (a) York, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) England in those years for which figures were collected.

Mr. Bowis: The number of prescription items for minor tranquillisers dispensed nationally since 1979 and in North Yorkshire in 1992 and 1993 is shown in the table:—

Minor tranquillisers: number of prescriptions (thousands) dispensed

Year	England	North Yorkshire Family Health Services Authority
1980	12,631	—
1981	12,354	—
1982	11,964	—
1983	11,292	—
1984	10,290	—
1985	9,090	—
1986	8,606	—
1987	8,086	—
1988	6,810	—
1989	6,044	—
1990	5,548	—
1991	5,554	—
1992	5,339	79
1993	5,175	74

Notes:

1. The data included in the attached table are for minor tranquillisers referred to in section 4.1.2 of the British National Formulary.
2. Information of this kind at FHSA level is not readily available for the years prior to 1992 and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.
3. 1980 to 1990 data are estimates based on fees and cover prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors only.
4. 1991 to 1993 data are based on items for all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors and personal administration.

Access to Health Records Act 1990

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the costs of implementing the Access to Health Records Act 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The costs of implementing the Act are minimal, and largely self-financing. The Act allows a charge of up to £10 to be made to people seeking access to records which have not been added to in the last 40 days. A fee may also be made, where applicable, to cover the cost of copying and postage.

Hospitals (Disabled Access)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has for each national health service hospital or trust as to whether people with physical disabilities have access to all wards, clinics and out-patient departments.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for each individual hospital and trust and consequently no detailed information is available centrally. However, as part of the patients charter, hospitals should make arrangements to ensure that everyone, including people with disabilities, can use their services. In addition, we have published guidance—"Designing for Disabled People"—on the briefing and design stages of schemes for providing new or adapting existing health buildings and health authorities and trusts are encouraged to consult local representatives of disabled people on this issue. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Medicines Commission

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to receive the annual report of the Medicines Commission for 1993.

Mr. Sackville: We have received the report, and copies have been laid today before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of section 5(2) of the Medicines Act 1968.

Bound volumes have been placed in the Library containing the 1993 reports of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials, the British Pharmacopoeia Commission and the Veterinary Products Committee.

We are glad to pay tribute to the valuable work done by the distinguished members of the Medicines Act advisory bodies and thank them warmly for the time and effort which they contribute in the public interest to this most important field.

Steroids

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure (a) the use of steroid warning cards and (b) that a right of informed consent is given to patients prescribed corticosteroids.

Mr. Sackville: The use of steroid treatment cards is a well-established practice. We have no plans to discontinue their use.

Under the patients charter, patients have a right to be consulted about, and to be given an adequate explanation of, their proposed course of treatment, and information on alternatives available through the national health service. However, there will be some cases where doctors will feel that informing patients of the treatment proposed and possible risks could be counter-productive to the well-being of the patient. In such cases, the decision on whether the patient should be informed of the proposed treatment and possible risks or not is for the doctor's discretion.

Official Complaints

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many official complaints were received from NHS patients by each NHS hospital or trust between January and March.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not yet available centrally.

Waiting Times

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average time that patients in (a) England, (b) each English regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust waited from the date that their general practitioner referred them to a consultant until the date of their first out-patient appointment between January and March.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not yet available.

Youth Treatment Service

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the annual report of the chief executive of the Youth Treatment Service for 1993-94; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Copies of the report have been placed in the Library today. The report contains, at annexe 7, the Youth Treatment Service's receipts and payments account for the year ended 31 March 1994. These accounts, which are unaudited and have no form of endorsement by the National Audit Office, represent the service's view of the financial outcome for the year.

Operating Theatres

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will give the latest figures and those for the previous four years for the total number of operating theatres (a) for England, (b) by region and (c) by district;

(2) if she will give the latest figures and those for the previous four years for the number of operating theatre sessions cancelled because suitable back-up resources are absent or insufficient (a) for England, (b) by region and (c) by district;

(3) if she will give the latest figures and those for the last four years for operating theatre sessions cancelled because there was insufficient appropriate staff available to the operating theatre session (a) for England, (b) by region and (c) by district.

Mr. Sackville: Information on operating theatres for financial years 1988-89 to 1992-93 is published in "NHS Operating Theatres Availability and Use", financial year 1988-89, year ending 31 March 1992, year ending 31 March 1993—copies of which are available in the Library.

Reasons for the cancellation of operating theatre sessions are not recorded centrally.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will give by district the latest figures and those for the last four years for patients funded by general practitioner fundholders waiting for ordinary admission (a) less than three months, (b) three to five months, (c) six to eight months, (d) nine to 11 months, (e) 12-23 months, (f) more than 24 months and (g) in total;

(2) if she will give by district the latest figures and those for the last four years for patients funded by district health authorities waiting for ordinary admission (a) less than three months, (b) three to five months, (c) six to eight months, (d) nine to 11 months, (e) 12-23 months, (f) more than 24 months and (g) in total.

Dr. Mawhinney: Such information on waiting times for in-patient and day case treatment as is available is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Administrative Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the total amount spent on administration by (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) special health authorities, (d) family health service authorities, (e) trusts and (f) the Department of Health/NHS executive, in 1993-94, in each case breaking the figure down to show expenditure on (i) salaries and wages and (ii) establishment expenses.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 17 June 1994]: Expenditure on Department of Health administration, including national health service executive administration, in 1993-94 was £250 million, of which £117 million was on salaries and wages. The figures are provisional. Information on the 1993-94 expenditure of NHS bodies is not yet available.

Cardiological Procedures

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the variations, adjusted by age and sex, in the number of cardiological procedures by purchaser; and what are the causes of these variations.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 4 July 1994]: Information about variations in the numbers of cardiological procedures by purchaser is not available centrally. The table shows the number of finished consultant episodes involving a heart operation in 1991-92 by region of residence of patient, expressed relative to the national total, England-100, adjusted for the age and sex distribution within each region.

The Government asked the Clinical Services Advisory Group to advise on access to and the availability of coronary bypass grafting. Its report, which also covers coronary angioplasty, published in March 1993, sets out the possible causes of variations in the services provided; a copy has been placed in the Library.

These figures are based on preliminary, unpublished, data from Hospital Episodes Statistics.

Immunisations

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children per 100,000 have been damaged by vaccine for each category of damage, broken down by first and second immunisations, for each year since 1987.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 5 July 1994]: The information requested is not available. However, the number of awards made under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 since 1987 is as follows:

Year	Awards
1987-88	10
1988-89	3
1989-90	3
1990-91	1
1991-92	7
1992-93	13
1993-94	4

Note: Awards do not necessarily relate to vaccines administered in that year.

The Act, which is administered by the Department of Social Security, provides a scheme of one-off, lump-sum payments for people who have suffered either severe mental and/or physical disablement of 80 per cent. or more where it can be shown on the balance of probability that damage has resulted from vaccination.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future funding of the Energy Saving Trust.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on 4 July, Official Report, column 22.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when a proposal for two radomes, support buildings, security fencing and extension of service road at Menwith hill station, Harrogate, was referred to him to determine whether the development should proceed; how many objections have been lodged against this development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The proposal has not been referred to the Secretary of State.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research the Energy Efficiency Office has carried out to explore top management attitudes to energy efficiency and the environment.

Mr. Gummer: A report outlining the findings of research carried out among a sample of firms with more than 200 employees over the past three years has been published by HMSO today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The findings show improvements in top management attitudes to and practices on energy efficiency and the environment. The proportion of firms with an environmental policy has increased steadily over the period from 46 per cent. to 58 per cent. and those with an energy policy from 34 per cent. to 46 per cent. Yet much remains to be done if the Rio target of returning CO_2 emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000 is to be met.

I welcome particularly the findings which show that organisations which have joined the "Making a Corporate Commitment" campaign are leading the way in contributing to the CO_2 partnership I have called for. Campaign signatories agree to give board-level commitment to energy management, to reassess their energy efficiency strategy and to set performance improvement targets. The findings show that they are making good progress. For example:

63% have already set energy targets compared to 37% in business generally; while

85% have actual plans to implement energy efficiency measures in the next 12 months. The corresponding figure for business at large is only 52%.

I urge all organisations to increase the priority they give to energy management and follow the lead of campaign signatories. Such action provides the ideal contribution to the CO_2 partnership. The benefits to business are increased profits. The benefits for us all are a better environment, since energy efficiency is the quickest and most cost-effective response to the threat of global warming.

North Circular Road

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his position with regard to any decision on the proposed north circular road improvement scheme between Hangar lane and Gunnersbury avenue, Ealing.

Mr. Gummer: Given that my London residence is close to the proposed scheme I shall not be taking any part in the decision-making process which will pass to a colleague. Neither will I be commenting on the merits of the scheme as the inspector's report is currently under consideration. The tried and tested method for considering major road proposals is through a public inquiry of which there have been two into this particular stretch of the north circular road. Such inquiries enable the issues to be debated openly and a decision to be made on the merits of the scheme after all those concerned have had a chance to put their case.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 July 1994]: Since 1990, the operating activities of the Property Services Agency Services were sold as follows:

Division	Date	Purchaser
PSA Projects	1 December 1992	Tarmac Construction Ltd
Building Management (BM) Scotland	1 September 1993	Serco
BM Manchester	1 October 1993	W. S. Atkins
NorEast BM	1 October 1993	Mowlems
BM South East and BM South West	1 October 1993	Amec-Pell Frischmann Consoritum

My Department continues to examine regularly all its activities to ensure that the best mode of delivery is achieved. In particular, the Government have a manifesto commitment to privatise the docklands light railway and an announcement will be made in due course.

Victoria Street

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated total cost of the refurbishment works on 1 to 19 Victoria street.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

1-19 Victoria street is being refurbished for reoccupation by DTI as its headquarters building. The work is expected to cost £61·4 million, net of VAT, £59 million of which is being provided by the landlord, Legal and General Property.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Quality Standards

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what plans he has to introduce compliance with British Standards Institute quality standard BS 5750 in Departments of the House of Commons.

Mr. Beith: While there are no plans to require Departments of the House formally to comply with the performance standards contained in BS 5750, considerable importance is attached to the development of the quality control and management procedures by which performance can be assessed. Details of the measures so far adopted by individual Departments of the House may be found in the Commission's annual reports.

7 Millbank (Lifts)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will make a statement on the number of times the lifts have broken down in 7 Millbank and the penalties imposed by the lift contractors.

Mr. Ray Powell: These are matters for the Director of Works and I shall ask him to write to the hon. Member.

EDUCATION

Parents Charter

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many copies of the updated parents charter have been printed.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 20 million copies of the parents charter have been printed.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the printing cost of the updated parents charter.

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost of printing 20 million copies of the updated parents charter was some £2 million.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the delivery and distribution cost of the updated parents charter.

Mr. Robin Squire: The final cost of the household distribution of the updated parents charter has yet to be confirmed.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education where was the updated parents charter printed.

Mr. Robin Squire: The updated parents charter was printed in the north of England.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he intends to reply to the first report of the Education Committee of Session 1993-94, HOC 255, on the common funding formula for grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government's formal response has been sent to the Chairman of the Committee today, together with a consultation paper, seeking views on the design and scope of the common funding formula in 1995-96. Copies of both documents have been placed in the Library.

Student Loans

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what figures he has requested from the Student Loans Company for each year on graduates deferring payment of their student loans for (a) one year, (b) two years, (c) three years, (d) indefinitely and (e) refusing payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The SLC provides certain statistics annually for inclusion in the Department's statistical bulletin "Student Loans". They are not in the form requested by the hon. Member. The last bulletin on student loans was published in February. I will place a copy in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Livestock Subsidies

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost in 1993 in Northern Ireland of payments under (a) the sheep annual premium, (b) the suckler cow premium, (c) the beef special premium and (d) the hill livestock compensatory allowances; and what is his estimate of the cost in 1994.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

	1993 (cost)	1994 (cost)
Sheep annual premium	41·7	30·2
Suckler cow premium	8·8	39·8
Beef special premium	4·9	48·8
Hill livestock compensatory allowances	18·5	13·6

Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been interviewed by authorised investigators under schedule 5(2) of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 in each year and part year since 1991.

Sir John Wheeler: The following statistics indicate the number of persons interviewed by authorised investigators since schedule 5 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 came into force. They also show the incidence of use, by authorised investigators, of the other powers available to them under schedule 5.

	1991	1992	1993	[1]1994
Number of applications for appointment[2]	1	24	24	12
Number of appointments made[2]	1	23	24	12
Number of notices to attend issued[2]	1	30	29	16
Number of interviews conducted[3]	1	23	26	14
Number of persons interviewed[2]	1	22	19	12
Number of search warrants obtained[2]	0	0	0	0
Number of persons charged with schedule 5 offences[2]	0	1	0	1
Number of persons convicted of schedule 5 offences[2]	0	1	0	0
Number of search warrants or orders obtained[4]	0	0	0	12
Number of production orders obtained[4]	0	0	1	5
Number of explanation orders obtained[4]	0	0	0	0

[1] Up to 30 June.
[2] Under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991.
[3] Some persons have been interviewed more than once.
[4] Under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

I remain of the view that use of the powers available under schedule 5 of the 1991 Act plays an important part in the investigation of terrorist finance.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been prosecuted as a result of investigations involving the use of powers authorised by section 57 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 since 1991; in relation to what offences these people were prosecuted; and how many people have been convicted.

Sir John Wheeler: Four persons have been prosecuted as a result of investigations involving the use of the powers authorised by section 57 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991.

One person has been convicted of failing to comply with a requirement made by an authorised investigator contrary to paragraph 4(1) of schedule 5 to the 1991 Act. A further person awaits trial on a charge of contravening that provision. One person awaits trial on two charges of false accounting contrary to section 17(1) of the Theft Act (Northern Ireland) 1969. The fourth person awaits trial on two charges of making a false instrument contrary to section 1 of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 and two charges of false accounting contrary to section 17(1) of the Theft Act 1968.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been recovered under confiscation orders obtained under section 47 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 since 1991.

Sir John Wheeler: No moneys have yet been recovered under the provision.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many murders were committed in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years for which figures are available; of these how many were the result of terrorist activity; and, of the rest, how many persons were killed by (a) shotguns, (b) handguns and (c) other firearms.

Sir John Wheeler: The available information is as follows:

Murders committed in Northern Ireland

Terrorist Murders		Other Murders				Total
		By shotgun	By handgun	By other firearms	By other means
1991	89	0	6	0	19	114
1992	81	5	2	1	19	108
1993	82	0	0	0	19	101

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the persons charged with causing the death of another person by the use of a firearm of any description had authority to possess that firearm, excluding all those cases where terrorists were involved or where the death was caused by a member of the security forces, in each of the last three years.

Sir John Wheeler: The numbers of persons charged with non-terrorist murders involving the use of a firearm in each of the last three years are as follows:

	Number
1991	2
1992	5
1993	Nil

In each case the firearm was legally held but not by the person committing the offence. In addition, in both 1991 and 1992, two persons who could otherwise have faced charges committed suicide.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further proposals he has to reduce carbon emissions from road traffic.

Mr. Key: We have already introduced measures to address the problem of carbon emissions from vehicles. Our fuel duty strategy, which gives a commitment to annual increases in fuel duty of at least 5 per cent., is estimated to save 2·5 million tonnes of carbon in the year 2000. This represents one quarter of the total carbon dioxide emissions the United Kingdom aims to save under the climate change convention. No other European state has given such clear long-term signals on fuel duty movements.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish his Department's assessment of the impact and effectiveness of the most recent change of regulations regarding vehicle exhaust emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: New emissions limits, which came into force on 31 December 1992, effectively require new cars to be fitted with catalytic converters which reduce emissions of carbon monoxide—CO—hydrocarbons—HC—and oxides of nitrogen—NOx—by over 75 per cent. Similar measures will apply to new light vans from 1 October 1994. Some three million cars are already fitted with catalytic converters.

From 1 October 1993, emission limits for new diesel-engined trucks and buses over 3·5 tonnes, were reduced by 60, 50 and 45 per cent. respectively, for CO, HC and NOx, and a limit on particulates set for the first time. A further reduction, to be implemented in October 1996, by halving the particulate limit, will increase the level of stringency to that soon to be applied in the United States.

London Transport (Grant)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out in tabular form (a) total grant, (b) core business capital grant, (c) new lines and extensions capital grant and (d) revenue support grant, excluding the docklands light railway, awarded to London Transport in each year since 1978; and what is the planned expenditure for each year between 1994-95 and 1996-97, at both cash and 1993-94 prices.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is as follows:

[1] 15 months accounting period.
[2] In addition to grant in 1994-95 LT will benefit substantially from proceeds from the sale of the subsidiaries of London Buses Ltd. £13 million revenue grant is ear marked for the Dial-a-Ride service.
[3] Grant, announced in the Unified Budget, for LT for 1995-96 and 1996-97 has not yet been allocated between revenue and capital spend, but it is expected that all of the core business grant will be used for capital investment with the exception of revenue support of Dial-a-Ride.

These figures understate the growth in the level of investment by LT over the period arising from its improving financial position. With LT's move into operating surplus total capital investment is expected to be £1 billion per annum or more in each of the years 1994-95 to 1996-97 in cash prices.

Bull Bars

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to ban the attachment of bull bars to road vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Lady of 21 June, Official Report, column 133, it would not be sensible to legislate without compelling evidence of increased injuries in actual accidents. Meanwhile I support voluntary action by individuals and organisations to remove existing bull bars and my Department has invited the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders to discourage their sale.

Petrol

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimate he has made of the trends in the relative use of (a) benzene and other aromatics and (b) lead additives in petrol; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what estimate there is of the increase in the use of benzene and other aromatics as the level of lead additives in petrol has been reduced; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what research has been conducted into the possible effects upon the environment of the increase in use of benzene in motor fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Differences in the aromatic and benzene content of petrol are the result of the refinery processes used to make the components of the fuel. Benzene in petrol is controlled at 5 per cent. maximum by EC directive and available data indicate that the present content for United Kingdom fuels averages some 2 per cent., a reduction on previous findings. There is no significant upward or downward trend in the aromatic content of United Kingdom petrols, though the overall percentage of aromatics in unleaded fuel is slightly higher than in leaded. Lead added to petrol is restricted by EC directive to 0·15 per cent. grams/litre maximum. Average content varies between 0·12 and 0·14 per cent. grams/litre.

Benzene in exhaust gases is, however, principally a product of the combustion process rather than the fuel itself. Of the trace quantities created in the combustion process over three quarters are removed by catalytic convertors. All pollution from motor vehicles, including benzene, is falling as a result of tighter controls on emissions.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the benefits of super-unleaded fuel over unleaded fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: High octane super unleaded petrol gives motorists whose cars were not originally designed to run on unleaded fuel the opportunity of choosing a fuel which will bring environmental benefits through a reduction of lead in the atmosphere. Current usage averages some 6 per cent. of total petrol sales and is expected to decline as cars built prior to 1991 are phased out. After this date all cars have been designed to use premium unleaded petrol.

Catalytic Convertors

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate there is of the number of motor vehicles which are equipped with catalytic convertors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The precise number of vehicles fitted with catalytic convertors is not known, but is estimated at approximately 3 million or 15 per cent. of the total licensed passenger car fleet, excluding diesel cars.

Shipping Incidents, Bristol Channel

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents have taken place involving commercial (a) fishing vessels and (b) merchant ships in the Bristol channel during each of the last five years; and how many lives have been lost as a result of those incidents.

Mr. Norris: The figures given relate to incidents involving UK-registered merchant or fishing vessels where it has been established that the accident happened in the Bristol channel.

The figures are given only for the years shown as information relating to a particular sea area can only readily be obtained from the Marine Accident Investigation Branch computerised accident database. The database contains data from 1991 onwards only. To obtain the information requested for 1989 and 1990 would entail a great deal of research of the manual records for those years.

	1991	1992	1993	1994 (to date)
Registered Fishing vessels	6	2	13	3
Registered Merchant vessels	2	1	—	1

None of the incidents involved loss of life, but the Department is aware that an incident involving an unregistered fishing vessel resulted in the death of two sea anglers.

Coastguard Service

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give for each of the last 10 years the full details of (a) coastguard station closures and (b) the number of sector posts reduced by (i) promotion, (ii) retirement and (iii) non-filling of vacant posts.

Mr. Norris: In the last 10 years the following coastguard rescue centres have been closed: Shoreham—1983; Tees—1984; Hartland Point—1988; Peterhead—1989; and Ramsey—1989.

There have been no sector posts reduced in the last 10 years by promotion, retirement or the non-filling of vacant posts.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which office posts, in which districts, will be affected by the proposed efficiency savings for the Coastguard Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Coastguard Agency, along with other DOT executive agencies, has submitted proposals on how a 20 per cent. improvement in efficiency could be achieved. The Secretary of State is currently considering these proposals. No decisions have yet been made and it is not possible to give details of the office posts or districts which will be affected.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect of staff competence arising from fatigue relating to changed duties in coastguard stations around the country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: During the 12 years that HM coastguard's existing watch structure in rescue co-ordination centres has been in place, there has been no documented evidence to suggest it has been necessary to conduct an assessment of the effect of staff competence arising from fatigue.

Driving Tests

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider his policy to suspend the practice of allowing heavy goods vehicles and motor cycle driving schools to block-book test slots.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. Ford, and I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given. The agency's deputy chief executive, Mr. Lobo, will answer in Dr. Ford's absence on leave.

Letter from G. Lobo to Ms Joan Walley, dated 12 July 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked the Chief Executive to reply to your question about the plans to end the present block-booking arrangements for motorcycle and large vehicle driving tests. I am replying as Dr. Ford is on annual leave.

Block-booking is an arrangement that has enabled certain trainers to reserve blocks of test appointments without nominating candidates to use the appointment. This has commercial attractions to those training bodies as it enables them to coordinate their training programmes with test appointments that they control. Trainers have not been charged a fee for this special facility; indeed they have frequently not submitted payments for the block-booked appointments when they were reserved, whereas tests are normally paid for when they are booked.

Block-booking has not been operating satisfactorily. It has involved the Agency operating a shadow booking system and administering the individual agreements. Reserving test appointments where a candidate does not exist has prevented those appointments being used by other prospective candidates and led to examiner time being wasted thus reducing productivity and increasing costs. All of this has added to the cost of the service which has had to be recovered from the test fees paid by candidates. The change is part of a package of measures to reduce the Agency's costs by an estimated £148,000 annually. All parts of the Department have been tasked with finding 20% efficiency savings over the next two years and this package will help the DSA to achieve part of that objective.

Some trainers have indicated that they wish to make proposals about how the booking system could be developed in ways that would help training organisations without the problems of the present block-booking system. The Agency will consider those closely.

MV Derbyshire

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the report presented by the International Transport Workers' Federation in respect of the search for the MV Derbyshire; and when he now expects to make a further statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department has not received such a report from the International Transport Workers Federation.

The technical material which has been received is currently being examined by the Marine Accident Investigation Branch. When that examination is complete the chief inspector of marine accidents will advise my right hon. Friend on the course of action which he recommends.

Highways Agency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to make announcements on restructuring of the Highways Agency only while Parliament is sitting and to inform immediately those hon. Members with Highways Agency facilities in their constituencies of his proposals.

Mr. Key: An announcement on Highways Agency restructuring will be made as soon as possible. My right hon. Friend has asked the chief executive of the agency to consider what arrangements are appropriate for informing hon. Members with Highways Agency facilities in their constituencies.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the level of transport supplementary grant in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Transport supplementary grant is payable to local highway authorities in England. The amounts of TSG made available in each of the last five settlements are as follows:

	£ million
1990-91	233·125
1991-92	317·790
1992-93	370·000
1993-94	430·841
1994-95	329·433

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the projected figure for transport supplementary grant for 1995-96 based on the Government's expenditure plans for transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The amount of transport supplementary grant to be distributed to local authorities in 1995-96 will be determined later this year in the light of the total resources available for transport investment and the bids submitted by local authorities.

Auxiliary Coastguard Service

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his budget for volunteer auxiliary coastguards in each of the last 10 years as a percentage of the budget for officer posts; and on how many occasions and in what circumstances auxiliary coastguards have been used in excess of 16 hours per week.

Mr. Norris: The budget for volunteer auxiliary coastguards for each year as a percentage of the budget for officer posts, including a small number of administrative staff was: 1990-91, 16·7 per cent.; 1991-92, 18·3 per cent.; 1992-93, 16·8 per cent.; 1993-94, 15·7 per cent.; 1994-95, 13·7 per cent. The figures for the years 1984 to 1989 are not now available as a different accounting system was then used.

Details of how many occasions in the last 10 years and in what circumstances auxiliary coastguards have been used in excess of 16 hours per week could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the details of (a) insurance liability and (b) responsibility for health and safety matters in respect of auxiliary coastguards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Auxiliary coastguards are volunteers. They have a call on the principal civil service pension scheme in the event of injury while on duty, limited to impairment of earning capacity. In all other insurance matters they receive the same cover as regular staff while on duty.

Auxiliary coastguards are covered by the same health and safety arrangements as apply to regular staff.

Transport of Children

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he will now take to ensure that councils do not suffer financially by allocating a seat to every child on a school bus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Public Service Vehicles (Carrying Capacity) Regulations 1984 permit three children, each of whom is under 14, to share a double seat and count as two passengers.

The Government are considering the way forward as part of the wider review.

Lorry Bans

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held with the Metropolitan and the City of London police on the enforcement of the London night-time and weekend lorry ban.

Mr. Norris: Enforcement of the ban is the responsibility of the London borough councils and the police. Informal contact with the Metropolitan police has indicated they see no particular difficulties with the Government's proposals to amend the ban. Once the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill receives Royal Assent the police will be consulted on any draft order to amend the ban under the provisions of clause 24.

Hartland MRSC

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the need for additional staff arising from increased incidents following the closure of Hartland maritime rescue sub-centre in 1988.

Mr. Norris: Following the closure of Hartland maritime rescue sub-centre in 1988, staff complements were increased in the Maritime rescue co-ordination centre Seansea and an extra sector post established in the north Devon area. Experience since indicates that no additional staff are necessary.

Driving Tests (Fraud)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's estimate of the scale of fraud in taking driving tests; and what steps are being taken to prevent abuse.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. Ford, and I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given. The agency's deputy chief executive, Mr. Lobo, will answer in Dr. Ford's absence on leave.

Letter from G. Lobo to Mr. John Spellar, dated 12 July 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked the Chief Executive to reply to your question about preventing fraud at the driving test. I am replying as Dr. Ford is on annual leave.

The driving test provides an important safeguard for road safety and the risk of impersonation of driving test candidates is viewed seriously. A conviction could lead to a £5,000 fine or 2 years imprisonment.

Test candidates are required to establish their identity at the start of the test, normally by showing the examiner their provisional driving licence. Candidates also provide a signature and examiners check that against the signature on candidates' driving licences. Driving examiners are trained to distinguish between experienced and learner drivers. If there are grounds for suspicion the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency can delay issuing the licence until the matter has been fully investigated. This system will be further strengthened by the introduction of photographs on driving licences planned from July 1996.

Notwithstanding recent well publicised instances of candidate impersonation, the Agency does not have evidence to indicate that this is a large scale problem. Over the last 12 months there have been nine convictions for the offence nationally compared with 1·7 million driving tests conducted, similar to the number in previous years.

Driver Licensing

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he intends (a) to go out to consultation on and (b) to implement regulations under the European Communities Act 1972 to implement the second EC directive on driver licensing.

Mr. Key [holding answer 5 July 1994]: Consultation on the second EC directive on driver licensing began on 31 March and ended on 24 June. Regulations to be made under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 to implement the directive will be made as soon as remaining questions of interpretation have been clarified with the European Commission. The directive will come into effect on the due date of 1 July 1996.

Pollution (Marine Incidents)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the date, the cause of the accident, and the extent of any resultant pollution for maritime losses, collisions and contacts in 1993 and 1994 to date in the sea areas of the Irish sea and the English channel.

Mr. Norris: The information given in the table relates to incidents involving one or more United Kingdom registered merchant or fishing vessels where is has been established that the accident happened in either the Irish sea or the English channel.

There was very minor pollution in respect of the stranding/loss of the Coeur De Lion.

There was very minor pollution in respect of the capsizing/loss of the LIA-G, the foundering/loss of the Charlynne II and the foundering/loss of Heather Armorel.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much the Welsh Development Agency spent on legal fees in each year in the period 1983 to 1993;

(2) what was the cost of the consultant hired by the Welsh Development Agency to report on a project entitled "Jobs and Pay"; and why its proposals were not implemented.

Mr. Redwood: I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Public Bodies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Land Authority for Wales are councillors.

Mr. Redwood: None of the current board members of the Welsh Development Agency is a councillor; 30 per cent.—three—of members of the Development Board for Rural Wales are councillors, which will be increased to five members following my statement on 7 July; and 50 per cent.—four—of members of the Land Authority for Wales are councillors.

Water Quality (Llandudno and Rhyl)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he intends to take to improve water quality of Llandudno west shore and Rhyl beaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Dwr Cymru's programme of improvements to bathing waters includes schemes at both of these waters which should be completed next year. The schemes are designed to enable the waters to meet the mandatory standards in the European bathing water directive.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the change in the numbers of the unemployed since May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: On a consistent and seasonally adjusted basis the number of claimant unemployed in Wales was 68,700 in May 1979 and 122,200 in May 1994, an increase of 53,500.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Elfyn Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, how many buildings of historical importance are currently being renovated in (a) Gwynedd, (b) Clwyd, (c) Dyfed, (d) Powys, (e) Gwent, (f) South Glamorgan, (g) Mid Glamorgan, (h) West Glamorgan and (i) Wales as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments executive agency under its chief executive, John Carr. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. A. J. Carr to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 13 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Wales has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question originally put to the Secretary of State for National Heritage about the renovation of buildings of historical importance.

There is no centrally collected information on the number of buildings of historical importance being renovated in Wales. What we do know is of Wales stock of some 16,165 buildings listed as being of special architectural or historic importance how many are the subject of listed building consent. The attached table [1] sets out this information.

The other area in which we do have information relates to buildings which are receiving grant aid from Cadw. I have set out in the attached table [2] the numbers of properties currently the subject of grant aid.

I hope this information is helpful. If you require more detailed information please do let me know and we will seek to provide it.

Schools (Security)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will outline his policies as they impinge upon meassures concerning the safety and the welfare of pupils on the school site with specific reference to the need for schools to be secure from casual visitors and passers by; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his assessment of whether the infant and primary schools of Wales are safe and secure from the point of view of the personal safety of the children during school hours; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is the responsibility of individual local education authorities to ensure the health and safety of all children attending schools within their area. With regard to grant-maintained schools, this responsibility falls to the governing body of each school. Clearly, security is an important issue and local authorities and schools have a wealth of national guidance and advice to draw upon. They can also seek the assistance of the local police as necessary. I am satisfied that local education authorities and schools take these responsibilities seriously.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by wave (a) the number of non-executive directors of NHS trust hospitals and (b) the number of chairs of NHS trust hospitals, by salary band.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is as follows:

Non-executive directors—1992-5
1993-62
1994-43

Chairmen's Salary	1992	1993	1994
Band 1 (£19,285)	—	5	2
Band 2 (£17,145)	1	7	5
Band 3 (£15,125)	—	1	3

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cost of installing capital equipment in each of the hospital trusts of Wales over the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information about the cost of installing capital equipment is not held centrally.

Community Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of people employed in community care in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The whole-time equivalent numbers of staff directly employed by local authority social services departments to provide day and domiciliary services are as follows:

Staff in post at 30 September 1992.
Clwyd 544·7
Wales 5,752·3

These figures exclude local authority staff employed in the areas of care assessment, social work support and management and also exclude staff of other contracted agencies.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the latest figures and list for each of the last four years by region the number of (a) doctors, (b) nurses, (c) midwives, (d) health visitors, (e) administration and clerical staff and (f) managers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information is given in the table.

Notes:

[1] Includes staff employed by those Family Health Service Authorities using Health Authority payroll systems.
The use of locally devised payscales from 1991 may affect the comparability of figures as these staff cannot be allocated centrally to specific staff group and are not, therefore, included above. This affects figures for Pembrokeshire in particular.
Staff employed by NHS Trusts have been amalgamated with the health authority area in which they are situated in order to show comparisons over time.

[2] Doctors working in the hospital and community health service. The figures are obtained from an annual census of staff in post on 30 September and, therefore, no figures are available for March 1994.

[3] Reliable estimates of the numbers of nursing staff employed in specific occupational groups, such as midwives and health visitors, are not available centrally. Since the autumn of 1991 learner (student) nurses have been classified as students and are no longer included in the NHS staff figures. Learner staff numbers shown in the table for 1992 onwards are learners finishing courses started before this change took place.

[4] General managers, senior managers and managers.

[5] Certain responsibilities and staff have transferred to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority from Health Authorities in recent years, affecting the comparability of figures over time.

Customs House School, Deeside

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will meet the chairman of the Education Assets Board and direct him to reverse his decision to transfer to and vest in the Deeside College a property within the grounds of Customs House county primary school, Deeside, Clwyd;

(2) if he will make a statement concerning his working relations with the Education Assets Board (Leeds);

(3) if he will meet the chairman and governors of Customs House county primary school, Deeside to discuss their plans for the future of the school.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Education Assets Board has responsibility under section 36 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 to secure that the transfer of property, rights and liabilities from any local authority to a further education corporation is fully effective. Where there is a disagreement about whether or not an asset should transfer, the board considers representations from each side before making a direction to the effect either that the asset should remain in local authority ownership or that it should transfer to the corporation. Both the local authority and the further education corporation have a right to appeal to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales against a direction made by the board.

No appeal has been received in respect of the board's decision that ownership of a property within the grounds of Customs House CP school, Deeside, Clwyd should transfer to the Deeside further education corporation. If an appeal is received, my right hon. Friend will give it careful consideration.

The Education Assets Board keeps the Welsh Office informed of the progress it is making in effecting the transfer of assets to the further education corporations and any disputes which arise in the course of its work.

My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the chairman and governors of Customs House CP school. I have met both the headmaster and a governor of the school with the hon. Member.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of whether hospital clinical waste is incinerated correctly and that localities are safe from injurious effects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All current guidance on the management of clinical waste, including incineration, has been issued to health authorities and NHS trusts in Wales. Under the pollution control provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the prime regulatory responsibility for hospital incinerators rests with district councils in Wales; and in licensing the operation of such facilities councils include safeguards to protect public health and the environment.

Dental Health

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to improve dental health among children of school age.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Oral Health", published two years ago outlines arrangements necessary to secure improved oral health of the population including schoolchildren.

The local strategy for health prepared by Clwyd health authority reflects the aims of the protocol in seeking to obtain improvements in patient care and quality of services.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the fairness of the current terms and conditions of NHS authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I asume this to be a question about the terms and conditions of service applicable to NHS staff, with the fairness of which I am broadly satisfied.

Nurses Regrading

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the regrading of nurses in (a) Wales, and (b) Clwyd giving the date when regrading began; and how many regradings have taken place in each of the health authorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The new grading structure for nurses took effect on 1 April 1988. The other information requested is not held centrally.

Dental Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to obtain more NHS dentists in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The assessment of health need and the procurement of appropriate care is the responsibility of the relevant health authority. General dental practitioners are independent contractors who can locate their practices where they wish. The Welsh Office is considering the Clwyd family health services authority's application to employ salaried dentists.

NHS Research and Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements are in place in his Department to collect centrally data on the numbers of people employed directly or indirectly to administer research and development in the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Land Schemes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost in 1993 in Wales of payments made under (a) the countryside stewardship scheme, (b) the hedgerow incentive scheme, (c) the countryside premium scheme and (d) the wildlife enhancement scheme; and what is his estimate of the cost in 1994.

Sir Wyn Roberts: (a) The countryside stewardship scheme does not operate in Wales. The Countryside Council for Wales runs a broadly equivalent farm-based scheme called Tir Cymen, which was launched in July 1992.

The estimated costs are as follows:

£ million

	1993-94	1994-95
Total expenditure	2·01	3·42
Grants paid	1·57	2·98
Administration and research	0·44	0·44

(b) The estimated costs of the hedgerow incentive scheme are as follows:

£ million

	1993-94	1994-95
Total expenditure	0·45	0·51
Grants paid	0·38	0·44
Administration	0·07	0·07

(c) and (d) There are no equivalent schemes in Wales.

Day Surgery

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many operations on a day-care basis were carried out in the last year in each of the hospitals in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, information on the number of day cases treated in each hospital in Wales is published annually in "Hospital Bed Use Statistics Volume 1: In-patients and Daycases" the latest edition of which, relating to the financial year 1992-93, is in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Meteorological Office

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key performance targets have been set for the chief executive of the Meteorological Office executive agency for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Hanley: The agency has been set a range of quality, financial and efficiency targets to ensure that it delivers progressive improvements in the provision of weather-related services.

The key quality targets set for the Meteorological Office during financial year 1994-95 are to achieve 80 per cent. of all business plan targets for customer satisfaction, forecast accuracy and timeliness; and in particular to attain an accuracy of at least 84 per cent. for the 24-hour national forecast broadcast at 1755 hours by BBC Radio 4.

The financial targets are to deliver the agreed Meteorological Office programme within a business plan cash limit of £75,000,000; to reduce net expenditure, as shown in the annual report and accounts, to £93,200,000, representing a decrease of 9·1 per cent. on the 1993-94 budget; and to provide a net contribution to the agency's core costs and general overheads of £3,600,000 from commercial services to the public, industry and commerce, excluding the Civil Aviation Authority and the Department of the Environment, representing an increase of £300,000 over the 1993-94 budget.

Individual areas of Meteorological Office have been set targets to increase efficiency by between 2 and 3 per cent., typically, through improvement in quality and volume of service and reduced unit costs.

Defence Accounts Agency

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Defence Accounts Agency 1994-95.

Mr. Hanley: The chief executive of the Defence Accounts Agency is responsible for providing accounting services for the Ministry of Defence as defined in the agency framework document. He has been set the following challenging key performance targets for 1994-95:

a. To complete the following workload within the funds allocated for this purpose:

Manage 92,500 non-industrial pay accounts
Manage 45,200 industrial pay accounts
Complete 150,000 pensions awards/transactions
Approve 500,000 claims for travel or transfer expenses
Pay 17,000 fees claims
Pay 3,300,000 bills
Process 48,000 invoices
Make 420,000 personal payments
Manage 9,000 imprest accounts
Process 35,000 HQ receipts
Process 2,750 banknote orders
Process 2,150 bank fundings

b. To meet the Agency's quality of service standards in Service Level Agreements and performance targets.

c. To achieve 10 per cent manpower reductions required by centrally managed efficiency measures by 31 March 1995.

d. To make efficiency savings with a value of at least £1,100,000 which is approximately 2·5 per cent. of the initial cash allocation, concentrating on the fixed costs identified in a recent study.

e. To compete for Payroll and Pension awarding business offered through the Government's Market Testing programme.

f. To operate a Customer Charter for Civil Pay services by March 1995.

g. To complete the Full Study Stage of the Mainframe Rationalisation Project.

h. To develop a Quality Strategy by 31 March 1995.

Base Storage and Distribution

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about possible defence-agency status for the base storage and distribution organisation of the Army.

Mr. Hanley: I have decided that the Army base storage and distribution organisation should be considered as a candidate for defence agency status, under the next steps initiative. A prior options study will be undertaken to establish whether agency status or other options would be appropriate. I would welcome comments from interested parties. Comments should be sent by 9 September 1994 to:

Major General D. L. Burden CBE
Director General Logistic Support (Army)
Headquarters Quartermaster General
Portway
Monxton Road
Andover
Hants SP11 8HT

Directorate of Transport and Movements

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about possible defence agency status for the Directorate of Transport and Movements (Army).

Mr. Hanley: I have decided that, subject to the satisfactory conclusion of normal trade union consultation, the Directorate of Transport and Movements (Army) should be considered as a candidate for defence agency status under the next steps initiative. The directorate will undergo a prior options study to determine whether agency status or alternative options would be most appropriate. Comments and ideas would be welcomed from any interested party. They should be sent by Friday 9 September 1994 to:

Major General D. L. Burden CBE
Director General Logistic Support (Army)
Headquarters Quartermaster General
Portway
Monxton Road
Andover
Hants. SP11 8HT

Parachute Training

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current arrangements for the use of balloons for Army parachute training; what annual costs are involved; what plans he has for the replacement of balloons by aircraft; what savings in costs and reductions in service and civilian numbers are expected; what are the operational implications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The RAF Balloon Operations Squadron —BOS—provides support both for initial parachute training at No. 1 Parachute Training School and for continuation training for units of the three services. The squadron's operating costs for financial year 1993-94 were £3,858,000. The BOS is due to be disbanded on 1 April 1995, when its function will be taken over by a contractorised operation using Skyvan aircraft. Substantial savings are expected and there will be a reduction of 78 uniformed posts. As the Skyvan operation will mirror the existing operation, there will be no operational implications arising from this change.

Army Service

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those Army regiments or battalions which served in (a) the Falklands campaign and completed tours there since, (b) Gulf war, (c) Bosnia and (d) Northern Ireland since 1990.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is set out in the table. Complete regiments and battalions only—the Royal Armoured Corps, Infantry and Royal Artillery—are listed in order of seniority.

Iraq (Friendly Fire)

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet received the results of the United States board of inquiry into the shooting down of two Black Hawk helicopters over northern Iraq on 14 April; if the bereaved families have been informed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The United States Government have today announced the results of their board of inquiry. I have placed a copy of the executive summary, summary of facts and United States news release in the Libraries of both Houses. The board of inquiry concluded that a combination of human error and organisational failures led to a tragic sequence of events resulting in the shooting down of the two Black Hawk helicopters. The bereaved families visited the Adjutant General and myself at the Ministry of Defence this afternoon, before receiving a briefing at the United States embassy from the ambassador and a representative of the United States air force in Europe.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Russia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration Her Majesty's Government and other Group of Seven nations gave to a Marshall-aid type programme to Russia; and what were the reasons for their decision.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: When they met in Tokyo last year, G7 leaders agreed a package of assistance to the Russian Federation worth $43·4 billion. They discussed progress on implementing this package in Naples on 8 to 10 July. A copy of the summit communiqué has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

World Health Organisation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the World Health Organisation about the improvement of its performance in crisis situations in developing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We welcome the World Health Organisation's increasing role in emergency situations and have supported its emergency work in a number of countries.

The United Kingdom, through its official representatives to WHO, maintains a continuing dialogue with the division of emergency and humanitarian action on how best the division should develop its activities in providing assistance in emergency situations. We have fully supported the recent setting up, by WHO, of a task force to examine this role. It is still working on its recommendations which we will examine carefully when they are released.

Aid and Development Targets

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the targets on aid and development co-operation established by the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, by the United Nations and by its agencies, including targets established at the world summit for children, Jomtien education-for-all conference, United Nations conferences on the least developed countries and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development; which of these targets the United Kingdom has accepted; and what progress towards these targets has been made by the United Kingdom to date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are three United Nations targets, accepted by the United Kingdom, for resource transfers to the developing countries. These are:

(i) The United Nations Target for total net official development assistance (oda) to all developing countries equal to 0·7 per cent. of GNP. In 1993 United Kingdom net oda totalled £1·9 billion, equivalent to 0·31 per cent. of GNP;

(ii) the United Nations target for total official and private flows to developing countries equal to 1 per cent. of GNP. In 1992, the United Kingdom spent 0·89 per cent. of GNP on total flows; and

(iii) the United Nations Target for net oda to Least Developed Countries (LLDCs) equal to 0·15 per cent. of GNP. In 1991-92 the United Kingdom spent an average of 0·10 per cent. on net oda to LLDCs. (United Kingdom aid to India and Pakistan, two of our largest country programmes, does not score against this target even though both countries are poorer than many LLDCs).

The world summit for children did not establish specific targets. It did, however, identify goals in such areas as child survival and development; child health; basic education, and the protection of children living in difficult circumstances. We were one of the first industrialised countries to publish its national report in response to the summit. The report, published in July 1992 by Command 1984, contains detailed information on the help we are giving to assist children in developing countries through our aid programme. Our commitment to the declaration and plan of action agreed at the summit is borne out in the pattern of activity supported by the aid programme. This programme benefits children directly, through health and education, and indirectly through safe water projects. In the financial year 1992-93 over £180 million or more than 31 per cent. of that part of our bilateral aid which can be allocated by sector, was spent in the social sectors such as education, health care, clean water and safe sanitation.

No new targets were set at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. We have, however, taken an active part in the successful fulfilment of the agreements at UNCED, as expressed in Agenda 21, to restructure the global environment facility, to agree a convention on desertification and to hold a conference on the sustainable development of small island developing states, which adopted an action plan.

We support the shift to basic education for all children, youth and adults which was adopted by the Jomtien conference in 1990. The Jomtien declaration reaffirmed the right of all people to education—and urged countries and donors to allocate more resources to primary education, literary programmes and basic training. The amount we allocate to basic education has increased from £6 million in 1991-92 to around £15 million in 1992-93.

Bangladesh

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government aid policy with regard to Bangladesh.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on Thursday 23 June 1994, Official Report, column 272.

Bosnia

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with his European counterparts to improve the delivery of humanitarian aid in Bosnia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply he received from my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 27 June 1994, Official Report, 411. We are playing an active part with EU partners in the EU administration of Mostar.

Indonesia

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy for aid to Indonesia, indicating whether such aid is to be targeted in the future; and what arrangements Her Majesty's Government are making for its independent monitoring.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Her Majesty's Government provide assistance for Indonesia because it is still a relatively poor country, is pursuing sound economic policies, has an impressive record of poverty reduction and is generally an effective user of aid. In agreement with the Indonesian Government, the United Kingdom aid programme is focused on natural resources including forestry, education, public administration, energy efficiency and transportation. We monitor the progress of projects through regular reports from the project authorities and through monitoring visits by ODA staff. The overall programme is reviewed every two years by ODA senior management.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Medical Referrals

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for sickness and invalidity benefit were referred to the regional medical services in each quarter since September 1993; how many of these cases resulted in a medical examination; and what were the outcomes (a) where examinations took place and (b) where they did not.

Mr. Scott: The administration of sickness benefit and invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 12 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many claims for sickness and invalidity benefit were referred to the regional medical services in each quarter since September 1993; how many of these cases resulted in a medical examination; and what were the outcomes (a) where examination took place and (b) where they did not.

Figures are not yet available for the quarter ending 30 June 1994. Those figures which are available are shown in the attached table.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Outcome of claims to Sickness/Invalidity Benefit referred to Regional Medical Services in each Quarter since September 1993

	September 1993—December 1993	January 1994—March 1994
Total cleared	230,000	269,000
Examination—capable of own work	5,000	5,000
Examination—capable of alternative work	25,000	28,000
Examination—incapable of all work	48,000	54,000
No examination—incapable not examined	131,000	159,000
No examination—claim terminated	3,000	3,000
No examination—failed to attend	17,000	20,000

Notes:
1. Based upon a 100 per cent. count of cases, rounded to the nearest thousand
2. Figures include severe disablement allowance references.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many referrals to the Benefits Agency medical service were made during 1992-93 and 1993-94 of claimants of (a) sickness benefit, (b) severe disablement allowance and (c) invalidity benefit; and what percentage of each were found (i) capable of alternative work and (ii) capable of normal occupation.

Mr. Scott: The administration of sickness benefit and invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 12 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many referrals to the Benefits Agency Medical Services were made during 1992-93 and 1993-94 of claimants of (a) sickness benefit, (b) severe disablement allowance and (c) invalidity benefit; and what percentage of each were found (i) capable of alternative work and (ii) capable of normal occupation.

The Benefits Agency Medical Service (BAMS) are asked an opinion on incapacity in relation to Sickness Benefit, Invalidity Benefit, and Severe Disablement Allowance. I regret that the figures of cases cleared are not separated into the different benefits. The total figures for the three benefits are as follows:

	Number	Per cent.
1992-93
References cleared	872,000	—
Capable of alternative work	62,000	7·1
Capable of normal occupation	38,000	4·4

	Number	Per cent.
1993-94
References cleared	1,021,000	—
Capable of alternative work	100,000	9·8
Capable of normal occupation	22,000	2·2

Note: Figures subject to rounding to nearest thousand.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Disability (Consultation)

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make it his policy to widen the Government's consultation on disability to include (a) transport, (b) education and (c) the adoption of comprehensive civil rights legislation;

(2) if he will make a statement detailing the terms of reference and time scales for the Government's consultation on disability discrimination issues;

(3) what criteria were used by his Department in determining the areas for discussion in the consultation on disability.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister informed the House on 10 May that consultation would take place within six months on proposals in the fields of employment, access to goods and services, financial services, access to buildings, and the establishment of a new advisory body on disability. A consultation document will be issued very shortly.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated savings to his Department in (a) 1995-96, (b) 1996-97 and (c) 1997-98 resulting from (i) freezing the additional pension payable with invalidity benefit and (ii) abolishing the additional pension for new claimants of invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that freezing the additional pension payable with invalidity benefit will generate net savings of £30 million in 1995-96, £40 million in 1996-97 and £50 million in 1997-98.

It is estimated that abolishing additional pension for people who start receiving long-term incapacity benefit after April 1995 will generate net savings of £20 million in 1995-96, £130 million in 1996-97 and £230 million in 1997-98.

Note: Estimates are expressed in constant 1993-94 prices, are rounded to the nearest £10 million and are net of offsetting changes in expenditure on age allowances and income related benefits.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated administration costs of incapacity benefit for the years 1995-96, 1996-97 and 1997-98.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested.

Forecasts of the costs of administering individual benefits are not available. It is estimated that the changes announced in the Social Security (Incapacity for Work) Act 1994 will add £40 million per annum to the Department's overall administrative costs in 1995-96 and 1996-97 and £10 million per annum from 1997-98.

Social Security (Incapacity for Work) Bill

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated savings to his Department arising from each clause of the Social Security (Incapacity for Work) Bill, as amended.

Mr. Scott: The Social Security (Incapacity for Work) Bill received Royal Assent on 5 July 1994.

The estimated savings taking account of amendments passed are in the table. Sections 1 and 2 have been grouped because it is not feasible to apportion the savings further. The figures show only the savings arising out of the Act itself.

Section	1995-96 £ million	1996-97 £ million
1 and 2	–150	–335
3	n/a	n/a
4	–160	–475
5	–50	–180
6	n/a	n/a
7	n/a	n/a
8	negligible	negligible
9	n/a	n/a
10	+5	+5
11	n/a	n/a
12	–25	–90

Note: Estimates are expressed in constant 1993-94 prices and are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (a) what are the estimated costs to his Department of the changes to disability working allowance and (b) how many people are estimated to gain, under (i) increases to the allowance for lone parents, and couples, (ii) increases to the single person's threshold and (iii) introducing a disabled child's premium.

Mr. Scott: The cost and expected number of gainers as a result of the disability working allowance changes are in the table.

Cost	1995-96 £3·25 million		1996-97 £4·25 million		1997-98 £5·25 million
Increase allowance for couples and lone parents	gainers	4,000	gainers	5,500	gainers	6,500
	floaters on	1,000	floaters on	1,000	floaters on	1,500
Increase threshold for single people	gainers	4,500	gainers	6,000	gainers	7,000
	floaters on	500	floaters on	500	floaters on	1,000
Introduce a disabled child's premium	Gainers and floaters on	<250	Gainers and floaters on	<250	Gainers and floaters on	<250

Note: Costs are rounded to the nearest £0·25 million and are given at constant 1994-95 prices; caseloads are rounded to the nearest 500. It is very difficult to reliably estimate the behavioural consequences of these policy changes, therefore figures are not accurate to that degree.

Statistics

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of claimants receiving (a) severe disablement allowance, (b) invalidity benefit and (c) unemployment benefit also received (i) housing benefit and (ii) council tax benefit.

Mr. Scott: Information relating to housing benefit is in the table.

Information relating to council tax benefit is not yet available.

Benefit	Total Beneficiaries (000s)	Beneficiaries also receiving Housing Benefit (000s)	Percentage
Severe Disablement Allowance	302	60	20
Invalidity Benefit	1,439	336	23
Unemployment Benefit	669	154	23

Notes:

The Severe disablement Allowance and Invalidity Benefit figures are based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants in Great Britain at 4 April 1992, and the Unemployment Benefit figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of claimants in Great Britain at 14 May 1992. The Housing Benefit figures are based on a 1 per cent. sample of recipients at May 1992.

All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand and percentages to the nearest whole number.

Council Tax

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures available for the level of use of (a) direct payments from benefits and (b) attachment of earnings, for each council tax collecting local authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Hague: I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment that the information is not available centrally.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why local authorities' responses to his Department's research on the amount of estimated council tax benefit local authorities were expecting to have processed by the end of March 1993 were not published in the report "Preparing for Council Tax Benefit" published in August 1993; and if he will now publish these responses.

Mr. Hague: Although the question was included in a departmental circular to local authorities giving examples of the type of information that might be required, it was not included in the research questionnaire subsequently issued. Professional advice was that responses to such a question would be inaccurate, as an estimate of council tax benefit case load assessed would have been based on an already estimated case load figure. The information is not therefore available.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of reducing the council tax benefit taper (a) from 20 per cent. to 15 per cent. and (b) from 20 per cent. to 10 per cent.

Mr. Hague: The cost is estimated to be £110 million and £300 million in 1994 and 1995 respectively.

Source:

Estimates use data drawn from the 1989-90-91 Family Expenditure Surveys and modelled at 1994-95 prices and benefit levels. Costs are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Income Support

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated average cost of keeping an individual on income support from the day he becomes eligible to receive it until he reaches pensionable age.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available. Such a cost would vary according to the personal circumstances of the claimant and the changes that occurred during the period on benefit.

Asbestosis

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce an asbestosis compensation scheme on the same basis as the pneumoconiosis compensation scheme; and if he will give reasons for his decision.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to introduce an asbestosis compensation scheme.

Poverty

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what definition Her Majesty's Government use of absolute poverty.

Mr. Burt: No Government in the United Kingdom have ever accepted that it is possible to identify a single simple measure to define poverty in any meaningful way. A great many methods have been used by various academics to identify a "poverty line", but none has received general acceptance.

Rather than relying on narrow arbitrary definitions this Department publishes an extensive range of analyses and information of the incomes and characteristics of people in the lower half of the income distribution. These analyses can be found in "Households Below Average Income", the latest edition of which was published on 30 June 1993 covering the years 1979 to 1990. A copy is in the Library. The next edition is due to be published on 14 July covering the years 1979 to 1991-92.

Funeral Expenses

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications to the social fund for funeral expenses have been refused since SI 506, the social fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Amendment Regulations 1994 came into force; and how many refusals were on the grounds that the applicant is not considered a responsible person to meet the costs.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Habitual Residence

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he received representations from the Irish Government regarding the proposed habitual residence regulations; what was the substance of the representations; and what plans his Department has to take action as a result of these representations.

Mr. Burt: Department of Social Security Ministers met members of the Irish Government on a number of occasions earlier this year. The regulations laid on 11 July, which introduce a habitual residence test into income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit from 1 August, enable people who are habitually resident in the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man and the Irish Republic to qualify for those benefits, subject to satisfaction of the other conditions of entitlement. This maintains the reciprocal access to benefits between the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic based upon the common travel area which has existed for many years.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he received representations from the European Commission regarding the proposed habitual residence regulation; what is the substance of the representations; if he will place them in the Library; and what plans his Department has in view of the representations.

Mr. Burt: The Commission for the European Communities wrote on 15 March drawing attention to the existence of Community law in relation to residence tests and the right of free movement. The regulations which introduce a habitual residence test into income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit, laid on 11 July, take account of the requirements of Community law.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fur Farms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether mink are currently present at Little Youlstone mink farm; and when the last licence was issued for this establishment;

(2) whether mink are currently present at Lawleys mink farm; and when the last licence was issued for this establishment;

(3) whether mink are currently present at Kelbain mink farm; and when the last licence was issued for this establishment;

(4) whether Swaslemoor mink farm is currently licensed to keep mink;

(5) whether mink are currently present at Brome mink farm; and when the last licence was issued for this establishment.

Mr. Soames: Ministry policy is not to disclose details of licences of mink farms.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many times officials of the State Veterinary Service have monitored the killing of arctic foxes on fur farms during each of the last five years;

(2) what method is used to kill arctic foxes in fur farms.

Mr. Soames: Officers of the State Veterinary Service monitored the slaughter of arctic fox once in the last five years. On that occasion the method of slaughter used was by lethal injection.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many welfare inspections were carried out on mink farms in 1993 by officers of the State Veterinary Service.

Mr. Soames: Officers of the State Veterinary Service carried out 13 inspections on mink farms in 1993.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total breeding population of mink in England, by county.

Mr. Soames: The Mink Keeping Order 1992, which requires that mink farms are licensed by Agriculture Departments, does not require regular returns of the number of mink kept. However, best estimates suggest that the total number of mink being kept in fur farms in the United Kingdom has fallen from approximately 100,000 in 1987 to some 47,000 in 1992.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many mink were killed in fur factory farms in England last November.

Mr. Soames: The Mink Keeping Order 1992, which requires that mink farms are licensed by Agriculture Departments, does not require returns to be made of the number of mink killed.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licensing applications for new mink fur factory farms have been made in each of the past five years.

Mr. Soames: In the last five years up to 30 June 1994, two licence applications have been made for new mink farms: one in 1991 and one earlier this year. All other licence applications received have been for licence renewals.

Calves' Offal

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration she gave to banning the use of the brains and spinal cords of calves under the age of six months in human food equally with the intestines and thymus; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I have considered carefully the advice of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee and the Government's chief medical officer and concluded that on the basis of the scientific evidence there is no justification for banning the use of brain, spinal cord, tonsils and spleen of calves under six months of age from human food.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research she is doing on the dangers of consumption of the thalamus.

Mr. Soames: The thalamus is part of the brain, and therefore from bovine animals over six months of age is a specified bovine offal which is prohibited for use in food for humans, animals and birds. The thalamus has not been tested separately from the rest of the brain, which has been assayed on several occasions, and in which the BSE agent has been shown to be present in brains from clinically infected cattle.

The hon. Member may have in mind the thymus gland which was specifically mentioned in the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) on 30 June, Official Report, column 264, about new controls on calf offals. The thymus is also a specified bovine offal and prohibited for human consumption. Thymus tissue from experimental calves orally challenged with a large dose of BSE-infected brain is being assayed for infectivity in mice under a project funded by the Ministry. This research is incomplete but so far there is no evidence of infectivity in thymus tissue.

Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the background and field of expertise of each member of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee.

Mr. Soames: The information requested about members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee is as follows:

Dr. David A. J. Tyrrell: CBE, FRS. (Chairman)—Physician and Virologist. Former Director of the Medical Research Council (MRC) Common Cold Unit and Deputy Director of the MRC Clinical Research Centre.

Dr. Robert G. Will (Deputy Chairman)—Consultant Neurologist at the Western General Hospital, Edinburgh and Head of the National Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease Surveillance Unit.

Professor Ingrid V. Allen—Professor of Neuropathology at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast.

Professor Fred Brown FRS—Virologist. Former Deputy Director (Scientific) Animal Virus Research Institute (Pirbright).

Dr. William D. Hueston—Veterinary Epidemiologist, United States Department of Agriculture.

Dr. Richard H. Kimberlin—Independent Consultant on Scrapie and Related Diseases.

Mr. David B. Pepper—Veterinary Surgeon in Private Practice (Retired).

Dr. William A. Watson—Veterinary Surgeon. Former Director of the Central Veterinary Laboratory.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial allowance is given to members appointed to the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee.

Mr. Soames: All members of the committee receive reimbursement of necessarily incurred travel and subsistence expenses. The chairman and four members of the committee also receive a daily fee for attendance at meetings in accordance with provisions set out in Treasury guidelines. The fee is £165 per meeting for the chairman and £131 for those members who receive a fee.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement about the supply of green top milk from dairy herds where BSE has been identified.

Mr. Soames: Green top milk from dairy herds where BSE has been identified is safe. Indeed, there is no evidence to indicate that milk will transmit any of the spongiform encephalopathies. Nevertheless, as part of the Government's ultra-cautious approach to BSE, the use of milk from BSE suspects is prohibited unless fed to their own calf, and all suspect BSE cattle are slaughtered and incinerated.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of BSE have been reported in each region of Britain in (a) beef cattle and (d) dairy cattle in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all research projects related to BSE which have been supported by Government in the last three years; and which projects are currently under consideration for future financial support.

Mr. Soames: The titles of research projects that, for the last three years, have been and are currently being supported by Government funding are shown in the table. Research on bovine spongiform encephalopathy is also supported by the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, but this Ministry does not hold detailed information on these.

As new research projects are submitted by potential contractors "in confidence" for consideration by officials of this Ministry details of these projects are unavailable.

Research projects related to bovine spongiform encephalopathy
Supported by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in the last three years

Project title	Contractor	Start date	Proposed end date
Infectivity of various tissues from animals with BSE	Royal Veterinary College, Veterinary Pathology	1 January 1989	30 June 1993
Evidence for the inheritance of susceptibility to BSE	Dr. W. V. S. Wijeratne	1 July 1990	30 June 1993
Experimental transmission of feline spongiform encephalopathy to mice	Bristol University, Pathology and Microbiology	29 August 1990	28 August 1993
Large scale isolation of abnormal prion protein from BSE-infected tissue	Birmingham University, Chemical Engineering	1 June 1991	31 May 1993
BSE deactivation studies (part of EC project)	IAH, Compton Laboratory	1 October 1991	11 October 1994
Bovine gene mapping with particular reference to BSE	Roslin Institute, Edinburgh	1 October 1991	30 September 1994
Further studies on oral transmission of BSE to mice	Royal Veterinary College, Veterinary Pathology	30 January 1992	29 January 1995
Investigation of the role of the embryo in maternal transmission of scrapie in sheep	IAH, Neuropathogenesis Unit	1 July 1992	30 June 1995
Potential role of anti-PrP in BSE	Central Veterinary Laboratory	1 April 1992	31 March 1994
Transferrin ion binding in normal and abnormal plasma	UL, UCL, Medical Microbiology	1 November 1992	31 October 1993
Genetic susceptibility of cattle to BSE	Reading University, Department Applied Statistics	1 July 1993	30 June 1994
Continued large scale isolation of abnormal PrP from BSE affected tissues	Birmingham University	1 June 1994	31 May 1995

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the projects which have been funded in the last three years; and which are under consideration for funding, that are related to establishing a live BSE identification test for cattle.

Mr. Soames: The table lists those research projects on bovine spongiform encephalopathy supported by Government during the last three years, which are related to establishing methods for diagnosing BSE in the live animal. Some of the other research projects funded by Government may also contribute to the developments of diagnostic methods, in as much as they contribute to knowledge about the nature of the infectious agent and the response of the infected animal.

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 22 June Official Report, column 168 what assessment she has made of the risk to humans posed by bovine immunodeficiency virus.

Mr. Soames: Bovine immunodeficiency-like virus, which was first identified in 1969, is one of a group of viruses that make up the lentivirus—slow virus—group. There is no evidence that it affects humans whether through contact with animals, drinking milk or eating meat. Experimental efforts to grow the virus in human cells have failed. Two United States laboratory personnel who had accidentally had needle stick injuries with BIV-infected cell culture material some five years ago have shown no signs of illness. Cattle with BIV antibodies have been identified in a number of countries and the virus is thought to have a worldwide distribution. No country as far as we are aware has considered it necessary to impose restrictions on known positive cattle herds in order either to protect the public or to prevent spread to other herds. It is characteristic of the lentiviruses to be highly species specific and it is important to note that mankind for generations has been in contact with horses, sheep, goats and cats many of which will have been infected with lentiviruses.

Racing Pigeons

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of paramyxovirus infection in commercial poultry have been attributed to racing pigeons for each year since 1987.

Mr. Soames: The virus which causes paramyxoviruses in pigeons causes Newcastle disease in poultry. The last confirmed outbreak of Newcastle disease in commercial poultry was in 1984, when racing pigeons were implicated.

Durum Wheat, Italy

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 27 June, Official Report, columns 401-2 what were the areas and discrepancies of durum wheat measured by remote sensing in Italy; what subsequent action was taken by the Italian authorities; and what evidence she has on whether such action has been effective.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 30 June 1994]: The information requested is not held by my Department. Further details of the results and the nature of the action taken by the Italian authorities can be obtained from the European Commission in Brussels.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of her Department's (a) press releases and (b) written answers are printed on recycled paper.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 4 July 1994]: Although the paper used for MAFF press releases and written answers is not at present recycled, they are all printed on an environmentally friendly paper made from pulp obtained from sustainable and managed forests. Tests of recycled paper on the high-speed and high-volume printing machines used to produce press releases and written answers have so far been unsuccessful. MAFF does use recycled or environmentally friendly paper wherever this is available, of adequate quality and represents value for money. Later this year, another type of paper is to be used which has been subject to an environmental audit and awarded an "Eco-check" four-star rating. Ministers' correspondence, which is not copied in large quantities, is printed on recycled paper.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to her departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans she has for further privatisation.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 July 1994]: In March this year, the status of the former Agricultural Training Board was changed from that of a statutory, controlled non-departmental public body to a non-statutory private sector organisation with charitable status. The new organisation is known as ATB-Landbase. In 1990, it was announced that the Government intended to dispose of the assets of the Covent Garden Market Authority when legislative time permits. My right hon. Friend has taken no decisions regarding the transfer to private ownership of any other organisation of which she is owner or joint owner.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which interested parties she has written to on the licensing of BST; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 12 July 1994]: Following the announcement of my intention formally to consult all interested parties about BST I wrote on 28 April to 173 organisations, including welfare interests consumer organisations and industry bodies. A copy of the consultation package, including a list of those consulted, was placed in the Library of the House on 9 June.

Up to 7 July, copies had also been sent to a further 38 members of the public, hon. Members and organisations, a list of which has been placed in the Library of the House today.

Comfrey

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether her Department will make a grant to the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy to fund the undertaking of further research into the safety of comfrey and comfrey products.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry will shortly publish its "Food Research Requirements Document 1995-96" which describes the research topics that the Ministry is prepared to fund in the next financial year. These topics include research on the toxic properties of natural constituents of food which may cover the research requirements of the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy. The society is therefore welcome to submit its proposal for research in this area which will be assessed for its suitability for funding against the selection criteria listed in the document.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Police Computers (Misuse of Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General how many police offices have been prosecuted for misusing personal information from police computers in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

The information held centrally on prosecutions under the Data Protection Act 1984 and the Computer Misuse Act 1990 does not include the profession of the defendant. But I understand that the Association of Chief Police Officers is aware of two cases during 1993 of police officers being prosecuted for offences arising from the misuse of computer-held information.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many murders were committed in England and Wales in each of the last three years for which figures are available, and, of these, how many were persons killed by (a) shotguns, (b) handguns and (c) other firearms.

Mr. Maclean: The available information which relates to homicide is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which can be found in the Library, latest edition, 1992, Cm 2410, table 3.4.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will show for each of the last three years (a) the total number of crimes reported to the police, (b) the number of crimes which were believed to involve firearms, (c) the categories of crimes in which firearms were used, (d) the type of firearms used, (e) the number of persons charged with using firearms in the commission of crime, and (f) how many of those persons had authority to possess the firearms.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which can be found in the Library—latest edition, 1992 Cm. 2410, table 2.1—for total offences recorded by the police; table 3.1 for offences in which firearms were used; table 3.3 for the type of firearm involved; and table 3.13 for persons found guilty.

Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people charged with causing the death of another person by the use of a firearm of any description in England and Wales had authority to possess that firearm, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not available centrally.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place in respect of vehicle exhaust emissions in each of the last five years from (a) freight vehicles, (b) other vehicles and (c) in total; and how many have resulted in conviction.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not available centrally.

Red Routes

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made by his Department of the effect of the introduction of red routes in parts of London on the incidence of crime locally.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 5 July 1994]: I have been asked to reply.

No specific assessment has been made, but there is no reason why red route controls should lead to any increase in crime whatever.

Private Prisons

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what services are provided to his Department by (a) Wackenhut and (b) Wackenhut Corrections Corporation other than running prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The named companies are not under contract with the Home Office to provide any services other than running prisons.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances there is a bar on awarding contracts for private prisons to companies whose parent companies, subsidiaries or consortium partners have been in breach of the criminal law in the United Kingdom or elsewhere.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Philippa Drew to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 13 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about whether any bar exists on awarding contracts to private companies whose parent companies, subsidiaries or consortium partners have been in breach of the criminal law in the United Kingdom or elsewhere.

The Prison Service awards contracts in accordance with the Public Services Contracts Regulations 1993 Section IV, paragraph 14(1)(d) of the Regulations, amongst other matters, provides that a contracting authority may treat a services provider as ineligible to tender for, or to be included amongst those persons from whom it will make the selection of persons to be invited to tender for or to negotiate a contract, on the grounds that the services provider has been convicted of a criminal offence relating to the conduct of his business or profession.

An assessment of whether a services provider should be treated in this way would include considering the nature of the service to be provided to the Prison Service and the nature of the business that led to a conviction for a criminal offence.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what security checks and clearances were made by his Department on (a) Wackenhut and (b) Wackenhut Corrections Corporation prior to the award of the contract to manage Doncaster prison;

(2) what checks were made on (a) Wackenhut and (b) Wackenhut Corrections Corporation by his Department prior to the award of the contract to manage Doncaster prison to Premier Prison Services.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Philippa Drew to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 13 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about security checks and clearances made by his Department on (a) Wackenhut and (b) Wackenhut Corrections Corporation prior to the award of the contract to manage Doncaster Prison.

Checks were carried out in accordance with Part IV, paragraph 14(1) of the Public Services Contracts Regulations 1993 (SI 1993 No. 3228).

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff at Blakenhurst prison have (a) resigned and (b) been dismissed since the prison opened.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Philippa Drew to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 13 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of staff at Blakenhurst Prison who have (a) resigned and (b) been dismissed since the prison opened.

42 staff have resigned and six have been dismissed.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is the Crown monitor at Doncaster Prison; and at what grade is the post.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 13 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about who is the Crown Monitor at Doncaster Prison; and at what grade is their post.

The controller at Doncaster prison, who is a Crown servant, is a Governor Grade 2.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many managerial staff working at (a) Blakenhurst prison and (b) Doncaster prison are former employees of the Prison Service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 13 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of managerial staff working at Blakenhurst and Doncaster prisons who are former employees of the Prison Service.

There are nine former employees of the Prison Service working at Blakenhurst prison and eight at Doncaster prison. All are employed in senior or middle management positions.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what trade unions are recognised by Premier Prison Services Ltd. at Doncaster prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 13 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about which trade unions are recognised by Premier Prison Services Ltd at Doncaster Prison.

It is Premier Prison Services' company policy to allow the staff in each establishment, on a site-by-site basis, to decide whether they wish to be represented by a trade union in discussion on conditions of employment.

However, during the start up of a new operation, representation will be by way of a locally elected staff association. Such a staff association is in the process of being established at Doncaster Prison.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what trade unions are recognised by United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd., at Blakenhurst prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 13 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about which trade unions are recognised by United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. at Blakenhurst Prison.

It is not UKDS' current intention to recognise any particular union for negotiation of terms of employment for any individual employee or groups of employees. A Staff Consultative Committee has been established to enable representative staff members to meet with senior management on a regular and formal basis.

Prison Service (Performance Bonuses)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many performance bonuses have been awarded to Prison Service agency officials in 1994 to the latest available date;

(2) if he will list the Prison Service agency officials who received performance bonuses in 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Director General of the Prison Service has received performance bonuses in respect of the periods 6 January 1993, when he was appointed, to 31 March 1993 and 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994. Other members of the Prison Service have received performance pay increases, where appropriate, in accordance with the arrangements for the civil service generally.

Emergency Arrangements

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the steps being taken to ensure the introduction of a uniform national early warning public alert system of a kind urged by the Association of County Councils and the professional organisations concerned with civil protection.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At this stage we are not persuaded that a uniform national public alert system can be justified on threat or cost grounds.

Future national arrangements for warning the public of an air attack will be based around the use of radio and television broadcasts.

Peacetime Disasters

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to enhance the arrangements for the designation of Government Departments and the precise allocation of responsibilities in response to major peacetime disasters in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The designation of Government Departments to take the central Government lead in response to a major peacetime disaster is the responsibility of the Cabinet Office civil contingencies unit. The designations are kept under constant review, as are the responsibilities to be discharged by Departments. The Home Office publication "Dealing with Disaster" explains the role of the lead Government Department and which Departments have been pre-nominated for particular disasters. A copy is in the Library of both Houses.

Obscene Publications Branch

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the recommendations of the Metropolitan police review of specialist units in relation to the future of the obscene publications branch.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer my hon. and learned Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 26 May, col. 265.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the Data Protection Act 1984 to reduce the bureaucratic burden associated with compliance with the data protection principles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We shall consider what amendments may be needed to the Data Protection Act 1984 when the outcome of the negotiations on the draft EU directive on data protection is known.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list those who contributed to his paper "Costs of Implementing the Data Protection Directive"; and if he will place in the Library the answers to his Department's questionnaires from data user organisations, if necessary in a form which would not breach confidentiality.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have placed in the Library of the House a list of those from outside the Home Office who responded to the costings questionnaire. It would not be possible to anonymise all the responses as many of these contain comments which indicate their source. The hon. Member may wish to approach the respondents direct, to ask them for a copy of their response.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the reoffending rate for young people who complete their sentence in an institution compared with that of young people who undertake community service in the community in the last four weeks of their sentence.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not centrally available.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost to the Exchequer of the average young person under 24 years who completes a youth custody sentence from the known commencement of his criminal career.

Mr. Maclean: I regret that the available information does not allow any such estimate to be made.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the comparable reoffending rate for young people sentenced to a young offenders institution and young people sentenced to work in the community.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is given in the table. The comparison reflects not only the effectiveness of the sentences involved but the different characteristics of offenders receiving the sentences. Research to be published shortly by the Home Office has shown that the criminal history, age and sex of the offender are associated with re-offending. Furthermore, the statistics of reconvictions contain a proportion of convictions relating to additional offences committed before the current sentence was passed.

Percentage of offenders aged under 21 commencing Community Service Orders in 1987 or discharged from prison in 1987 who were reconvicted of a 'standard list' offence[3] within two years.

	Those discharged from prison service establishments[1] Per cent.	Those commencing a community service order[2] Per cent.
Males	71	65
Females	51	43

Money Laundering

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made with the Governments of the Isle of Man and Jersey to harmonise procedures to prevent money laundering.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Isle of Man and Jersey—and Guernsey—have all endorsed the 40 recommendations of the financial action task force against money laundering, established at the G7 summit in Paris in 1989, and have formally agreed to undergo an evaluation exercise, similar to that carried out by the task force in the United Kingdom in 1992, which will submit their anti-money laundering systems to a thorough examination. They have all also issued anti-money laundering notes for guidance to their financial institutions, similar to those issued in the United Kingdom. In addition, all three have criminalised drug money laundering in legislation modelled on the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986.

Immigration

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have chosen to be voluntarily repatriated under the scheme in the Immigration Act 1971, in each year from 1974 to 1986.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The voluntary repatriation scheme established under section 29 of the Immigration Act 1971 is operated by the International Social Service of the United Kingdom on behalf of the Home Office. During the financial years 1973-74 to 1986-87 the number of people repatriated under the scheme is as follows:

Year	Number
1973-74	239
1974-75	156
1975-76	219
1976-77	110
1977-78	130
1978-79	178
1979-80	131
1980-81	142
1981-82	218
1982-83	152
1983-84	144
1984-85	81
1985-86	72
1986-87	65

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he now has any firm proposals for increases in the cost of firearm and shotgun certificates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The fees for the grant and renewal of firearm and shot gun certificates are currently under review. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Official Cars

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the value of his official car.

Mr. Howard: The Home Office provides three official cars for the Secretary of State's use. Two were purchased in 1988 at a cost of £27,000 each. A replacement third car was purchased earlier this year at a cost of £19,000.

Uninsured Drivers

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those convicted of driving without insurance received fines of more than £1,000 in each of the past three years.

Mr. Maclean: Information available to me indicates that five convictions for driving without insurance in 1990 in England and Wales resulted in fines of over £1,000 being imposed, six in 1991 and 25 in 1992.

Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 8 July 1994]: There are no known instances during the last 10 years of Ministers in the Home Office issuing written instructions in pursuance of paragraphs 13 or 14 of section 6.1.5 of "Government Accounting".

SCOTLAND

Asbestosis

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the incidence and geographical distribution of deaths in Scotland from asbestosis and related diseases for the last 10 years.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is given in the tables.

Scottish Enterprise and Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many legal actions were initiated by Scottish Enterprise and the Scottish Development Agency which were (a) discontinued and (b) settled out of court for each year in the period 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Stewart: Decisions to initiate, discontinue or settle legal actions are operational matters for Scottish Enterprise and I have asked its chairman to write to the hon. Member. I understand that the Scottish Development Agency did not maintain a record of cases discontinued or settled out of court.

Council Tax

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Government's policy on allowing council tax bands to be used as a basis for charging by third parties.

Mr. Stewart: Information on council tax bands in Scotland is publicly available under the provisions of section 91 of the Local Government Finance Act 1992. Charging methods used by third parties should be appropriate to their circumstances.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State (1) for Scotland how many households in Scotland, by region, receive the 25 per cent. discount on council tax charges;

(2) what percentage of people in Scotland are in each of the council tax bands, nationally and by region.

Mr. Stewart: Council tax banding relates to dwellings and statistics are maintained only on that basis. The table shows the total number and percentage of dwellings by band, and the number of dwellings where there is an entitlement to a single discount, nationally and by region.

Erskine Bridge

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent on the fabric of the Erskine bridge in each year since it opened.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The information is set out in the table. The amounts prior to 1989 relate to the whole Erskine complex including approach roads, Dalnottar interchange, toll booths and administration buildings. Expenditure on the cable stay bridge could be separated only at disproportionate cost.

Year	Maintenance costs

1994-95	[3]5,370,000

[1] Includes £7,341,322 for strengthening superstructure to comply with new design rules for steel box bridges.

[2] Includes £5,100,000 for major but routine waterproofing and resurfacing which are currently requiring traffic management on the bridge.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the projected expenditure on Erskine bridge for each of the next five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In addition to routine maintenance expenditure each year of £100,000 to £150,000, repainting the outside of the steel boxes supporting the carriageways will be required at an estimated cost of £2 million during the next five years. Expenditure on routine and programmed inspections and assessments will be made in line with standard practice for long-span bridges in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the condition of the Erskine and Kingston bridges and the likely disruptive effects of repairs to these bridges over the coming year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Erskine bridge is structurally sound and only works to maintain it in good condition have been identified. These can be carried out without full closure of the bridge but may from time to time require traffic management and lane closures.

Kingston bridge in Glasgow is the responsibility of Strathclyde regional council and information on this structure can be obtained from its director of roads.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that Erskine bridge will not be closed because of repairs this year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Given present knowledge of the bridge and the works planned, there will be no need to close the bridge in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the early findings of the current principal inspection being carried out on Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The consulting engineers carrying out the principal inspection are in general very pleased with the condition of the bridge. The final report has not yet been received. In practical terms, the inspection has confirmed that the original protective coatings to the cable stays should be replaced next year as expected after over 20 years in service.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make the findings of the present inspection being carried out on Erskine bridge publicly available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Routine technical documents are not generally published, but there is no reason why interested parties should not have access to the principal inspection report. The report is expected towards the end of the year.

Water Charges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if it is his policy that the new water companies should base their charges on the amount used;

(2) for how long the new water boards will be able to use rateable values as a basis for charging.

Sir Hector Monro: It will be for the new water and sewerage authorities to prepare charges schemes. These will need to be approved by the Customers Council or, failing that, by the Secretary of State before they come into effect.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what access to (a) the council tax banding of individuals, (b) income tax assessments and (c) DSS records the proposed new water boards will have in levying water charges.

Sir Hector Monro: There is provision in the Local Government, etc. (Scotland) Bill for my right hon. Friend to require local authorities to supply information held on the setting, levying or collection of council tax to the new water and sewerage authorities if he considers this will assist the latter either in making a charges scheme or collecting water and sewerage charges made under such a scheme. The new water and sewerage authorities will have no right of access to income tax assessments and DSS records.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the proposed new water boards will be able to take into account ability to pay in levying charges.

Sir Hector Monro: This will be a matter for the new water and sewerage authorities to consider in preparing their charges schemes.

Medical Staff (Performance-related Pay)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what model of performance-related pay he intends to introduce for consultants, medical academic staff and junior doctors.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The salary levels of hospital doctors are determined by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on the advice of the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body. There are proposals that an element of doctors' salaries be set on the basis of performance but these have yet to be discussed in the appropriate negotiating committees prior to being put to the review body.

It is not intended, should these proposals come into being, that a model of performance-related pay schemes be introduced in Scotland. It would be a matter for determination at local level as to how a national health service employing authority rewards its employees with regard to their performance and contribution to the objective of the provision of high-quality patient care.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 12 July 1994]: The following organisations for which I had responsibility have been privatised since 1990:

Scottish Power;
Scottish Hydro-Electric;
Scottish Bus Group.

I announced on 24 March 1994 that the board of the Common Services Agency is taking forward proposals for privatisation of the building division of the Common Services Agency in Scotland. I will continue to keep under review all activities for which I am responsible and privatisation will be pursued wherever it is apparent that activities presently carried out by Government would be better dealt with by the private sector.

EMPLOYMENT

Cricket Professionals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits have been (a) issued and (b) refused to individuals seeking employment as cricket professionals in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about the number of work permits issued and refused for cricket professionals is not available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what restrictions exist on the appointment of West Indian cricketers as club professionals; what changes to the regulations have occurred recently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: West Indian cricketers are treated in the same way as cricketers who are citizens of other countries outside the European Economic Area. Unless they qualify under the immigration rules to be able to take employment without restriction, they must obtain a work permit before they enter the country. Work permits are issued only for cricketers who have experience of playing first-class cricket in their own country and who it is considered will not take employment away from resident players. The minimum terms and conditions on offer to them must be equivalent to those which apply to resident players. The Department has a consistent policy with regard to the issue of work permits and there have been no recent changes to the regulations.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what cricket tournaments in the West Indies are regarded as first class for the purposes of work permits being issued by his Department.

Mr. Forsyth: The Department follows the regulations of the International Cricket Council on what cricket is regarded as first class.

In the West Indies the following qualify: matches played by teams representing Barbados, Guyana, Jamaica, Trinidad, the Windward Islands and the Leeward Islands either for the Red Stripe Cup or against other opponents adjudged first class; the final of the inter-county tournament in Guyana between Berbice, Demerara and Essequibo is also accepted.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 July 1994]: Ministers in this Department have not issued any directions, as described in paragraphs 13 and 14 of the Treasury memorandum of the responsibilities of the accounting officer, during the last 10 years. A copy of this memorandum is available in the Library.

Earnings

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will provide a table indicating the average gross weekly earnings of (a) women and (b) men in (i) each standard planning region and (ii) each county area in the northern region for each year since 1979 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1979 prices;

(2) if he will provide a table indicating the number and proportion of (a) women and (b) men earning less than 68 per cent. of the national average gross weekly wage in (i) each standard planning region and (ii) each county area in the northern region in each year from 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Information showing the average weekly earnings of men and women in standard regions and counties is published for each year in part E of the "New Earnings Survey". Table 110 and 113 cover full-time males and females respectively.

The information on the retail prices index, all items at April needed to convert 1979 figures to 1993 prices, is published in table 6.4 of the Employment Gazette and in table 26 of the annual supplement to "Economic Trends" for April of earlier years.

Estimated numbers of employees earning less than specified amounts can be prepared only for full-time employees and for standard planning regions. The available information closest to 68 per cent. of average weekly earnings is given in tables which have been placed in the Library.

Copies of the publications can be found in the Library.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the year-on-year change in employment in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) the United States of America and (d) Japan for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is shown in the table:

Trichlorethylene Poisoning

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he will take to investigate deaths by trichlorethylene poisoning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At those premises for which it is the enforcing authority, the Health and Safety Executive investigates all work-related deaths associated with the use of trichlorethylene. During an investigation inspectors are able to call upon medical, scientific and technical expertise in seeking to establish the cause of an incident and the degree of compliance with the relevant health and safety legislation.

Full Employment

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current policy on achieving full employment; and when it last changed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government pursue policies designed to achieve high levels of employment consistent with low inflation. Their policies have not changed, and measures to make the labour market competitive, flexible and efficient continue to be essential.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will exclude from the 16th and subsequent oil and gas licensing rounds those areas which meet the criteria for designation as special areas for conservation under the European Union directive on the conservation of species and habitats;

(2) if he will make it his policy to exclude from the 16th oil and gas licensing round those United Kingdom continental shelf blocks which include, or could affect, special protection areas for birds or Ramsar sites.

Mr. Eggar: In considering whether to offer individual blocks for licensing in the 16th and subsequent rounds I will consult Departments and other relevant bodies, including the Department of the Environment and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, and take into account any environmental or other concerns which they bring to my attention including the requirements of European directives and other international obligations. If necessary, strict conditions will be attached to blocks to ensure that any environmental sensitivities in them are addressed.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if those United Kingdom continental shelf blocks that were withdrawn from the 14th and 15th oil and gas licensing rounds for environmental reasons will also be withheld from the 16th and subsequent licensing rounds.

Mr. Eggar: The circumstances surrounding the non-offer of a block in a particular round may change. We cannot therefore say that a block excluded from the 14th round of offshore licensing will not be offered in a future round. No blocks have been withdrawn from the 15th round for environmental reasons.

AEA Technology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will set out the apportionment for 1994-95 of current costs, current income, historic, contingent and future liability between the faculties services, Government and commercial divisions of AEA Technology;

(2) if he will set out how current costs, historic debt and contingent and future liabilities have been apportioned between the facilities services, Government and commercial divisions of AEA Technology; who advised, and who approved such apportionment; and what external audit approval exists for such apportionment.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's budget for 1994-95 is a management matter for the UKAEA. For internal purposes an apportionment of the UKAEA's balance sheet will be made in due course between AEA Technology and UKAEA Government division. The consolidated UKAEA balance sheet will continue to be audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General who is the UKAEA's external auditor.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the subjects on which consultants have been appointed to advise AEA Technology on all issues related to the divisional separation and sale of its businesses; what are the terms of appointment of such consultants; and whether, in all cases, they were appointed after competitive tender.

Mr. Eggar: These are management matters for the UKAEA.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he proposes to fund pensions and redundancy liabilities consequent upon the sale of parts of AEA Technology Ltd.

Mr. Eggar: No decisions have been taken on the form or timing of the privatisation of the business activities of AEA Technology. Arrangements for dealing with pensions matters and any redundancy liabilities which might arise will be determined in the light of those decisions.

Company Investigators (Reports)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the reports of investigators under the Companies Acts which have been completed but not published, indicating in each case the names of the inspectors, the company investigated, the section of the Act under which has been taken, the costs of the inquiry and the date of commencement of the inquiry.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The table covers all Companies Act inspections where the inspection has been announced and the report completed but not yet published.

National Environment Technology Centre

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the costs of providing (a) a visitors' dining suite, (b) the refurbishment of toilets, (c) the refurbishment of the entrance foyer and (d) the car park extension at the national environment technology centre prior to its opening on 10 June.

Mr. Eggar: These are matters for the UKAEA.

Competition White Paper

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in implementing each of the proposals in "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win".

Mr. Sainsbury: Progress on implementing the proposals in "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win", will be carefully monitored by the ministerial group on competitiveness.

Children's Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 748, what aspects of the Children Act 1989 and the Registered Homes Act 1984 the inter-departmental scrutiny team is looking at other than fire safety; and what recommendations the team has made.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As I made clear in my earlier response on 1 July 1994, Official Report, column 748, the report of the inter-departmental review makes a number of recommendations regarding fire safety legislation and enforcement which may affect the operation of the legislation mentioned or premises covered by them. The report, copies of which are in the Library of the House, does not deal with any issues other than fire safety and is now the subject of consultation.

Questions about other aspects of the legislation and its enforcement should therefore be addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Deregulation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the terms and conditions of those appointed to the deregulation task force.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 6 July 1994, Official Report, column 224, which set out the terms of reference of the deregulation task force. Members of the task force have been appointed for an initial period of two years. Individuals will not receive payment for their work as members of the deregulation task force.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will be the remuneration for members of the deregulation task force.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden), on 25 May 1994, Official Report, column 174.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 July 1994]: From records currently available, there have been no such occasions.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

East Timor

20. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiative he is proposing to assist the inhabitants of East Timor, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The best assistance we can render the East Timorese people is to continue to support the current dialogue between the Indonesians and the Portuguese, under the auspices of the United Nations Secretary-General, the aim of which is to seek a solution on East Timor acceptable to all concerned.

Cyprus

23. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Secretary-General of the United Nations regarding recent developments in respect of the confidence-building measures for the Cypriot communities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the United Nations Secretary-General in New York on 21 June and discussed the prospects for agreement on the confidence-building measures for Cyprus. He reaffirmed our continuing support for the Secretary-General's efforts to make progress on these measures and on an overall settlement.

35. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to mark the 20th anniversary of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are no plans to mark the 20th anniversary of the Turkish intervention in Cyprus in 1974.

27. Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the possibility of the accession of Cyprus to the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Corfu Council confirmed that the next phase of enlargement will involve Cyprus. The Council will review progress in the inter-communal process, and Cyprus's readiness for accession, in January 1995.

European Commission

24. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest situation over the position of the presidency of the European Union Commission.

36. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's position concerning candidates for President of the European Commission.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The German presidency is consulting other member states to find a candidate for the next president of the Commission who meets with the common accord of all 12 member states. We are playing a full part in those consultations.

European Union (Enlargement)

25. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the benefits to the United Kingdom of the accession of four new member states expected on 1 January 1995.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The accession of these states will fulfil in part the Government's vision of an EU more widely representative of the peoples of Europe. Their membership will consolidate the benefits to United Kingdom business and consumers already flowing from the European Economic Area. Three of the four will be net contributors to the Community budget, and all are likely to share the United Kingdom's concern for budget discipline. Their accession will add extra weight to the group of member states which favour free trade over protectionism, and subsidiarity over centralism.

28. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current situation regarding the enlargement of the European Union.

30. Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current situation regarding the enlargement of the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A treaty of accession to the EU was signed with Norway, Austria, Sweden and Finland at the Corfu European Council on 24 June. Provided that referendums in the Nordic countries are positive—the Austrian people have already voted in favour of membership—all four will accede to the Community on 1 January 1995. The Corfu European Council conclusions included the statement that the next phase of enlargement will involve Malta and Cyprus. The Commission has been asked to prepare opinions on recent Polish and Hungarian applications for EU membership.

Rwanda

26. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of French troops on the situation in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As I said today, we have supported the French initiative to send a humanitarian mission.

EU Intergovernmental Conference

29. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's preparations for the 1996 intergovernmental conference of the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We will participate in the study group which will convene in mid-1995 to prepare for the conference.

Iraq

31. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effect of sanctions on Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sanctions are imposed on Iraq in order to ensure that the regime meets its international obligations. Iraqi co-operation with United Nations weapons inspectors resulted from sustained international pressure including the determined application of sanctions.

We are concerned by reports of suffering among the civilian population. For that reason food and medicines are exempt from sanctions and we have contributed over £66 million to international relief efforts since April 1991.

We call on the Iraqi regime to make the purchase of humanitarian supplies a priority, to lift the internal embargo on northern Iraq and accept United Nations offers to allow a limited sale of oil in return for further aid.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received about the continued detention of Kuwaiti prisioners in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I met a delegation from the Kuwaiti National Assembly on 29 June to discuss this issue. We raise the plight of Kuwaiti and other missing persons at the United Nations at every possible opportunity, for example when the Security Council last reviewed sanctions against Iraq on 17 May. Our acting head of mission at the United Nations told the Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister in New York on 12 July that British Ministers remained seriously concerned about the detainees and expected Iraq to produce information on all the outstanding files. The International Committee of the Red Cross chaired a meeting of the tripartite commission —coalition countries, Iraq and the ICRC—in Geneva on 1 July at which the Iraqi delegation gave its initial response to 71 out of the 609 inquiry files passed to Iraq by the ICRC over 18 months ago. We are demanding that Iraq offer information on the other files very soon. A further tripartite commission will be held in two months' time to review progress.

Middle East

32. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's support for the Washington accord on resolving the Palestinian-Israeli conflict.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We announced last week an extra £5 million of assistance for the new Palestinian Administration, £3 million for immediate running cost needs and £2 million for bilateral technical assistance. Much of these funds will be for the Palestinian police force. All this is in addition to the £70 million we have already pledged in aid to the Palestinians over the next three years, through bilateral and multilateral channels.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Ministers who have visited (a) Bahrain, (b) Egypt, (c) Iran, (d) Iraq, (e) Israel, (f) Jordan, (g) Kuwait, (h) Lebanon, (i) Oman, (j) Qatar, (k) Saudi Arabi, (l) Syria, (m) the United Arab Emirates and (n) the Yemen since 1979, together with the purpose of each visit; and which Ministers they met.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No central record is kept in the FCO of overseas travel by Ministers from other Government Departments.

Since June 1983 Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers have made the following visits to these countries:

Information about visits prior to June 1983 and information about Ministers met during the the visits could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

38. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current progress in the middle east peace process.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I welcome Mr. Arafat's return to Gaza and Jericho which symbolises progress in the peace process. We will continue to provide assistance to his new administration. We welcome recent progress on the Jordanian track of the peace process and hope for progress on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks.

Unemployment

34. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures to reduce unemployment were decided by the European Council at Corfu.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The European Council discussed the follow-up to the action plan to reduce unemployment which was agreed at Brussels. They endorsed the Commission's decision to set up a group of independent experts to examine the burden of Community and national legislation on business. They agreed a list of 11 priority trans-European network transport projects. They also received a report from the Bangemann group with recommendations for action to exploit opportunities in the field of information technology and agreed to follow up the issues raised in the report.

Germany

37. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet his German counterpart to discuss Anglo-German relations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: When Dr. Kinkel and my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary meet regularly, as they do on both bilateral and multilateral occasions, they review our bilateral co-operation. I met my German counterpart for talks yesterday and my right hon. Friend will be meeting Dr. Kinkel at the special European Council on 15 July.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in the trial of four British passport holders being tried for subversive activities in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A magistrate has decided that there is a case to answer and the men are scheduled to appear before a jury in the High Court in September. They enjoy regular consular visits from the British high commission and are in good health.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports are sent to the European Union about the operation of the Economic Community of West African States monitoring group initiative in Liberia; to what are the reports mainly directed; and if they are publicly available.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations Secretary-General's progress reports on the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia, UNOMIL, include reference to the ECOWAS monitoring and observing group, ECOMOG, and provide comprehensive accounts of political, military and humanitarian developments. These reports are available to all member states, including the European Union and are also available publicly in London from the United Nations information centre. A copy of the fifth progress report has been placed in both Libraries of the House.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if proposals exist for a European Union mission in Liberia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Nigerian Government about its failure to obey a Federal High Court order to produce Chief Abiola in court on 30 June.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Chief Abiola was finally arraigned in court in Abuja on 6 July. Together with our EU partners, we have made clear to the Nigerian Government the importance we attach to the rule of law, and respect for human rights. Putting Chief Abiola on trial cannot resolve Nigeria's political problems.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 640, whether he will describe, in each case, the specific inconsistency which obliged the United Kingdom Government to enter a derogation from the first sentence of paragraph 2.4, the second sentence of paragraph 3.1, and from the whole of paragraph 3.3 of Council of Europe recommendation R(85)20; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The reservation on the first sentence of paragraph 2.4 was made because the Government did not believe that individual notification of data subjects at the time of collection should always be required.

The reservation on the second sentence of paragraph 3.1 was made because United Kingdom law does not require an individual's consent to be obtained before data about him are disclosed.

The reservation on paragraph 3.3 was made because in the Government's view it is impracticable for controllers of marketing files to know to whom their lists have been provided by the original recipients of the lists.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 640, whether he will in each case describe the specific inconsistency which obliged the United Kingdom Government to enter a derogation from principles 6.2 and 6.3 paragraph 2 of Council of Europe recommendation R(91)10; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The reservations on principle 6.2 and principle 6.3, paragraph 2, were made because these provisions go beyond what is required by United Kingdom data protection legislation.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16

June, Official Report, column 640, whether he will in each case describe the specific inconsistency which obliged the United Kingdom Government to enter a derogation from principles 2.2 and 2.4 of Council of Europe recommendation R(87)15; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The reservation on principle 2.2 was made because in the Government's view it would be undesirable to provide the information in question in some circumstances.

The reservation on principle 2.4 was made because in the Government's view this principle could seriously inhibit the police in preventing and detecting crime.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 640, whether he will, in each case describe the specific inconsistency which obliged the United Kingdom Government to enter a derogation from the second sub-paragraph of 1.2, the second sentence of paragraph 3.3, and from paragraph 5 of Council of Europe recommendation R(86)1; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The reservation on the second sub-paragraph of paragraph 1.2 was made to ensure that the recommendation did not apply to occupational pensions schemes in the United Kingdom.

The reservation on the second sentence of paragraph 3.3 was made because United Kingdom law does not require consent before personal data may be obtained from third parties.

The reservation on paragraph 5 was made because the United Kingdom does not have legislation governing the use of the national insurance number.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 640, whether he will describe the specific inconsistency which obliged the United Kingdom Government to enter a derogation from extending the Council of Europe recommendation R(83)10 to manually processed data; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The reservation was made because United Kingdom data protection law does not apply to manually processed data.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 640, whether he will in each case describe the specific inconsistency which obliged the United Kingdom Government to enter a derogation from paragraphs 3.3, 3.4, 5.1c, and 7.1 of Council of Europe recommendations R(90)19; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The reservations on paragraphs 3.3 and 5.1.c were made because these paragraphs depend upon the individual's consent which is not required under United Kingdom law.

The reservation of paragraph 3.4 was made because in the Government's view the paragraph is unnecessarily restrictive on businesses which use non-cash means of payment.

The reservation on paragraph 7.1 was made because the paragraph could require the data subject to be given access to security information.

Hong Kong

33. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of recent discussions on the future of Hong Kong.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proegress of recent discussions on the future of Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: The 29th plenary session of the Sino-British joint liaison group was held in Hong Kong in June. Full agreement was reached, after seven years of negotiations, on the future of the military estate in Hong Kong. Agreement was also reached, among other things, on the continued application to Hong Kong of nine multilateral treaties on merchant shipping, the text of two new bilateral treaties on extradition and investment and the localisation of three more items of United Kingdom legislation.

Poland

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of Poland's borders.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We fully respect Poland's sovereignty, territorial integrity and the involability of her borders, in accordance with United Nations and Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe principles.

GATT Headquarters

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support the retention of the headquarters of GATT, now to become the World Trade Organisation, at Geneva; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Swiss and German Governments have put forward generous and attractive offers of sites for the headquarters of the World Trade Organisation in Geneva and Bonn respectively. The British Government could support a consensus in favour of either place; but we see some advantage in the WTO remaining in Geneva to avoid the disruption of a move.

Gas-related Deaths (Spain)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make joint representations with the Irish Foreign Secretary to the Spanish authorities about further gas-related deaths of British and Irish citizens in Spain.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. There is no evidence that the recent deaths in the Canary Islands from carbon monoxide poisoning were connected. Nor is there any evidence that a criminal offence was committed in connection with the death of the British national. If they wish the family can make a claim for compensation through the civil courts.

Macedonia

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the EC's policy on trade with the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Trade is a key way of promoting prosperity and stability. We hope to see the early lifting of Greek trade restrictions with the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the resolution of their bilateral dispute.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sri Lankan Tamils

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Sri Lankan Tamils currently in the United Kingdom have not yet been notified of their status; and if he will break down the figures for those arriving before and after the passing of the Immigration Appeals Act 1993;

(2) how many Sri Lankan Tamils who have fled Sri Lanka have been held in detention centres (a) since the passing of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1993 and (b) since 1990 and before the passing of that Act.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on Sri Lankan Tamils are not separately indentifiable in the statistics. Considering all Sri Lankan nationals as at 30 June 1994, an estimated 2,680 are awaiting an initial decision on their application for asylum. Of this, an estimated 860 applied for asylum after the introduction of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993.

The number of asylum seekers from Sri Lanka being detained on 11 July 1994 is 22. Of these detainees, none entered detention before the implementation of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 on 26 July 1993.

Money Laundering

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra resources he proposes to allocate to the National Criminal Intelligence Service to pursue cases of suspected money laundering.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Funding of the National Criminal Intelligence Service is settled as part of the annual public expenditure survey. It is for the director general of NCIS to decide how best to allocate the resources available to him to deal with the range of criminal intelligence matters which fall to the organisation.

Racial Attacks

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support is currently provided for victims of racially motivated attacks and their families.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Victims of racially motivated crime are given help and advice, as are other victims of crime, through the network of local victim support schemes.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide figures of the number of incidents recorded by the police as being racial or racially motivated for each year since 1974.

Mr. Maclean: The available information relates to reported racial incidents as defined by the Association of Chief Police Officers. Figures from 1985 are given in the table. Information prior to 1985 is not available.

Number of racial incidents reported in England and Wales

Year	Number of incidents
1985	5,900
1986	6,566
1987	5,305
1988	4,383
1989	5,044
1990	6,359
1991	7,882
1992	7,734
[1]1993-94	9,762

[1] This information is now collected on a financial year basis.

ACPO definition: Any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigative officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motive, or any incidents which include allegations of racial motivation made by any person.

Zoos and Circuses

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the legislation governing the welfare of circus animals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave on 29 April 1994 to a question from the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile), at column 341.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the legislation governing the welfare of zoo animals.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The Zoo Licensing Act 1981 requires that all zoos in Great Britain are licensed and regularly inspected. Under the terms of the Act, the Secretary of State has issued standards covering care and accommodation of animals, and public safety in zoos, and maintains a list of authorised inspectors. Zoo licensing and inspection under the Act is carried out by local authorities.

Police Review

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the review of police core and ancillary tasks is confined to England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office review of police core and ancillary tasks applies to England and Wales only. I understand that separate consideration is being given to such issues in Northern Ireland and Scotland.

Firearms

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the current charge for a firearms certificate is derived.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The current fees for firearm certificates introduced in 1990 are based on the previous level of fees set in 1986, which were intended to achieve the recovery of police costs in administering the firearms licensing system, uprated to take account of increases in police pay since that time.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will lay before Parliament the fifth report of the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Mr. Howard: I have placed a copy of the annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee in the Library of the House today.

Asylum

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications for political asylum have been received in each year since 1979 to date; of these, how many have been approved; and how many individuals, including dependants, have been granted leave to remain in the United Kingdom;

(2) how many applications for asylum have been rejected in each year since 1979; of these applicants, how many have been deported, and of how many the Home Office has confirmation on their departure, in respect of each year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information covering the years 1979-1993, for applications for asylum and on decisions made, is given in table A.

Information on asylum seekers removed in 1992 and 1993 under the Immigration Act 1971 is given in table B. These are all confirmed departures. Corresponding information for years prior to 1992 is not available.

Private Prisons

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration was given by his Department, prior to the award of the contract to manage Doncaster prison, to the conclusions of the United States Congressional Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs report, "Alyeska Pipeline Service Company Covert Operation", published in July 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 13 July 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from B. Landers to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about what consideration was given by his Department, before the award of the contract to manage Doncaster prison, to the conclusions of the US Congressional Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs report on the Alyeska Pipeline Service Company Covert Operation, published in July 1992.

The two reports, whose conclusions conflicted, concerned Wackenhut Corporation, against whom no charges were laid. The contract for Doncaster prison was signed with Premier Prison Services Ltd which is a 50/50 joint venture wholly owned by Serco Ltd and Wackenhut Corrections Corporation. Wackenhut Corrections Corporation, a subsidiary of Wackenhut Corporation, was not involved in the matter that was investigated by the US Congressional Committee.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many managerial staff working at (a) Blakenhurst prison and (b) Doncaster prison are from the United States of America.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 13 July 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Philippa Drew to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about how many managerial staff working at (a) Blakenhurst Prison and (b) Doncaster Prison are from the United States of America.

Neither of these prisons has any managerial staff from the United States of America.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people employed by the Prison Service or seconded to the prisons inspectorate have worked simultaneously or subsequently for private sector companies who (a) operate and (b) have tendered to operate prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 13 July 1994]: No one employed by the Prison Service or seconded to the prisons inspectorate has worked simultaneously for a private sector company operating or tendering to operate prisons. Thirty-three former Prison Service employees subsequently worked for such companies. Of these, three were former governors who had been seconded to the inspectorate.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the Prison Service agency's policy in respect of the recognition of trade unions by operators of contracted-out prisons;

(2) what account he takes of trade union recognition in the tender evaluation process conducted by his Department when awarding the contracts to manage (a) the Wolds prison, (b) Blakenhurst prison and (c) Doncaster prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answers 13 July 1994]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from B. Landers to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your two recent Questions about trade union recognition at contracted out prisons.

Whether or not a trade union is recognised at a contracted out prison is a matter for the contractor. In evaluating tenderers, the evaluation panel looks for evidence that a tenderer is a good employer with employment policies and conditions of service that are likely to recruit and retain staff of a suitable calibre to carry out the task. The evaluation includes consideration of the tenderer's industrial relations policy including how staff are consulted and what grievance procedures are in place.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff will be employed by Premier Prison Services Ltd., at Doncaster prison; at what grades; and at what rates of pay.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 13 July 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Philippa Drew to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of staff employed by Premier Prison Services Ltd. at Doncaster Prison; the grades; and the rates of pay.

Premier Prison Services Ltd. expects to employ 365 staff. Of these about 219 will be prisoner custody officers (PCO). The operational grades are PCO, Unit Manager, Operations Manager, two of the Assistant Directors, and the Director, all of whom have to be certificated as PCO, as they have custodial contact with prisoners. There are also a number of administrative grades.

The rates of pay are a matter for the company.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Land Registry

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether, following its establishment as a next steps executive agency in 1990, the triennial evaluation of performance has been carried out for Her Majesty's Land Registry; and, if so, what conclusions were drawn.

Mr. John M. Taylor: An evaluation of the performance of Her Majesty's Land Registry during its first three years as an executive agency was carried out by the Lord Chancellor's Department and a report was completed in January 1994.

The report concluded that the Registry had benefited considerably from its move to agency status which had been a major enabling factor in promoting sound public sector management in the Registry. By the achievement of progressively improving performance targets and the early completion of its computerisation programme, the Registry had made a major contribution to the simplification on conveyancing in England and Wales, particularly through the development of faster and easier access to the public land register.

The general summary and conclusions of the report will be reproduced in the Registry's annual report and accounts for 1993-94 due to be published shortly.

Divorce

Mr. Bates: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to implement the recommendations in the Law Commission's report, "Effect of Divorce on Wills" Law Com. No. 217.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government have decided to accept the Commission's recommendations in its report on this topic and will introduce legislation to implement them when a suitable legislative opportunity occurs.

HEALTH

Children

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent in the last available year in each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country on children's health.

Mr. Sackville: Comparable figures are not available. There is no internationally accepted definition of health spending on specific health services.

NHS Supplies Authority

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has produced or has commissioned any assessment of the relative cost savings likely to accrue to service providers if the NHS Supplies Authority's warehousing and distribution Information Technology and purchasing functions were (a) separately market tested or (b) run by the private sector as an integrated body under principles of integrated supply chain management; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Our current assessment is that in present circumstances the National Health Service Supplies Authority seems best placed to deliver the necessary planned improvements in the national infrastructure of NHS procurement services over the next few years without loss of momentum on service levels and performance standards, and where appropriate with use of market testing or other collaboration with private sector partners. The authority plans to market test its logistics services in the context of a strategy planned to save at least £5 to £10 million a year, when fully implemented, for a more efficient and flexible service. In developing its information technology strategy it will continue to make use of market testing wherever this can add value and/or choice. In 1992-93 the value of its contracted-out computer services and equipment was £2·7 million. It achieved purchasing savings of over £71 million in 1993-94 on behalf of NHS customers, but all NHS trusts remain free on a value for money basis to make their own direct procurement arrangements or to market test all or part of such services as alternatives to using NHS Supplies as their contracted purchasing agent.

Patients Charter

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of in-patients in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust in January and March had a named qualified nurse or midwife who was responsible for their care;

(2) what proportion of patients attending out-patient clinics in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust between January and March were given (i) a specific appointment time and (ii) a named qualified nurse, midwife or health visitor who was responsible for their care.

Mr. Sackville: This available information on patients charter standards was published in the 1993-94 hospital and ambulance services comparative performance guide, copies of which are available in the Library.

Benzene

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research has been conducted into the effects on the environment and health of the increase in use of benzene in motor fuel; and if she will make a statement.

(2) what evidence she has as to any link between benzene and causes of leukaemia; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what evaluation she has made of the genotoxic nature of benzene in the atmosphere; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Benzene is classified by the International Agency for Research on Cancer as a human carcinogen. The Department of Health's Committee on Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has advised that benzene is a genotoxic carcinogen. In certain occupational groups, prolonged exposure to levels of benzene many times greater than those present in ambient air has been associated with an increased risk of leukaemia. This evidence was considered carefully by the Department of the Environment's expert panel on air quality standards when they recommended an air quality standard for benzene of five parts per billion, rolling annual average concentration and a further target standard of one part per billion.

Research and Training

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS patients declined to take part in (a) medical research and (b) medical student training in January to March.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Medical Records

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many complaints were received by NHS patients between January and March about (a) their own access to their medical records and (b) their medical records being divulged to a third party;

(2) how many NHS patients asked to see their medical records between January and March.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. Patients have a legal right to see their own medical records. For records held on computer, access is provided for by the Data Protection Act 1984. For records kept on paper, access is under the Access to Health Records Act 1990, which came into force on 1 November 1991 and applies to records compiled on or after that date. Access under both Acts is subject to safeguards.

Ambulance Staff

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of ambulance staff are trained paramedics in each ambulance service in England.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the unconfirmed results of an informal survey of numbers of paramedics and other front-line staff in each ambulance service in England at the end of 1993.

Day Surgery

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she will be taking to ensure that British companies benefit from the expected growth in techniques of minimally invasive surgery and day case by the turn of the century.

Mr. Sackville: National health service purchasing policy for purchase of innovative equipment of this kind is based on securing best value for money for the NHS and on encouraging through competition on equal terms all its suppliers to become more competitive on price, quality and service in both United Kingdom and world markets. Further measures to stimulate innovation are set out in the White Paper, "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win".

Cycling

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with his colleagues at the Departments of Transport, Education and the Environment about encouraging children to bicycle to school, in order to reduce pollution and congestion, whilst encouraging health.

Mr. Sackville: These Departments are represented on multi-agency working groups established under "The Health of the Nation" initiative through which we are encouraging children to take up cycling, provided that they take appropriate safety precautions.

Hospital Births

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of babies were delivered in hospital in each health authority area in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

Locum Doctors

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total amounts of money spent in the national health service for the most recent year in which records are available on locum hospital doctors engaged (a) through private locum agencies and (b) through NHS locum agencies; and if she will list the above amounts in each category by region.

Dr. Mawhinney: Data held centrally are not broken down into these two categories.

Cancelled Operations

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what number and proportion of patients in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust had an NHS operation cancelled between January and March.

Mr. Sackville: The available information on the number of patients who had their operations cancelled twice at the last minute and who were then not treated within a month was published in the 1993-94 hospital and ambulance services comparative performance guide, copies of which are available in the Library.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of patients attending accident and emergency departments in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust between January and March had treatment which began with in (i) five minutes, (ii) 15 minutes, (iii) 30 minutes and (iv) one hour.

Mr. Sackville: Information on when treatment begins for patients attending an accident and emergency department is not available centrally. In England 88 per cent. of patients attending accident and emergency departments were seen and assessed within five minutes of arrival. Figures for trusts and hospitals were published in the 1993-94 hospital and ambulance services comparative performance guide, copies of which are available in the Library.

Hartley Hospital Colne

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the selling price of Hartley hospital, Colne.

Mr. Sackville: Details of individual land and property sales are commercially sensitive and confidential. It is for the regional health authority managing the transaction to determine, with their professional advisers, if the sale price can be released after completion.

Commissioning Agencies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that commissioning agencies involve their public health physicians in the commissioning process, both as adviser on the health priorities for their populations and as co-ordinators of medical advice from provider unit clinicians.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health authorities need a range of professional and other advice if they are to discharge their purchasing role effectively. The national health service executive has discussed with representatives of the medical professions how health authorities might secure sound medical advice. As a result of these discussions EL(93)60, entitled "Medical advice to purchasers", was issued on 2 July 1993. In addition, a task force including representatives from the professions has been established to examine clinical involvement in contracting from both commissioning and provider unit perspectives. Copies of EL(93)60 are available in the Library.

Mental Health Act Commission

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish her response to the Mental Health Act Commission's fifth biennial report.

Mr. Bowis: The Department of Health response to the Commission's fifth biennial report has been placed in the Library today.

Psychiatric Services

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the reports of the working groups on high security psychiatric services and on psychopathic disorder.

Mr. Bowis: The reports of both working groups, which were chaired by Dr. John Reed of the Department, are being published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The working group on high security and related psychiatric provision was established to consider the most effective provision of services for patients requiring psychiatric treatment in conditions of high security in England and Wales, and the relationship between such service and the secure and related services provided within national health service regions and the Prison Service, in the light of earlier reports including those of the review of services for mentally disordered offenders and in response to the report of the committee of inquiry into complaints at Ashworth hospital. The report provides a clear analysis of the pressures and chllenges facing the services and their relationship with the wider NHS. It makes a number of recommendations on the objectives of high-security care, standards of services and the development of stronger links with related agencies which we fully endorse. It rightly emphasises the overriding importance in any future development of maintaining public confidence and public safety.

The report also recommends radical changes in the present funding and management arrangements for high security psychiatric services. These proposals require very careful consideration in relation to our objectives for high security care and the important responsibilities which my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary bears in this field. I have instructed my officials to examine these matters further with the Special Hospitals Service Authority and Home Office and to report back to me within six months. I will announce my conclusions when I have considered their advice.

We are also publishing today, for consultation, the report of a separate working group on services for people with psychopathic disorder. The report puts forward a number of ideas relating to the law and service provision in this area, on which we are inviting comments by 31 October.

Dental Amalgam

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made by her Department of the long-term safety of dental amalgam; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Committee on Toxicity advised in 1986 that the use of dental amalgam is free from the risk of systemic toxicity and that only a few cases of hypersensitivity occur. The subsequent research findings, and recent evaluations by several authoritative national and international expert committees are consistent with that advice. The Department of Health will continue to assess and evaluate all research in this area.

Dental Health

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements she intends to make to inform the dental profession of the publication of the Government's response to the Bloomfield report; what her policy is in respect of a comprehensive dental health service within the NHS; and when she intends to produce an oral health strategy for England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am publishing today a consultative document called "Improving NHS Dentistry." Copies of the document itself and a summary have been placed in the Library and are available in the Vote Office. They are a response to the report of Sir Kenneth Bloomfield, published in January 1993, and to that of the Health Select Committee.

The Government's purpose in putting forward these proposals for consultation is twofold. First, we wish to strengthen and improve national health service dentistry, maintaining a high-quality service available and accessible to all and one which responds to the modern needs of patients. Secondly, we wish to build on the excellent improvements to oral health of recent years and, in particular, to improve further children's oral health and address regional variations. We are also publishing today proposals for an oral health strategy for England. Copies have been placed in the Library and are also available in the Vote Office.

The Government are determined that all patients will continue to have access to an NHS dentist; under the proposals, this would be the case. The Government propose to develop and strengthen the community dental service to ensure that there is an effective safety net where necessary. NHS treatment would continue to be available free or at reduced cost to those currently exempt or remitted from charges and all children would continue to receive free NHS treatment. The Government will also consult on improvements to the system of charging to encourage examination and routine treatment along the lines proposed by the Health Select Committee. One possibility is a reduced examination charge.

The proposals would provide a more flexible system better able to match dental treatment to the varying needs of patients. There would be incentives to encourage a greater emphasis on the quality of care and prevention rather than the number of patients treated. The system for paying dentists would be simpler to operate and provide better overall financial control for the taxpayer. The Government also believe it would be fairer to dentists.

The Government believe that, in the longer term, there is a case for moving towards a system in which local family health services authorities, or health commissions, are responsible for purchasing dental services for their area, taking full account of local need and the state of oral health. This would represent a significant change. The Government therefore believe it would require careful piloting and evaluation before any change were made. The Government propose to invite FHSAs to volunteer to participate in pilots.

The Government also believe that the current system of remuneration for dentists should be improved. It is consulting on two options. One is for a sessional fee model which would link payment to dentists to the time spent treating NHS patients rather than the number and type of treatments carried out. An alternative approach would be a modified fee-per-item system. In both these options the emphasis would be on linking payment to the quality of care and prevention.

These proposals follow the dental profession's request for a fundamental review of the dental remuneration system which is largely unchanged since the foundation of the NHS. We have consulted widely with the profession and taken full account of Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's report. We have also taken on board a number of the recommendations from the Health Select Committee. The Government note that, while there is consensus on the need for change, there is no consensus on the best way forward. The options set out for further consultation offer the opportunity of a simpler, more flexible system which responds to the needs of patients and reflects the great improvements in oral health of recent years and the changing nature of dentistry. The Government now seek the views of dentists and their patients on the best way forward.

Supra-regional Services

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make available a summary of the funding and levels of activity agreed for 1994-95 with centres designated to provide supra-regional services.

Mr. Sackville: A summary of this information has been placed in the Library as an addendum to the document "Supra-regional services 1994-95: announcement by the Secretary of State for Health".

Carers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will give the latest figures for the number of carers in (a) Coventry, (b) the west midlands and (c) nationally.

Mr. Bowis: The general household survey findings indicate that 15 per cent. of adults living in private households—approximately 6·8 million people—were carers in Great Britain in 1990. Estimates are not available for the number of carers in Coventry, or in the west midlands.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sports Ground Safety

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate he has made of the cost of necessary ground safety work in (a) Rugby League, (b) Rugby Union, (c) cricket and (d) non-league football.

Mr. Sproat: None. I have, however, received estimates of the likely costs of implementing ground safety work from the Rugby Football League and the GM Vauxhall Conference.

Royal Parks (Cycle Routes)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to introduce more cycle routes in the royal parks.

Mr. Sproat: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency, under its chief executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Welch to Mrs Barbara Roche, dated 8 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your Question about providing more cycle routes in the Royal Parks.

We currently have a cycle lane that runs around three sides of Hyde Park and joins Knightsbridge by the Albert Memorial. Apart from being able to use the Park roads, in Richmond Park cyclists may also use roads that are closed to other vehicular traffic.

We shall be issuing a paper on cycling in the Royal Parks to interested parties for discussion later this month. This will propose a range of measures to improve arrangements for cyclists in the Royal Parks. Amongst other things, it will propose the following additional cycle lanes:

In Hyde Park, north/south from Albion Gate, roughly following the route of the horseride, then across the Serpentine Bridge and alongside West Carriage Drive to join the current cycle lane opposite Coalbrookdale Gates;

In Green Park/St. James's Park, from Hyde Park Corner, parallel to Constitution Hill, behind Canada Gates and alongside the Mall;

In Regent's Park, one way advisory cycle lanes from Macclesfield Bridge, either side of the Outer Circle and Park Square, to Marylebone Road;

In Richmond Park, a purpose-built off-road track to allow cyclists to travel around the perimeter of the park.

We propose that all cycle lanes in the parks will be specially marked in a different colour to pedestrian paths and will improve safety provision for cyclists at those points where they cross roads carrying vehicular traffic.

Entertainment Agencies

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultation has been held between his Department and the Department of Employment on the effects of clause 25 and schedule 9, of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill on the licensing of entertainment agencies.

Mr. Sproat: The Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry and for Employment are in the lead on this matter. But my officials have kept in touch with their opposite numbers in these Departments and have ensured that they are aware of representations made to me.

Grace and Favour Accommodation

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much has been spent and remains to be spent on restoring, refurbishing and decorating (a) the grace and favour accommodation occupied by Mr. Peat at Kensington palace and (b) that to be occupied by his assistant; how much has been spent on furnishing each; and what accommodation is in each residence.

Mr. Sproat: Fitting out apartments at Kensington palace for the director and deputy director of property services is estimated to cost £120,000 each excluding VAT and fees. This cost includes the provision of kitchen and bathroom fittings, flooring, doors, lighting, cupboards, tiling and decoration.

The director of finance and property services is a head of department and furnished accommodation is provided. The maximum budget provision for the furniture and furnishings is £98,000 excluding VAT. No furniture or furnishings will be provided for the apartment to be occupied by the deputy director of property services.

A substantial amount of essential structural, fire protection and other repair work estimated to cost £450,000 excluding VAT and fees has also being carried out in this area of the palace to prevent further deterioration of the fabric and to meet Bailey inquiry recommendations. Most of this work would have been necessary whether the area was to provide residential accommodation or not. It was occupied by Princess Alice, Countess of Athlone without major refurbishment from 1923 to 1981 and has remained unoccupied and uninhabitable since then.

Structural and fitting-out costs reflect the special requirements of historic buildings, as advised by English Heritage. Reductions in salaries take account of the value of the accommodation.

One apartment will have five bedrooms, four bathrooms, a sitting room, dining room, study, kitchen and utility room, basement room and two separate lavatories. The other will have four bedrooms, two bathrooms, a sitting room, dining room, study, kitchen and utility room, basement room, shower room and a separate lavatory.

Channel 5 Television

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to announce the results of his consideration of the results of the recent consultation about the future of Channel 5 national television channel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government have considered whether it would be possible both to proceed with an analogue Channel 5 service and to provide sufficient frequencies for digital terrestrial television services. I am writing today to the chairman of the Independent Television Commission to tell him of the Government's decisions.

The Radiocommunications Agency has examined a range of options, and has been helped by receiving technical proposals from a number of organisations, including the Independent Television Commission, National Transcommunications Ltd. and the BBC.

As a result, the Government have concluded that they should amend the current assignment of frequencies to the Independent Television Commission, for the provision of Channel 5. Frequency channel 37, and a number of other frequencies will now form the basis of an analogue Channel 5 service giving coverage of about 60 per cent. of the population. It would be open to a successful applicant for the licence to simulcast the service digitally to at least 80 per cent. and possibly over 90 per cent. of the population, when the Commission has new powers to license digital terrestrial television services.

In addition to the analogue Channel 5, as many as 12 digital terrestrial television services could be provided: up to four would be broadcast as a single frequency network, using frequency channel 35, with coverage of more than 95 per cent. of the population; an interleaved network of up to four more services could have 90 to 95 per cent. coverage, and there could be up to four more interleaved services with 80 per cent. coverage. Regional variations would be possible on the interleaved services, but not for the single frequency network.

Digital terrestrial television would provide new and enhanced services for audiences, as well as opportunities for programme-makers, broadcasters, advertisements and the manufacturers of transmitting and receiving equipment. The frequency allocations for both Channel 5 and the digital television services will need international clearance with neighbouring countries. Technical standards for digital television in Europe are already under consideration.

No decisions have been made about the allocation of the frequencies for digital terrestrial television to either the BBC or the Independent Television Commission, but the Government's plans allow both for the introduction of new services and for the four existing analogue services to be simulcast digitally for some years. This will encourage people to buy new digital receiving equipment. If sufficient numbers of people move over to digital equipment, it may be possible, after a transitional period of perhaps 15 years, for television signals to be transmitted in digital format only. This would allow the spectrum currently used for analogue transmission to be put to other uses. If used for mobile communications, this spectrum could support an annual level of economic activity equivalent to £5 billion in today's money.

The Government believe that this plan will create greater choice and diversity for viewers by combining the advantages of an increased number of television services, initially through Channel 5, with opportunities for new and enhanced services using digital transmission.

Sports Council

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the future structure of the Sports Council.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The Government announced their proposals for the future of the Sports Council on 8 July.

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and it value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 8 July 1994]: Following the establishing of my Department in April 1992 no such direction has been given.

Running Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will provide a table showing the running costs of his Department in each region for each year since 1992.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The information requested is as follows: all costs relate to the London region.

Department for National Heritage (including the Historic Royal Palaces Agency and Royal Parks Agency)

£ millions

1992-93 outturn	1993-94 estimated outturn	1994-95 plans
32	37	38

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what accommodation is provided in which occupied royal palaces for employees of KPMG Peat Marwick.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 11 July 1994]: None.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 12 July 1994]: No organisations, agencies or other bodies relating to my area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990 and no such privatisations are currently planned.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether export licences for tanks and other armoured vehicles are granted on a general, or an individual, export licence basis; and under what circumstances any exceptions to this rule can be made.

Mr. Needham: When it is appropriate for a licence to be granted for the export of these categories of defence equipment such licences are normally issued on an individual basis; I am not aware of any exception.

Trade Statistics (Korea)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many cars and other vehicles manufactured in the United Kingdom have been exported to Korea for each year since 1987;

(2) how many cars and other vehicles manufactured in Korea were imported into the United Kingdom in each year since 1987.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom export statistics do not distinguish between products manufactured in the United Kingdom and those manufactured elsewhere but exported from the United Kingdom. The available information, on a country of consignment basis, is as follows:

United Kingdom trade with South Korea in cars and other vehicles (numbers).

Year	United Kingdom exports	United Kingdom imports
1987	6	5,861
1988	13	10,209
1989	8	15,424
1990	68	4,690
1991	121	9,027
1992	68	15,531
1993	29	13,689

Nuclear Fuel Assemblies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what notification his Department received from British Nuclear Fuels before the recent export of mixed oxide nuclear fuel assemblies by air to Switzerland.

Mr. Needham: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to disclose details about export licences that have been issued. Any such transfers would require advance notification, also made in confidence, through my Department to the Euratom safeguards directorate.

Zangger Committee

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria must be met by countries wishing to be eligible for membership of the Zangger committee on nuclear export controls; and what information he has on refusals to countries applying to join the Zangger committee.

Mr. Needham: The main criteria for membership of the Zangger committee are accession to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons; potential to supply material or equipment of concern as defined in article III.2 of the NPT; and adherence to the committee's agreed conditions of supply for such items of concern. In recent years the committee has actively sought new members and refusals of applications have not arisen.

Supplementary Protection Certificates

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many supplementary protection certificates have been granted under the terms of EC Regulation 1768/92/EEC; and what is their average duration.

Mr. McLoughlin: As at 14 July 1994 the number of supplementary protection certificates granted by the United Kingdom Patent Office, in accordance with Council Regulation (EEC) No. 1768/92, is 138. The average duration is three years two months.

Anglia Television

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the inspectors appointed by him to investigate possible insider dealing contraventions in certain transactions of Anglia Television shares have concluded their inquiries; whether they have had any informal discussions with his Department on their findings; and when he expects to receive their formal report.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors appointed to investigate possible insider dealing contraventions with regard to the shares of Anglia Television Group plc have completed their inquiries and are expected to present their report shortly. It is normal practice for inspectors and departmental officials to have progress meetings during the course of an investigation.

UKAEA

Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the BZW report on the future of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Eggar: The full report contains a large amount of commercially senstive information which it would not be appropriate to place in the public domain. However, in accordance with the Government's commitment to open government, I asked BZW to produce a summary of its report for publication outlining its recommendations and the thinking behind them. Copies of the summary have been placed in the Library of the House. BZW's study was carried out last summer and obviously precedes the reorganisation of the AEA which took effect on 1 April. The summary should therefore be read in conjunction with the AEA's annual report, which was published earlier this week.

Petroleum Licences

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he will ensure that environmental considerations are taken into account when deciding on the award of petroleum licences in areas around the United Kingdom coast.

Mr. Eggar: At my initiative, which has the full agreement of the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association, UKOOA will fund the preparation and publication of a series of 16 United Kingdom continental shelf coastal directories regional reports.

This work will be done in conjunction with a consortium, co-ordinated by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, and composed of local authorities, central Government Departments, countryside agencies and the private sector.

Those reports covering areas likely to be of interest to companies in the 16th round will be available in draft by the end of December, and published in final form in June 1995. Prospective licensees will be expected to show that they have taken this information into account in their environment management systems for activities in the block to be awarded.

There is concern, which I share, about the impact on the environment of licensing inshore blocks. At present there is not enough agreed data on any sensitive areas in blocks on offer.

This collaborative project, which will take over two and a half years to complete, shows that the oil and gas industry and environmental organisations can work together for their mutual benefit. The reports will build on work already carried out by the JNCC, individual oil companies and the bodies already mentioned, as well as data contributed by knowledgeable environmental groups. This will provide valuable knowledge about the coastal and marine environment for the whole of the United Kingdom coastline which will greatly assist me in my decision making in the 16th and subsequent licensing rounds. The initiative will help environmental groups, local authorities and oil companies to discuss the issues in a more informed and co-operative way.

Regional Challenge

Ms Coffey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what discussions he has had with the European Commission about Regional Challenge;

(2) who will judge projects applying for funding for Regional Challenge;

(3) what factors led to the exclusion of Thanet, Plymouth and West Cumbria from Regional Challenge;

(4) when the criteria for bids for Regional Challenge will be published;

(5) what consultations have taken place; on what dates and with whom to ascertain the news of national and local agencies about Regional Challenge.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answers 13 July 1994]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has discussed Regional Challenge with Commissioner Millan twice and has exchanged correspondence. We intend that Regional Challenge grant decisions will be taken by the Government on the basis of recommendations from the monitoring committees. Thanet, Plymouth and West Cumbria were not included because of their small population.

Guidance on applications will be issued in due course. Officials have held discussions with local authority associations on various dates. My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of letters from hon. Members and others.

Ms Coffey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total allocations of objective 1 and 2 structural funds to Regional Challenge areas; and what percentage will be top-sliced for Regional Challenge per area.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 13 July 1994]: The structural funds objective 1 allocations were announced in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Sir J. Hannam) on 27 July 1993, Official Report, column 497. The objective 2 allocations were announced in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 13 April 1994, Official Report, column 230. On those occasions the allocations were given in ecu—for convenience I repeat them here in sterling for the areas eligible for Regional Challenge.

	[1] £ million
Objective 1 (1994-1999)
Merseyside	628
Objective 2 (1994-1996)
North East England	237
Yorkshire and Humberside	241
East Midlands	61
West Midlands	285
Greater Manchester, Lancashire, Cheshire	253
Greater London	57
South Wales	145

[1] £ million, 1994 prices (£1 = 1.3 ecu).

The White Paper on competitiveness referred to total prize money for the first round of Regional Challenge competitions of £150—£200 million across the eligible English and Welsh areas, which also includes some classified under objective 5(b). The term top-slicing is misleading.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 14 July.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 14 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Intelligence Service

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Prime Minister if he will indicate the extent to which following the passing of the Intelligence Services Act, the Government are prepared to make available to the House information on the activities of the security and intelligence agencies.

The Prime Minister: This Government have taken a series of significant steps in its policy of greater accountability and openness, wherever possible, in security and intelligence matters. All three security and intelligence agencies are avowed and have now been put on a statutory basis. The figure for the aggregate expenditure of the agencies is published annually. In addition, the expenditure, administration and policy of all three agencies will be subject to scrutiny by a committee of Parliamentarians—the Intelligence and Security Committee.

It is important to draw a line between proper accountability for the agencies and the continued need for secrecy regarding operational matters. Successive Governments have refused to provide information on the operations of the security and intelligence agencies, including matters which will fall within the scrutiny of the Intelligence and Security Committee. Comment on these matters, either by what is or is not said, could have a bearing on the effectiveness of the agencies, and the safety of their staff and those who co-operate with them. I made clear to the House on 6 May 1992—Official Report, column 65, that the Government will maintain this policy.

Ex-service People (Welfare)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if he will be meeting representatives of the Royal British Legion to discuss the approval by the House on 1 July of the resolution on the welfare of ex-service people; and what representations he has had from the Legion in regard to a meeting.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1994]: We welcome continuing close contact with the Royal British Legion and other service organisations. A request for a meeting has been received form the Royal British Legion and is being considered at present.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fur Farms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many officials of the State Veterinary Service observed the killing of mink on fur farms in November 1993; and what method of killing was used.

Mr. Soames: Officials of the State Veterinary Service did not observe the killing of mink on any fur farm in November 1993.

Beef Exports

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actions she has taken to limit the effects of the Franco-German beef embargo on the British agricultural industry.

Mr. Jack: The German Government have proposed unilateral restrictions on British beef imports. These would be illegal under EC rules, and my right hon. Friend the Minister has kept in touch with the European Commission on this matter. Mr. Steichen has written to the German Government to warn them that the Commission will take legal action if Germany puts its proposed restrictions into effect.

The French Government have not made any proposals for unilateral action against British beef imports.

Livestock Allowances

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost in 1993 for each county in England, and in total, of payments under (a) the sheep annual premium, (b) the suckler cow premium, (c) the beef special premium and (d) the hill livestock compensatory allowance; and what is her estimate of the cost in 1994.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested by the hon. Member cannot be given except at disproportionate cost. However, the expected value of 1993 scheme payments in each MAFF administrative region in England for the four schemes is detailed in the table.

£ million

Region	Sheep Annual Premium Scheme	Suckler Cow Premium Scheme	Beef Special Premium Scheme	Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance
South West	26·1	6·9	14·0	4·7
Wessex	10·7	4·6	7·7	1·0
Anglia	4·0	2·9	3·7	0·0
South Mercia	18·3	4·2	7·5	0·8
North Mercia	15·6	4·3	7·0	2·6
Northern	47·8	10·3	10·9	14·7
East Midlands	14·7	4·6	8·8	1·3
North East	31·0	7·8	9·7	8·3
South East	13·7	4·9	8·2	0·0
Total England	181·9	50·5	77·5	33·4

Estimates for the value of payments under each scheme in England for the 1994 scheme years are set out in the table. The figures are not broken down by MAFF region since for some schemes applications are still being received.

	£ million
Sheep Annual Premium Scheme	173
Suckler Cow Premium Scheme	64
Beef Special Premium Scheme	90
Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance	26

Dietary Statistics

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her latest assessment of the consumption in the United Kingdom diet of fat, saturated fat, salt and non-milk extrinsic sugars; and what change there has been in the figures from those prepared by her Ministry and used to enable production of the 1991 Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy report, "Dietary Reference Values".

Mr. Soames: The information requested, obtained from the national food survey, is in the table. The figures in parentheses take into account the contribution from alcoholic drinks and confectionery brought into the home, which were not recorded in the survey before 1992.

	1990	1991	1992		1993		January-March 1994
Fat, as percentage of energy	41·60	41·40	41·70	(40·1)	41·30	(39·7)	40·40	(39·2)
Saturated fatty acids, as percentage of energy	16·60	16·40	16·30	(15·3)	16·10	(15·6)	15·60	(15·3)
Sodium, grams per day	2·50	2·49	2·51	—	2·50	—	2·54	—
Non-milk extrinsic sugars, as percentage of energy	11·40	11·80	10·70	(13·4)	10·70	(13·3)	10·30	(12·6)

Comfrey

Ms Corston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations she has received from right hon. and hon. Members about the ban on comfrey products since the ban was announced; and how many of those representations were in support of the ban.

Mr. Soames: There is no ban on comfrey products generally, but those likely to contain the highest concentration of toxic alkaloids have been withdrawn from the market. Of 90 Members of this House who have raised the matter formally with my right hon. Friend, 22 have asked for these products to be reintroduced and 68 have expressed no opinion.

Rabbits

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the welfare of rabbits being transported across Europe.

Mr. Soames: The welfare of rabbits during transport is covered by provisions of directive 91/628/EEC on the protection of animals during transport. In Great Britain the directive is implemented by the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 (S.I. 1992 No. 3304).

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the total areas claimed by arable farmers in England for crops and set-aside under the arable area payments scheme in 1994; how those figures relate to the baseline areas declared to the European Commission; what estimate she has made of the overshoot; and if she will make a statement on the scale of penalty that is likely to arise from such an overshoot.

Mr. Jack: This information will not be available until all the 1994 area aid applications have been processed. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Agricultural Wages Board

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make an announcement on the future of the Agricultural Wages Board for England and Wales; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We had hoped to be able, before now, to make a statement on the Government's plans for the future of the Agricultural Wages Board arrangements. Since last year's substantial consultation exercise, there have been two significant and new factors which the Government must consider. Employers in a number of sectors of the industry are now questioning the value of keeping the present arrangements for statutory wage determination across the agriculture sector, and have raised concerns about the size of this year's minimum wage awards. They have also acknowledged that the two International Labour Organisation conventions covering the terms and conditions of agricultural workers should now be denounced by the United Kingdom. Those conventions place constraints on the industry and prevent the introduction of the flexible working arrangements required by the modern labour market. Secondly, employees' representatives are seeking leave in the courts to bring judicial review proceedings against the board on the ground that its Wages Order determinations are indirectly discriminating against part-time agricultural workers. The board met on 24 June to consider this legal challenge and we understand that employers' and employees' representative are consulting over the summer. There are some substantial and complex issues on employment and equal opportunities law which need examination.

In view of these developments, I believe that we must pause and take stock before making our decision, so that we can take account of the result of these developments, the board's decision, and of course the views expressed during and since the consultation exercise. However, to ensure that we are free to make the arrangements that the industry will need, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment will be making an announcement shortly on the ILO conventions Nos. 99 and 101.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Information Systems Committee

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 20 June, Official Report, column 48, if the policy arising from the DISC network policy project is currently being used by his Department; and if he will list the agencies which are using it.

Mr. Key: All data communications services currently in use in the Department and its agencies are consistent with the policy. The Central Transport Group, Marine Safety Agency and Transport Research Laboratory have commenced the procurement of common data communications services in accordance with the furtherance of the policy. The Highways Agency and Vehicle Inspectorate executive agency are currently conducting wide-ranging reviews of their requirements, including data communications, and are using the policy in assessing and selecting options. The remaining agencies will use the policy similarly in considering their on-going and future requirements.

Private Detective Firms

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what fees have been paid to Brays Detective Agency in respect of its work at the Batheaston bypass to date;

(2) what sum has been set aside in the budget for the Batheaston bypass for employing Brays Detective Agency or firms conducting similar work.

Mr. Key: These questions are an operational matter for the Highways Agency. The chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, is writing to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Don Foster, dated 12 July 1994:

A4/A46 Batheaston Swainswick Bypass

I am writing in response to your two recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Transport about the cost of employing Brays Detective Agency to monitor events at the Batheaston/Swainswick Bypass. This is an operational matter for which the Highways Agency is responsible.

As I have explained in response to your Parliamentary Question, PQ 2694, Brays are employed by our solicitors to support them in connection with possible legal action to gain control of the land on which the Batheaston Bypass is being built. A sum of £100,000 has been provisionally set aside in the budget for the Bypass to cover our solicitors' costs in employing Brays. To date, our solicitors have paid no fees to Brays in respect of their work at the Bypass; however, a payment of around £21,000 (including VAT) is about to be made.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what controls or guidelines exist within his Department regarding information on protestors gathered by private detectives.

Mr. Key: The information collected by private detectives on behalf of the Department's Highways Agency includes photographic and video records and written evidence of observations made. All are required to be carefully collated and catalogued to ensure that they would be acceptable before a court and would assist in the preparation of legal proceedings against trespassers.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what central records are kept by his Department of protestors against road schemes; and how information gathered by private detectives is collated centrally by his Department.

Mr. Key: Neither the Department nor the Highways Agency keeps central records of protestors against road schemes. Nor do they collate centrally information gathered by private detectives.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to which part of his Department private detectives gathering information on protestors are responsible.

Mr. Key: The private detectives gathering information on protestors are responsible to the Highways Agency.

Road Schemes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 703, if he will list the three other locations at which arrangements have been made for the gathering of information about protestors; which agency was used; and what was the cost.

Mr. Key: This question relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 July 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the three other locations at which arrangements have been made for the gathering of information on protestors. This is a matter for which the Highways Agency is responsible.

The trunk road schemes involved are the A12 Hackney Wick-M11 Link (Contract 4), the A11 Besthorpe-Wymondham scheme in Norfolk and the A4/A46 Batheaston Bypass in Avon.

In all cases Brays Detective Agency have been used. Expenditure to date has been around £50,000 for the A12 contract, £450 for the A11 contract and £21,000 at Batheaston.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the order in which the road schemes costing over £1 million will be constructed in each of the regions of the Highways Agency.

Mr. Key: As announced in March of this year, the following 22 new contracts for schemes over £1 million are due to start in the current financial year. These are listed by Government office region:

Northern
A19 Norton—Parkway Interchange Imp
A1 Shotton Slip Road
A19 Arcot Hall—Moor Farm

The order in which these will start, and decisions on starts in future years is subject to the successful completion of statutory and contractual procedures, and availability of resources.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many studies on the economic impact of road building his Department has (a) carried out itself or (b) commissioned in the last 10 years.

Mr. Key: None.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which road schemes have been authorised in the last 10 years which had a negative net present value; and which road schemes in the last 10 years have been rejected at the public inquiry stage or beyond, because they had a negative net present value.

Mr. Key [holding answer 23 June 1994]: As the information requested relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 12 July 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about which roads have been authorised in the last 10 years which had a negative net present value, or had been rejected at public inquiry stage or beyond because they had a negative net present value.

To the best of my knowledge, no road schemes have been authorised in the last 10 years which have a negative net present value. Neither have there been any road schemes rejected at public inquiry stage or beyond because they had a negative net present value.

Marine Safety

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he originally proposed to publish details on sub-standard ships detained in United Kingdom ports as recommended by the Donaldson inquiry; when he now proposes to do so; and what are the reasons for the delay.

Mr. Norris: In making his announcement on 17 May it was my right hon. Friend's intention that details of ships detained in United Kingdom ports should be published as soon as possible. The Marine Safety Agency is preparing the information in a format suitable for publication. The first set of results will be published shortly.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by police force area the number of accidents involving heavy goods vehicles for each of the last five years.

Mr. Key: The information requested is shown in the table.

Poole

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the preferred route for (a) the new Poole harbour crossing and (b) the Poole-A31 link road.

Mr. Key: I expect to announce our preferred route for these schemes shortly.

London Underground Ltd.

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of 5 June 1991, report on London Underground Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: London Underground Ltd. is today publishing its three-year response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report, detailing the progress which has been made in implementing the report's recommendations, and the benefits which the implementation of the report has produced since it was published three years ago. This is London Underground's final response on the implementation of the report.

The programme of work set out by the MMC in 1991 was an extremely wide-ranging one, touching on all aspects of the LUL organisation. Implementation of 101 of the report's 114 recommendations is now complete—an increase of 33 since their previous progress report two years ago. Two of the recommendations will not now be completed in the manner recommended by the MMC. Work on the rest, which are of a longer-term nature, will continue.

A number of the developments which have taken place since 1991 are worthy of particular mention. In November 1991, London Underground responded to a number of the MMC's key concerns with the publication of its company plan. This set out ambitious proposals for improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the business. Three years on, this initiative has delivered a reduction in staff numbers of more than 20 per cent. At the same time, the quality of London Underground's services has continued to improve, with consistently strong performance against the testing service quality targets which have been set by the Secretary of State and embodied in successive customer charters.

Nine of the recommendations in the MMC report were directed wholly or partly towards the Government. Three of these—101, 105 and 111—were about performance indicators, three—70, 71 and 77—about fares, and three —10, 97 and 98—about the financial regime under which London Underground operates.

Overall, the position on the first six of these has not altered substantively since the Government's own response of September 1991. Since 1991 we have set for London Underground three successive sets of performance indicators, increasingly based, in accordance with MMC recommendation 101, on measured customer satisfaction and on outputs rather than inputs. For the very latest set of objectives, which I announced in May this year, six out of the 10 objectives set are assessed on the basis of customer satisfaction.

On fares, we remain unconvinced of the case for a formal fares contract between the Government and a nationalised industry. However, in general terms, the Government do not dissent from London Underground's view that there should continue to be some real fare increases over the next few years.

There have, however, been two important developments on the financial side. The first has been introduction in the last few months, and consistent with the recommendation 10, of a greater degree of flexibility allowing nationalised industries such as London Transport to carry forward from one financial year to the next, any underspend, up to 5 per cent. of their external financing limit, provided that the amount carried forward is sent on investment. The second, connected with recommendation 98, has been the opening up, through the Government's private finance initiative, of a greater range of opportunities for LUL to work with the private sector. The Government welcome the fact that London Underground is currently working up a range of PFI projects, and commend London Underground for the enthusiasm and commitment with which it has responded to this important initiative.

The MMC made a number of recommendations about long-term planning for the network. The Government are continuing to work with LUL in developing a framework for strategic planning. Any such planning framework needs to be sufficiently flexible to adapt to changes in demand and other external developments, including the level of funding available. As the Government's original response made clear, it is not possible to commit public funding years in advance, because of the need for the Government to retain sufficient flexibility to deal with changes in the macroeconomic environment, and competing calls elsewhere in the public sector.

Within these constraints, London Underground is developing a more flexible approach to strategic planning, including—as recommended by the MMC—the development of a range of scenarios involving different levels of service and funding. It is also working to establish a greater understanding of the relationships between asset health, investment, and service performance. The Government welcome these steps, which will continue to be important building blocks in the evolution of future plans for the Underground.

London has the world's oldest and most complex underground network. The task of modernising and upgrading it will be a difficult and costly one, and we need to be realistic about how quickly it can be achieved. But we believe that during the three years since the MMC report, the management and staff of London Ungerground have made a worthwhile start on this proce

London Underground in 1994 is an organisation very different from that on which the MMC reported in 1991. While the Government have played their part by providing record levels of funding, the past three years have also seen substantial reforms and improvements in London Underground's own management, financial, and service performance. I would like to pay tribute to the MMC for the role which its comprehensive report played in initiating and directing this important process.

Copies of LUL's response have been placed in the Library.

Railways

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Rail Regulator will be undertaking consultation before approving access agreements for railway passenger services.

Mr. Freeman: The Rail Regulator has today published two consultation documents, entitled "Framework for the Approval of Railtrack's Track Access Charges for Franchised Passenger Services" and "Competition for Railway Passenger Services". I am arranging for copies of both documents to be placed in the Library.

British Rail Maintenance Ltd.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the sale of British Rail Maintenance Ltd. and the level 5 maintenance depots will commence.

Mr. Freeman: Next week British Rail will have available, for suitable prospective bidders, a detailed information memorandum offering for sale its maintenance depots at Eastleigh, Doncaster, Wolverton, Ilford, Chart Leacon and Glasgow and an Electronic Service Centre at Swindon.

For commercial and legal reasons, the memorandum will be available only to bona fide bidders who have signed a confidentiality undertaking. The principal areas covered by the memorandum are:

The nature of the businesses and the overall market in which they operate;
Future workload contracts;
Management and employees, including pensions and travel facilities;
The process for separating the businesses from British Rail; historical financial information.

The six depots do a range of maintenance and repair work on vehicles and components such as bogies, but each tends to specialise in particular types of repair and of vehicle. The Swindon ESC repairs, produces and maintains a range of specialist equipment.

The depots are to be sold as going concerns with workload contracts in place. Their customers will be the various businesses which now own rail rolling stock, principally the three rolling stock companies—ROSCOs—which have taken over BR's domestic passenger rolling stock fleets for leasing to train operators. Other customers include the freight businesses and Rail Express Systems, which is responsible for BR's business with the Post Office.

The depots are being offered separately, though buyers will be encouraged to bid for more than one depot. In evaluating bids BR will have regard to a range of objectives, including the extent to which competition may be fostered in the heavy repair industry. I hope that bidders will include MEBO teams from the depots.

BR will seek indicative bids by the end of August. I expect the sales to be completed by the end of the calendar year.

Traffic Examiners

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of traffic examiners responsible for road traffic enforcement in each county.

Mr. Key: The road transport enforcement division of the vehicle inspectorate is organised by area. As the areas cover more than one county an analysis by county cannot be given.

The table details the current number of substantive traffic examiners involved directly in traffic enforcement work by area.

Rolling Stock Leasing

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the indicative rolling stock leasing charges issued by the three rolling stock companies to train operating units, indicating for each train operating unit the specification of the rolling stock leased this year and the indicative charge for its use.

Mr. Freeman: This is a commercial matter for BR.

Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) of 22 March, Official Report, columns 283-84, if he will show for all consultants or other outside organisation or individuals currently or previously employed by the Office of the Rail Regulator (a) the name of the consultancy, organisation or individual, (b) the length of contract offered to each consultancy, organisation or individual, (c) the total amount inclusive of value added tax paid to date to each consultancy, organisation or individual, (d) the total amount inclusive of value added tax expected to be paid to each consultancy, organisation or individual and (e) the services required by the Office of the Rail Regulator from each consultancy, organisation or individual; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 July 1994]: The Rail Regulator informs me that the consultants shown in the tables have been employed by his office.

A. Call-off contracts for the provision of ad-hoc advice/services on demand

Contracts for consultancy advice are normally offered on an on-going basis with provision for the Department to terminate the contract.

A number of individuals have been employed by the Department to advise on rail privatisation matters, but information on payments to such individuals is commercially confidential.

EDUCATION

Higher Education Students

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what figures are available for higher education students completing courses in the current year; and what estimates there are for how many (a) already have employment to go to (i) in their chosen career and (ii) in a temporary capacity and (b) will be claiming income support and related benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Information is not yet centrally available on the numbers of graduates completing their studies in this academic year.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what figures are available for drop-out rates in higher education for each term in the academic year for (a) dependent students and (b) independent/mature students for each academic year from 1980-81 to 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Estimated United Kingdom education wastage rates for full-time and sandwich students studying for first degrees are published in the Department's annual report. The figures for the academic years between 1982-83 and 1991-92 are in that table. Data are not available on a termly basis and do not distinguish between students on the basis of mode of support or age.

Mature Students

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the figures for (a) mature students returning to education and (b) school further education leavers continuing in further education/higher education for each academic year from 1980-81 to 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: Numbers of mature home entrants—defined as those aged 21 and over at the start of an undergraduate course and aged 25 and over at the start of a postgraduate course—and home entrants of other ages to higher education are shown below. Data on the academic year beginning 1993 are not yet available.

Great Britain (000s)

Academic year beginning	Mature entrants	Other entrants	Total
1980	134·9	180·9	315·8
1981	139·7	189·8	329·5
1982	139·8	193·1	332·9
1983	149·7	190·9	340·6
1984	151·2	192·8	344·0

Students (Employment Statistics)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what figures are available for students graduating in 1993 having entered (a) full-time careers, (b) temporary part-time employment, (c) post-graduate courses and (d) unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The first destinations of United Kingdom domiciled first degree students graduating in academic year 1992-93 from UFC-funded universities in England whose destinations are known are shown in the table:

	Numbers
Employment	28,700
Further study	15,500
Not available for employment	2,800
Believed unemployed	5,700

(Source: Universities' Statistical Record)

Some 9 per cent. of those identified in the answer as being employed reported themselves as being in temporary employment expected to end before 31 March 1994. In many cases these graduates continue in employment after this date. Information on the full or part-time status of employment is not centrally available.

Education Statistics

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimates are available for people intending to pursue (a) further education courses and (b) higher education courses for the academic year 1994-95; and of these what percentage are (i) school further education leavers and (ii) mature students returning to education.

Mr. Boswell: As at May, the number of applicants through central schemes to full-time higher education courses for admission in 1994 stood at some 378,000—virtually the same level as at May last year. This information is not broken down by the age of applicants, or their previous educational experience.

Information is not collected centrally on applicants for further education courses since there is no central admission mechanism for further education colleges.

EC Youth and Education Councils

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) of 5 July, Official Report, column 127, what was the voting record of each member state at the meetings of the European Community's Council of Youth Ministers and the Council of Education Ministers held on 6 and 21 June.

Mr. Boswell: The Council of Youth Ministers and the Council of Education Ministers respectively adopted common positions on the Youth for Europe III proposal and the SOCRATES proposal by unanimity. The Council of Education Ministers also adopted conclusions on the cultural and artistic apsects of education, again by unanimity. Votes were not taken on the other matters under discussion.

TREASURY

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring up to date the figures in his answer of 8 January 1990, Official Report, columns 555-56, concerning real earnings after tax and child benefit, on the breakdown between manual and non-manual males to take account of the change in real earnings since April 1989 as well as changes in taxation.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is given in the table.

Increases[1] in real earnings[2] after income tax[3] and child benefit of a married man with two children[4], between April 1979 and April 1993

Manufactured Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what steps the Government take to predict the volume of imports and exports of manufactured independently of past and future movements in nominal and real exchange rates against both the ecu and non-ecu currencies;

(2) what account the Government have taken of the divergent movements in both the nominal and the real exchange rate between the ecu and non-ecu currencies in recent years in producing economic forecasts.

Mr. Nelson: The Government's forecasts, including those for export and import volumes, are given in the summer economic forecast. As discussed there, they reflect a range of influences including competitiveness, world trade and domestic demand.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the entitlements for 1994-95 resulting from the carry-forward of capital and running costs underspends allowed under the end-year flexibility schemes.

Mr. Portillo: A list of entitlements totalling £523 million for capital expenditure and £269 million for running costs is shown in the following table.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, individual cash limits and running costs limits will be increased when entitlement is taken up.

The total increase in cash limits resulting from the take-up of end-year flexibility will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Royal Mint

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the triennial review of the Royal Mint.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The triennial review of the Royal Mint executive agency has now been completed, and a summary of the evaluation report has been placed in the Library.

The Mint provided United Kingdom coins in the quantities and at the times required by the public. It also maintained its position as the world's leading exporter of coins taking more than 50 per cent. of the available market. During the three years covered by the review, the Mint achieved an average annual rate of return of 23·2 per cent. compared with a target of 12·5 per cent. and exceeded most of its other performance targets.

While I have decided that there should be no change in the Mint's status as an executive agency, I have asked officials to review the arrangements under which United Kingdom coins are purchased so as to encourage further improvements in the Mint's performance.

Procurement

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in improving value for money in Government procurement.

Mr. Portillo: The Treasury has today published the annual report of its procurement group on progress made in Government procurement.

The group offers advice and guidance to Departments on policy, best practice and the achievement of value for money in public procurement and the management of construction projects.

The report notes that most Departments significantly exceeded their 1992-93 purchasing savings targets. These targets are set to encourage them to seek better value for money in procurement. In the sample area, where total spending is £3·4 billion, savings of £166 million were registered. For 1993-94 Departments have set a collective savings target of 3·5 per cent. The main message of the report is that while progress continues to be made in improving performance in Government procurement, in the management of construction projects and in increasing professionalism and value for money, further work is required if procurement staff are to take full advantage of market opportunities.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the annual report of the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Nelson: A copy of the board's report, made in accordance with section 117 of the Financial Services Act 1986, was laid before Parliament today. The report covers the period from 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994. Copies have been placed in the Library.

EC Budget Contribution

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the principal reasons for the difference between the projected gross United Kingdom contribution after abatement to the preliminary draft budget of the European Communities for 1995 and the 1994 gross contribution; and what action he is taking on this.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 7 July 1994]: The main reasons are the lower abatement of our VAT contributions in the 1995 preliminary draft budget relative to the 1994 Budget, because our net contribution in 1994 is relatively low; the higher rate of growth in the United Kingdom's economy relative to that of other member states; and the increase proposed by the Commission in the 1995 PDB. The latter is currently under negotiation and will be given First reading by the Budget Council on 25 July.

Privatisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which organisations, agencies and other bodies relating to his departmental area of responsibility have been privatised since 1990; and what plans he has for further privatisation.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 12 July 1994]: Forward: Civil Service Catering, which was formerly part of the Treasury, was privatised in February 1994. There are no plans for any further privatisations at present.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) those contracts awarded by his Department to private sector companies as a result of the Government's market-testing policy and (b) the total number of bids for each contract awarded to private sector companies.

EMPLOYMENT

Cricket Professionals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what decisions were made by his Department in the case of John Pollard, cricket professional for Ebenwood cricket club, and his applications for a work permit over the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Department has approved work permit applications by Evenwood cricket club to employ John Pollard in each of the last three seasons. The latest application was granted on appeal following confirmation of Mr. Pollard's first-class status.

School Leavers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates are available for average wages currently being offered to school leavers in (a) full-time permanent jobs, (b) part-time jobs and (c) temporary employment for (i) England, (ii) the north-west, (iii) Lancashire and (iv) Burnley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information taken from the new earnings survey is given in the following table. Information is not available for the north-west, Lancashire and Burnley because the sample sizes are too small.

Average gross weekly earnings of employees on all rates—pay unaffected by absence: April 1993

England	Including overtime £

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what figures are available for school leavers unemployed (a) upon leaving school, (b) one months after leaving, (c) one to three months after leaving, (d) three to 12 months after leaving and (e) one to three years after leaving.

Miss Widdecombe: Information taken from the most recent youth cohort studies of England and Wales is given in the following table:

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what figures and percentage terms are available for school leavers (a) entering part-time employment, (b) entering full-time employment and (c) entering temporary employment.

Miss Widdecombe: The information in the following table has been taken from the youth cohort study of England and Wales. The study does not collect information on those young people who are in temporary employment.

Race Relations

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consult local authorities before authorising any changes in the administration of the race relations employment advisory service or obliging market testing of the service.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no need for the Department to consult local authorities before making any changes to the administration of the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service or market-testing the service. RREAS is a self-contained organisation which offers advice and guidance on racial equality in employment directly to employers in the private and public sectors. There is no reason why any changes in its administration or management should impact on the work of local authorities.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria his Department is using in considering whether the race relations employment advisory service should be market tested; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's policy, as set out in the White Paper "Competing for Quality"—November 1992, Cm. 1730—is to provide high-quality public services in the most cost-effective way.

Working Hours

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of the working week for those in full-time employment in the United Kingdom and in the other countries of the European Union.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Estimates from the spring 1993 Labour Force Survey for the United Kingdom show that the average usual total weekly hours worked by full-time employees in their main job was 43·5 hours.

Most recent international comparisons of average hours worked relate to LFS results for spring 1991 and are published by EUROSTAT. These estimates are given in the table:

Employees working Full-time

	Average hours usually worked per week
United Kingdom	43·4
Portugal	41·5
Spain	40·5
Ireland	40·4
Greece	40·3
FR Germany	39·8

Unemployment

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people (a) joined and (b) left the unemployment register for each of the last 12 months for (i) Burnley, (ii) Lancashire, (iii) the north-west and (iv) England; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the numbers of people entering and leaving claimaint unemployment on the unadjusted basis can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what figures are available for (a) Burnley, (b) Lancashire, (c) the north-west and (d) England for those unemployed by duration of (i) less than three months, (ii) three to 12 months; (iii) one to three years and (iv) three years and more; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the levels of claimant unemployment by duration is available on the unadjusted basis only, for the months of January, April, July and Otober. It can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response his Department is making to levels of unemployment among ethnic minorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Service provides a range of specific measures aimed at helping unemployed people obtain work, including those from ethnic minorities. Training programmes administered by training and enterprise councils on the Employment Department's behalf are available to all those eligible, regardless of their racial origin. The Race Relations Employment Advisory Service, and various ED publications, help employers to provide equality of opportunity.

Training

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to ensure that adequate training provision is made for young people with special needs under the commitment to youth training made in the White Paper, "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win".

Miss Widdecombe: The White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win" restates the Government's commitment to the guarantee of a suitable training place to all 16 and 17-year-old school leavers who are unable to find a job and are seeking training. The guarantee is delivered locally by training and enterprise councils and meets the needs of individuals whatever their ability or training needs.

Employment Schemes, London

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) for how long unemployed people are currently waiting to attend the job search seminars at each employment centre in the London region from the date they first applied;

(2) for how long unemployed people are currently waiting to take up the new Restart courses at each employment centre in London from the date they first applied;

(3) for how long unemployed people are currently waiting to attend the job review workshops at each employment centre in London from the date they first applied.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Mr. Jim Dowd, dated 14 July 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions regarding how long unemployed people are currently waiting to attend Job Search Seminars, Job Review Workshops and New Restart Courses in each employment centre in the London region from the date they first applied. I am replying in the Chief Executive's absence.

Employment Service (ES) programmes are designed to give specific help to unemployed people at certain stages of their unemployment. Job Search Seminars and Job Review Workshops are available to clients who have been unemployed for 13 weeks whereas New Restart is a mandatory programme for clients who have been unemployed for two years. The ES and the client will only gain maximum benefit from the assistance and guidance offered by any particular programme if the referral is made at the appropriate time. The ES Structure review which was implemented in April this year has placed the responsiblity on our District Managers to provide suitable ES programmes and ensure that those programmes are filled. By devolving responsibility in this way we aim to ensure that programme waiting lists are reduced and that the right provision is in the right place at the right time.

Greater London is divided into nine District Offices covering 147 Employment Service Jobcentres, Jobcentres and Unemployment Benefit Offices. In order to supply an immediate reply to your questions I have contacted a representative sample of offices in each of the nine Districts and can give you average waiting times for each of the programmes as follows:

Job search seminars. The average wait is two-three weeks north of the Thames and four weeks south of the Thames.

Job Review Workshops. The average wait is two-three weeks both north and south of the Thames.

New Restart. The average wait is three weeks both north and south of the Thames.

The above figures indicate that in London, generally, our local management policy is working but we are not complacent as we know that waiting lists for some programmes in some Districts are longer. I have asked our Programmes Manager, David Young, to review programmes provision to ensure that our clients' needs are best met in all Districts.

I hope this is helpful.

Mrs. Helen Tinney

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he intends to take to ensure that the Health and Safety Executive updates its practices and procedures to take account of the report of the fatal accident inquiry into the death of Mrs. Helen Tinney of Gorbals, Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 6 July 1994]: The Health and Safety Executive has studied the report on the fatal accident inquiry with care. The executive is promoting and participating in a revision of the British Standard, No. 5607/BS6187, which sets out the technical requirements applicable to the use of explosives in demolition. The revision will take into account the demolition by explosives of high-rise buildings.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BBC (Security Passes)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee (1) how many passes giving access to the Palace of Westminster, other than Lobby or Gallery passes, have been allocated to the British Broadcasting Corporation;

(2) how many Lobby and Gallery passes have been allocated to the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that the British Broadcasting Corporation has been issued with 42 photo-identity passes for the Press Gallery and Lobby, and with 102 such passes for other parts of the Palace of Westminster.

Jubilee Line Construction

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what effect the current delays in the construction of the Jubilee line will have on the timetable for the new building for parliamentary offices.

Mr. Ray Powell: My Committee fully recognises the critical effect of the rebuilding of Westminster station on the construction programme of the new parliamentary building. It therefore recommended in its second report of Session 1991-92 (HC 358) that a steering group of officials should be established to monitor progress, to give directions to the project teams of London Underground Ltd. and the new parliamentary building on matters affecting the interface between the two schemes and to report monthly to the Committee. That group includes in its membership the managing director of LUL and the director of the Jubilee line extension project. The Committee's recommendation was subsequently incorporated into the legal agreement between the House and London Underground which now governs the development of the site.

The Committee has now considered the second of these monthly reports and has been advised by the steering group that, after four months on site, work is not proceeding as well as expected; is behind schedule; and that LUL has instructed its contractor to reprogramme the work. The Committee has been advised by the steering group that, notwithstanding these delays, LUL is confident the site will be handed back on schedule in February 1997. The Committee nevertheless remains concerned about this slippage so early in the programme and has therefore invited the managing director of LUL to complement his contribution to the steering group with regular meetings with the Committee. That invitation has now been accepted and the first of these meetings is expected to take place this autumn.

The target date for completion of the new parliamentary building remains at August 1999.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people (a) claimed and (b) were awarded non-contributory invalidity benefit following entitlement to statutory sick pay where the claimant suffered an industrial injury for the period (i) between April 1992 to April 1993, (ii) April 1993 to April 1994 and (iii) in total since April 1983.

Mr. Scott: Information from April 1992 is not yet available and figures from April 1983 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what figures are available for people claiming income support by (a) gender and (b) age for (i) Burnley, (ii) Lancashire, (iii) the north West and (iv) England for the latest month for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table.

Benefits Repayments

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances private individuals are required to repay contributory, non-means tested benefits to his Department; what plans the Government have to extend the scope of such repayments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Repayments of benefit can be required when an adjudication officer decides that an overpayment has been caused by a person's misrepresentation, or failure to disclose, any material fact; or when there has been a civil action under common law.

In certain circumstances, legislation provides for recovery of moneys paid to individual benefit claimants, thus

(1) when Income Support is paid (or paid at a higher rate) because of the late payment of a contributory or other non-means tested benefit, the sum involved may be recovered before any payment of arrears is made.

(2) an amount equivalent to the value of relevant benefits should be deducted and paid to the Department for cases which fall under the provisions of the Compensation Recovery Scheme. Normally this deduction is made by the compensator just before the personal injury damages are paid to the individual who made the claim.

We have no plans to extend the scope of these arrangements.

Household Incomes

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the next edition of "Households Below Average Income" statistics will be published.

Mr. Burt: The new edition of the household below average income—HBAI—statistics, covering the years 1979 to 1991-92, has been published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

The figures show that average disposable household incomes have grown in real terms by 36 per cent. between 1979 and 1991-92. Increases were not confined to a few top earners, and there have been appreciable increases in average incomes for all family types and economic status groups. Pensioners have done particularly well, with pensioner couples showing an increase in average income of up to 56 per cent. after housing costs and 46 per cent. before housing costs.

A complex picture emerges in the outcomes for the lower-incomes groups. This edition captures a particular point in the economic cycle when unemployment peaked, prior to the downward trend that followed. Interest rates had begun to fall, but were still much higher than their current levels. Another significant fctor is the potentially misleading impression given by the very low incomes reported by an increasing number of self-employed families. Analysis, in particular of the expenditure of these households reporting zero or negative incomes, shows that their spending patterns would place them in the top half of the income distribution. Indeed, there is evidence that the living standards, as measured by expenditure, of the bottom income 10 per cent. may be no lower than that of the second 10 per cent. There has also been a marked increase in their possession of consumer durables. The results shown in HBAI for the lowest income group cannot, therefore, be interpreted simply and should be treated with some caution.

The new family resources survey, which is due to replace the family expenditure survey as the data source for HBAI, will place special emphasis on gathering information from households on low incomes and so should help to improve the reliability of the information.

Carers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentage of the social security budget is allocated for the financial support of carers;

(2) what was the total cost of the allowance paid to carers in the last year; and how many carers received the invalidity allowance;

(3) what proposals there are to increase that part of the social security budget applied to the carers allowance and carers invalidity allowance.

Mr. Scott: Carers may be entitled to a wide range of benefits and financial support, which are not subject to cash-limiting or budget-allocation.

Expenditure for 1994-95 on invalid care allowance, which is specifically intended for carers, is estimated to constitute 0·61 per cent. of the social security budget, excluding administration.

The estimated expenditure for invalid care allowance for 1993-94 is £433 million[1] and £510 million for 1994-95.[2]

The latest estimate of those in receipt of ICA is 249,988 as at 4 July 1994.[3]

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many carers (a) receive and (b) do not receive the invalid care allowance (i) nationally and (ii) in Coventry.

Mr. Scott: As at 4 July 1994, there were 249,988 people in receipt of invalid care allowance in Great Britain.[1] Figures are not available for numbers of carers in receipt of ICA in Coventry and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information on the numbers of carers not in receipt nationally or in Coventry is not available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what precentage of carers receive the carers invalidity benefit (a) in Coventry and (b) nationally.

Mr. Scott: No such benefit as carers invalidity benefit exists, however, it is estimated that nationally 3·7[1] per cent. of carers receive invalid care allowance. Separate figures are not available for Coventry.

[1]Based on General Household Survey 1990 estimate.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to bring the carers allowance in line with national average earnings.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so. Invalid care allowance provides a measure of income maintenance and is not intended to be a wage for carers.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received from carers organisations regarding (a) the carers allowance, (b) the stress factor and (c) the carers disability allowance;

(2) if he will name the carers organisations who have made representations to him about help to carers (a) from Coventry and (b) nationally;

(3) how many individuals have made representations to him about help for carers.

Mr. Scott: In the year ending 30 June 1994 representations were received from Coventry Carers

Forum, and other organisations including Caring Costs, Carers National Association, Alzheimer's Disease Society, Oxfordshire Carers Forum, Sutton Carers Forum, Barnet Carers Forum, RADAR.

Representations were also received from 266 individuals.

Representations have been received regarding the rate at which invalid care allowance is paid and the conditions of entitlement to ICA. These sometimes refer to the stress involved in caring.

No such benefit as carers disability allowance exists.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he plans to the carers allowance and carers invalidity allowance for the current year.

Mr. Scott: As a result of the European Court ruling in the case of Thomas and others, we will shortly be legislating under the European Communities Act to equalise the age limits for claiming invalid care allowance and severe disablement allowance for men and women at 65.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are his proposals for encouraging more people to become carers.

Mr. Scott: The Government recognise the contribution made by carers to society, and will continue to keep carers' benefits and other assistance under review.

Rent Rebates and Allowances

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount spent in each year between 1988-89 and 1993-94 on rent rebates and rent allowances both in current prices and in constant 1993-94 prices; if, following the Treasury's Summer Economic Forecast 1994, he will publish projections for each of the years from 1994-95 to 1996-97; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information is in the table. The projections for 1994-95 to 1996-97 will be announced at the time of the Budget and will be published in due course in the departmental report.

£ million

Housing Benefit

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average time taken to process housing benefit claims last year.

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the form requested. Latest available data, for 1992-93, show that 75 per cent. of all claims to housing benefit were processed within 14 days of the local authority receiving all the relevant information.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Child Support Agency staff have received performance-related pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Chris Mullin, dated 13 July 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on performance related pay within the Child Support Agency.

The Child Support Agency operates its performance related pay scheme within the terms of the national pay arrangements agreed by the Treasury and Civil Service Trades Unions.

The level of any individual's performance related progression is governed by the Agency's annual performance appraisal arrangements. Each member of staff is set a number of work and personal objectives, tailored to meet their experience and ability, which are assessed each year by their line manager. Any entitlement to performance related pay is then awarded in recognition of the level of performance achieved.

There is no direct correlation between the pay of staff employed by the Agency and the amount of maintenance they secure or the number of absent parents they locate.

The Agency now employs 5,268 permanent staff, including 488·5 in Northern Ireland, all of whom are eligible for consideration for an award of performance related pay based upon the agreed arrangements which are available for inspection in the Library.

I hope you will find this reply helpful.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Appointments

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much the public appointments unit cost to run in 1993.

Mr. David Davis: The cost of running the public appointments unit in 1993-94 was £237,820.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff are currently employed in the public appointments unit.

Mr. David Davis: Apart from the director and deputy director, who combine these roles with other duties in the OPSS, there are nine staff, two of whom work part-time.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether all Government Departments are subject to the citizens charter.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. The citizens charter applies to all public services and the regulated privatised utilities.

Civil Service College

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what key performance targets he has set for the Civil Service College executive agency for the current year.

Mr. David Davis: The key performance targets for the Civil Service College executive agency for 1994-95 are:

- to breakeven in accrual accounting terms taking into account the Central Payment from the Cabinet Office (OPSS);
- to earn £600,000 from consultancy work;
- to attract 7,800 students at Grade 7 or above;
- to attract 990 students from the private sector;
- to earn 80 per cent. of course evaluations in the two highest (of six) categories.

There is also a longer-term objective of obtaining a 10 per cent. increase in efficiency over the period 1991-92 to 1995-96.

Central Office of Information

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what targets have been set for the Central Office of Information in 1994-95.

Mr. David Davis: The Central Office of Information has five targets for the 1994-95 financial year. They are:

(i) to break even in current cost terms after recovering all costs, including interest on borrowings;
(ii) to achieve a 2 per cent. reduction in unit cost of output in real terms, while maintaining suitable levels of quality;
(iii) to equal or better the proportion of work delivered in accordance with client specification during 1993-94;
(iv) to equal or better the proportion of work delivered on time during 1993-94; and
(v) to achieve an average score of 7.7 out of 10 for the new COI customer satisfaction index.

WALES

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the legal fees incurred by the Cardiff Bay development corporation form part of its management running costs.

Mr. Redwood: Legal fees incurred are charged to the administrative running cost and programme budgets as appropriate.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by wave the start-up costs for each NHS trust hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Prior to their operational dates, the contribution made available for the shadow running period of established NHS trusts was as follows:

1992 £104,000.
1993 £215,000 (South and East Wales Ambulance £300,000).
1994 £275,000.

Welsh Consumer Council

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who is responsible for control of the spending in Wales of the Welsh Consumer Council.

Mr. Redwood: The President of the Board of Trade is responsible for the funding of the Welsh Consumer Council, through the Department of Trade and Industry's grant to the National Consumer Council. The control of the WCC's expenditure rests with the NCC and the council itself.

Environment Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in regard to the future institutional arrangements for the Environment Agency in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Discussions on the future institutional arrangements for the Environment Agency are taking place between the Ministers involved, and at official level, on a continuing basis.

Schools (Road Safety)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each education authority in Wales and for Wales as a whole, the number of primary and of secondary schools operating road safety programmes in each of the last three years; and what was the percentage of such schools as a proportion of the total number of primary and of secondary schools in each case.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to collect details of road safety education programmes in primary and secondary schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I have no such plans at present.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many school children were (a) killed and (b) injured in road accidents in each of the last three years for which information is available in each district and county council area and in Wales.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, (1) pursuant to his oral statement of 7 July, Official Report, column 470, on what date he made the request to the Welsh Development Agency to set up an independent investigation into the Cynon valley land deal;

(2) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning the appointment of new accountants to succeed KPMG Peat Marwick in examining the agency land deal as described in his oral statement of 7 July, Official Report, column 465; whether his Department's secondee from the National Audit Office Wales regional office will continue with the inquiry team; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning (a) the completion of the KPMG Peat Marwick section of the investigation into the Cynon valley land deal, (b) the commencement of subsequent phases of the investigation and (c) the procedures to be used to select the company to be used to complete the investigation;

(4) on what date the secondment of the secondee from the National Audit Office Wales regional office to his Department commenced; for how long is the period of her secondment; and if he will specify what the duties of the secondee are in relation to (a) the investigation into the Welsh Development Agency land assembly deal for the Tesco supermarket in the Cynon valley and (b) other matters contained in the job description pertaining to her secondment.

Mr. Redwood: In March this year, I asked for this and other matters concerning the agency's involvement at Aberdare to be investigated. The arrangements for handling the investigation, are a matter for the agency.

There is currently no secondment from the National Audit Office to my Department. An internal auditor from my Department was seconded to KPMG Peat Marwick to assist with the investigation and she is now assisting Grant Thornton who have been appointed to continue and complete the work.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for strengthening the guidelines issued to the Welsh Development Agency debarring the agency from any act of discrimination in favour of one private company over another; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The management statement issued to the agency requires the agency to act in a way which promotes high standards of probity, including the promotion of regularity, propriety and value for money. I see no need for further guidance.

Public Land Sales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current guidelines covering the sale of public land by tender.

Mr. Redwood: The most recent guidance to Government Departments and non-departmental public bodies on the disposal of land and buildings is set out in Chapter 32 of "Government Accounting" and HM Treasury's "Dear Accounting Officer" circulars 4/88 and 13/92. Guidance on the disposal of NHS land in Wales is contained in the NHS handbook of land transactions. Guidance to local authorities is provided in Welsh Office circular 19/93.

Development Boards

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral statement of 7 July, Official Report, column 463-65, (1) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning the appointment of Chestertons as estate agents to advise on the agency's Cynon valley land deal (a) by open tender and (b) without tender;

(2) what arrangements he is making for securing additional consultancy assistance to guide the process of transfer of Development Board for Rural Wales functions to local authorities.

Mr. Redwood: I myself have had none.

Welsh Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he has made in relation to the chairmanship of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Mr. Redwood: The matter is still under consideration.

Municipal Bus Companies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines were applicable in respect of the consents required from his Department for the disposal of municipal bus companies, their garages, fleets and miscellaneous and financial assets to private companies as applicable in 1991, 1992 and 1993; and if he will list the occasions on which such consents were sought during each of those years and the date of each of the (a) applications and (b) approvals or otherwise.

Mr. Redwood: Comprehensive guidance was issued to appropriate local authorities in December 1988.

Only one request for consent to dispose of a municipal bus company has been received since 1991. That related to Cynon Valley Transport. The request was made on 15 October 1991. Consent was denied and the Council informed on 18 November 1991.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the occasions on which a direction has been given by his Department to any non-departmental public body in Wales varying its powers or giving consent to a request for such a variation for each of the last five years; and what provision was made to attach a note describing such a direction to the annual accounts of (a) his Department and (b) the relevant non-departmental public body.

Mr. Redwood: No such direction has been issued in the last five years.

Health Promotion Authority for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation he has had with the chairman of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales in relation to the publication of the district auditor's report of April 1994 on allegations of expenses irregularities by the previous chief executive of the authority.

Mr. Redwood: None. The publication of the report is a matter for the authority.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the recent violent suppression of a peaceful demonstration in Jakarta and the suppression of three publications was raised at the meeting of the consultative group on Indonesia in Paris on 7 and 8 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Indonesian Government are well aware of the importance we attach to respect for human rights, including freedom of expression. We underlined our concern about the recent curtailment of press freedom to the Indonesian delegation in the margins of the July meeting of the consultative group for Indonesia. The revocation of publishing permits for these three publications is a retrograde step and disappointingly inconsistent with the greater spirit of openness which has prevailed in Indonesia in recent months.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the remit of the United Nations Human Rights Commission's team in Indonesia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Human Rights Commission does not have a "team" in Indonesia. However, the special rapporteur on extra-judicial, summary or arbitrary executions has just visited Indonesia and East Timor at the invitation of the Indonesian Government, in compliance with the undertaking given to the Human Rights Commission in March 1994. The special rapporteur will report to the 51st session of the United Nations Commission.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Indonesia regarding the recent issue of a warrant for the arrest of Adnan Nasution; what information he has on Mr. Nasution's whereabouts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister of State gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 6 July at column 208.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Indonesia regarding the banning of three publications on 21 June and the violent suppression of a peaceful demonstration in Jakarta on 23 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Indonesian Government are well aware of the importance we attach to respect for human rights, including freedom of expression. We underlined our concern about the recent curtailment of press freedom to the Indonesian delegation in the margins of the July meeting of the consultative group for Indonesia. The revocation of publishing permits for these three publications is a retrograde step and disappointingly inconsistent with the greater spirit of openness which has prevailed in Indonesia in recent months.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what input his Department had into the first interdepartmental export promotion committee on 5 July; and if he will make a statement on the ways in which non-proliferation controls will be integrated into the export expansion strategy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The ministerial conference on exports and trade development on Tuesday 5 July was the first meeting at ministerial level of the Whitehall Export Promotion Committee. The committee was set up in 1992 and is run by the FCO/DTI joint export promotion directorate. At present, both the chairman and secretary of the committee are members of the FCO.

The ministerial conference was chaired by the President of the Board of Trade. The Minister for Trade, spoke about DTI export promotion activity. My right hon. Friend the Minister responsible for commercial work within the FCO, gave a detailed presentation on the FCO's role in the jointly run FCO/DTI Overseas Trade Services and, in particular, on the range of commercial activity at FCO posts overseas.

Non-proliferation issues were not discussed at the conference. But my right hon. Friend the Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) is the DTI Minister responsible both for export controls and export promotion. The DTI has a continuing awareness programme to keep exporters informed of the United Kingdom's non-proliferation obligations. Goods of proliferation concern, which are included in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, may be exported from the United Kingdom only under the authority of a licence guaranteed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to her replies to the hon. Member for Barrow, and Furness (Mr. Hutton) of 5 July, Official Report, column 138, if he will place in the Library a copy of the Australian resumé paper and the draft treaty texts for a comprehensive nuclear test ban to which he refers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have arranged for copies of the Australian paper to be placed in the Library of the House. It is not the intention of the two working groups to make their draft treaty texts available outside the comprehensive test ban talks. These texts will form the basis of negotiation in the next session.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of his departmental paper NPRO 29 (93-94), dated 10 February 1994, on United Kingdom policy on weapon proliferation and control.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has no record of a paper of this reference and date on this subject. I set out our policy on non-proliferation to the Foreign Affairs Committee on 6 July.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria exist for eligibility of countries to join the nuclear suppliers group; and what information he has on refusals to applicant countries to the nuclear suppliers group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An invitation to join the nuclear suppliers group is subject to consensus decision on a case-by-case basis by subscribing Governments. Criteria for membership of the NSG include commitment to non-proliferation including being party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty or equivalent regional arrangements; adherence to the NSG guidelines; potential to supply items controlled by the NSG; and establishment of effective controls on the export of such items. The NSG has publicly appealed to all states to adhere to the NSG guidelines and apply controls to their exports of nuclear materials and equipment.

Caspian Sea

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the Caspian sea with the Russian Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have not personally discussed the Caspian sea with the Government of the Russian Federation. I have nothing to add to my answer of 8 July to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington), at column 425.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of recent correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and the Russian Government on the subject of the status of the Caspian sea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Copies of recent correspondence will be placed in the Library as soon as they are available.

Red Mercury

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain from his Russian counterpart a copy of the memorandum signed by President Yeltsin authorising the Russian concern Promekologiya to produce and export red mercury; and what discussions he or his Department officials have had with the Russian Foreign Ministry over the control on the proliferation of red mercury.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are approaching the Russian authorities to ascertain the authenticity of the memorandum. However, we have no evidence to suggest that a substance known as red mercury has any potential uses in nuclear weapons.

Korea

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of when the per capita income of Korea will be greater than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to IMF statistics, the per capita income in 1992 in south Korea was $6,747 and in the United Kingdom $18,370. In recent years, South Korea's economy has grown faster than our own. But forecasting comparative growth rates any distance into the future is an unprofitable business.

BBC Television Series

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what benefits accrued to his Department from the recent series of BBC television programmes on the work done by departmental civil servants and diplomats; and what review of the impact of the television exposure of his Department's work has been conducted.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No review has been conducted, but comments from a wide range of sources suggest that the series has done much to extend and improve public knowledge of the work of the FCO.

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the final decision of the European Court of Justice on the European Commission's action in respect of the Greek unilateral embargo on Macedonia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Such cases can take up to two years to complete. We would expect a decision by the court towards the end of next year.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have occurred in the relationships between the United Nations Operation in Somalia and the administration in north-west Somalia; and what effect these changes have had on the levels of resources and services in the area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None that we are aware of.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what payment his Department has received from the United Nations for the deployment of British troops in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations reimbursement received in financial year 1992-93 totalled £191,663·25, in financial year 1993-94 £20,842,552·45, and in financial year 1994-95 to date £3,158,323·10.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of the chair of the United States Congress's Africa Sub-Committee's (a) visit to Nigeria and (b) initiative in respect of democracy in Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not aware of any plans by a United States congressional sub-committee to visit Nigeria, or of any other United States initiative on Nigeria.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role was played by the Trafalgar House engineering subsidiary at Blockberg in South Africa during the period from 1980 to 1991 in regard to the Iran-Iraq war; and what assistance was granted by the United Kingdom in achieving that role.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

It is for the company concerned to answer for the activities of its South African associates; I am not aware of any assistance provided by Her Majesty's Government to these associates.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland through which legislative processes any proposed changes to the structure of the Forestry Commission will be made.

Sir Hector Monro: The legislative processes required cannot be identified in advance of decisions to make changes to the structure of the Forestry Commission.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the name, location and area in hectares of each piece of Forestry Commission land sold since 31 December 1992, indicating the date upon which the land was sold and where possible the name and address of the purchaser and the price paid.

Sir Hector Monro: Lists giving details of the areas of forest land sold by the Forestry Commission in each calendar year up to and including 1993 are held in the Library of the House. The lists show the name of the purchaser and the price paid where the purchaser has agreed that such information can be made public. The precise date of each sale could be provided only at disproportionate cost. A list of forest land sold in 1994 will be placed in the Library early in 1995.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to him on 9 May 1994, at column 48.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of the Forestry Commission review process.

Sir Hector Monro: The estimated cost of the forest review group was £832,667.

Land Schemes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost in 1993 in Scotland of payments made under (a) the countryside stewardship scheme, (b) the hedgerow incentive scheme, (c) the countryside premium scheme and (d) the wildlife enhancement scheme; and what is his estimate of the cost in 1994.

Sir Hector Monro: The schemes to which the hon. Member refers do not operate in Scotland where different schemes are available to meet different environmental concerns and circumstances.

Building Standards

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to change the building regulations for houses in relation to the introduction of requirements for (a) level access at ground floor, (b) minimum sizes of rooms, (c) circulation space and (d) other barrier-free needs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend intends to consult on a range of building regulation requirements which could be applied to the design of new dwellings for the benefit of disabled people; and we are currently considering comments from a wide range of organisations concerned with disabled people on what topics should be covered in this consultation. Any new requirements would not apply retrospectively to existing dwellings.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with Scottish Homes concerning the introduction of accessible standards as a condition of the granting of housing association grants; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No specific discussions have taken place. The allocation of, and conditions for, funding to registered housing associations are matters entirely for Scottish Homes. I am, however, aware that Scottish Homes supports the barrier-free concept.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to revise the design guides, known as housing handbooks; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are considering what action might be taken in the context of the recommendations of the Ewing committee on housing for people with physical disabilities, published earlier this year, on the handbooks for housing for elderly and disabled people. The advice contained in the handbook on local house condition surveys is being revised by Scottish Homes. There are no plans to review the remaining parts of the "Scottish Housing Handbook".

Housing (Disabled People)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will consult Disability Scotland, its member organisations, local authorities, the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations and other interested parties on the issue of the introduction of a bill of housing of rights for disabled people; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has to issue guidelines to Scottish Homes, the new town development corporations and local housing authorities on appropriate conditions of sale for public housing sector stock in relation to the housing needs and requirements of wheelchair users and others with similar needs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are considering the recommendations of the Ewing committee on housing for people with physical disabilities, and the matters which the hon. Member has raised will be relevant to that process.

Water Authorities

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether it is Government policy that the code of practice for water and sewerage authorities and river purification authorities on conservation, access and recreation remains voluntary.

Sir Hector Monro: Yes.

Area Tourist Boards

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to reorganise area tourist boards covering central Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend on 21 March, at columns 46-47.

Registers of Scotland

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the annual report and accounts of the Registers of Scotland executive agency will be published.

Mr. Lang: Copies of the annual report and accounts were laid before both Houses and are published today.

Historic Scotland

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the annual report and accounts of Historic Scotland for 1993-94 will be published.

Mr. Lang: Historic Scotland's annual report and accounts for 1993-94 are being published today. Copies have been laid before both Houses of Parliament and placed in the Libraries.

Scottish Record Office

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the accounts statement of the Scottish Record Office executive agency will be published.

Mr. Lang: Copies of the accounts statement for 1993-94 have today been placed in the Library.

Fisheries Protection Agency

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the annual report and accounts of the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency will be published.

Mr. Lang: I have today published the report, copies of which have been laid in both Houses.

DEFENCE

Royal Dockyards

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when tenders for the proposed sale of the royal dockyards will be sought.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has today invited tenders from industry for the proposed sale of the royal dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth. A memorandum of information has been issued to the trade unions, and I am arranging for copies of this to be placed in the Library of the House.

Territorial Army

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans for the future role and size of the Territorial Army.

Mr. Rifkind: In June last year, I explained to the House that changes in the international situation had provided us with the opportunity to introduce new roles for the reserves, and I announced detailed proposals for changes to the structure of the Navy's and RAF's reserves. I said that we were also examining the operational requirement for the Army's reserves and hence the size and shape of the Territorial Army. We have now reached certain conclusions.

The role of the Territorial Army will be to act as a general reserve to the Army. It will remain an integral component of our defence forces on mobilisation, and we intend to make greater use of volunteers in peacetime. My announcement in April about the deployment of a composite TA platoon and company to the Falkland Islands was one example of this. We shall also be examining the scope to utilise the TA in new tasks, such as providing exercise opposition forces and in public duties. A specific new role will be to transfer the flying support to the Field Army currently provided by 658 Squadron Army Corps to 666 Squadron (Volunteer) at Netheravon. As a consequence 658 Squadron will be disbanded from April 1995. Two other new tasks will be to role a TA unit as the Army's Nuclear Biological and Chemical Defence Regiment equipped with the Fuchs armoured vehicle; and another as an armoured delivery regiment. These will be challenging and exciting roles for the units concerned.

The formed units of the TA will be retained at their present planned size of 59,000. The recruits pool of 4,500, which was introduced in 1992 as a margin to enable the TA to hold untrained TA personnel above its establishment, is no longer necessary because of the reduced threat to the United Kingdom and the consequent reduction in the level of readiness required of the TA. The recruits pool will therefore be abolished. The detailed structure of the TA is also being examined. This may lead to proposals for re-roling units or other changes. The TA itself will continue to be directly involved in this work, and a further announcement will be made later in the year.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about the Army personnel centre.

Mr. Hanley: In common with other support functions, the Army personnel centre, APC, was closely re-examined in the course of the defence costs study. This further work has confirmed that Kentigern house remains the most cost-effective solution for the APC, and work will now continue towards its establishment although we envisage that fewer staff will be required; this will be subject to consultation with the trade unions in the normal way. It is now planned that the APC will be established in May 1996 with the takeover of functions complete by early 1997, a year later than was previously intended.

MOD Police

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer), of 15 December 1993, Official Report, columns 738-39, whether he is in a position to publish the report of the Ministry of Defence Police study team led by Sir John Blelloch.

Mr. Hanley: Sir John Blelloch's study team was set up at the end of 1993 to review the roles, aims, objectives, structure, pay and conditions of the Ministry of Defence Police, MDP. This work has now been completed and I am placing a copy of the final report in the Libraries of the House.

The report recommends criteria for my Department's consideration for determining the circumstances in which an MDP presence at defence establishments would be likely to be justified by the MDP's constabulary capability or by its ability to meet armed tasks.

The report predicts that the MDP will continue to provide an essential in-house constabulary capability, and that if the MDP were to reduce in size, it would then focus more precisely on tasks requiring constabulary powers. It further concludes that the requirement for such powers needs to be considered on a case-by-case basis. The study team considered various alternatives to the MDP in those of its armed roles which do not require a constabulary capability, and concluded that the use of regular service personnel on new military home service engagements, MHSE, or on local service engagements, LSE, was an option which deserved further study.

Subject to further scrutiny, the report supports existing proposals to change the structure of the MDP to a two-tier one, comprising headquarters and basic command units. It recommends continued study of the MDP's headquarters arrangements, its training organisation, CID, operational support unit and dog services.

The report recommends that the MDP's pay should continue to be linked with that of the Home Department police and that their new pay structure should be used as a basis for determining MDP pay. It also makes recommendations on how the chief constable's pay should be assessed. The report also makes proposals for overtime, rest day and public holiday working reflecting the new Home Department police arrangements, and it also recommends rostering on a "best practices" basis, and that retirement ages and pension arrangements should be reviewed in the light of any further changes to provisions for Home Department police.

Finally, the report proposes that consideration be given to extending and clarifying the MDP's jurisdiction when a suitable opportunity arises.

The report's conclusions are now being carefully considered by my Department and further work has been set in hand where this has been proposed, such as establishing the total requirement for armed guarding and armed security tasks and for a dedicated constabulary presence; completion of the validation of the MHSE/LSE concept; and to complete certain other studies which could affect the organisations dealing with policing and security within my Department.

No conclusions have been reached and further announcements will be made in due course on any proposals, which will be subject to consultation where appropriate.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vacant dwellings are owned by his Department in each parliamentary constituency in Lincolnshire and Humberside; and how many are (a) service married quarters, (b) Ministry of Defence civilian houses and (c) former married quarters in the process of sale.

Mr. Hanley: As at 30 June 1994, my Department owned the following vacant dwellings in each parliamentary constituency in Lincolnshire and Humberside:

Parliamentary constituency	Service married quarters	Former married quarters in the process of sale	Total
Lincolnshire
East Lindsey	78	0	78
Gainsborough and Horncastle	158	0	158
Grantham	212	155	367
Holland with Boston	1	4	5
Lincoln	2	0	2
Humberside
Beverley	20	0	20
Bridlington	7	0	7
Brigg and Cleethorpes	5	0	5

Officers' Residences

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under which vote head of the Appropriation Accounts the official residences of senior officers are listed in respect of (a) maintenance and refurbishment, (b) staffing and (c) other items.

Mr. Hanley: The running costs of official residences for senior staff are listed in the following voteheads of the appropriation accounts:

(a) Maintenance and refurbishment – Vote 4 section A.
(b) Staffing – Vote 1 section A for Navy staff, section B for Army staff, section C for RAF staff and Section D for civilian staff.
(c) Other items such as electricity and other services would fall to a variety of different voteheads.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total of actual payments made as salaries to British troops for their service in the former Yugoslavia to 30 June.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what costs his Department has incurred through the deployment of British troops in former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Hanley: The cost of the British troop deployment in the former Yugoslavia to date is some £143 million. In accordance with long-established interdepartmental arrangements, my Department recovers the additional cost of United Kingdom participation for peacekeeping operations in the former Yugoslavia from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Colchester Training Centre

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to market test the military corrections training centre at Colchester.

Mr. Hanley: A study by my Department is currently considering the feasibility of market testing the military corrective training centre at Colchester.

Woolwich (Lake Contamination)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the Woolwich Garrison Angling Society and others regarding possible contamination of the lakes on his Department's land at Woolwich.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has received one letter from the hon. Member concerning the lakes and one from a local resident concerning contamination of land at the Woolwich garrison.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about land contamination on his Department's land at Woolwich.

Mr. Hanley: A small amount of low-level radioactivity has been found in the ground in parts of the Woolwich garrison site. This has arisen from paint used in luminising operations carried out during the 1950s and 1960s in a workshop that has since been decontaminated. The full extent of the ground contamination is being assessed so that any necessary remedial action can be undertaken.

Equipment

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional equipment will be available to Her Majesty's forces consequent upon his decisions on "Front Line First".

Mr. Aitken: I refer my hon. Friend to the announcement made earlier today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Fighting Ships

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a breakdown of the estimate of the amounts required to complete fighting ships on order and to be ordered as published in table 1 to class 1, vote 3 of the 1994-95 supply estimates.

Mr. Aitken: While, for internal planning purposes, programme and budgetary projections are made over a 10-year period, these lack the status of a ministerially approved programme. It is, therefore, not our practice to make available estimates of expected expenditure on individual projects beyond that approved for the current financial year.

ENVIRONMENT

Fur Trapping

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether his officials will vote in favour of the implementation of the EC import ban on furs from countries which continue to use the leghold trap or which do not have internationally agreed humane trapping standards from 1 January 1995;

(2) what action his officials are taking to support EC regulation No. 3254 against the Canadian Government's claims that the regulation is illegal under the GATT.

Mr. Atkins: The Government strongly support EC measures to end the use of leghold traps, laid down in regulation (3254/91) adopted by the Council of Ministers on 4 November 1991. The ban on the import of furs from countries which still use leghold traps is due to take effect on 1 January 1995. However, the regulation allows a one-year suspension of the ban for countries which have made sufficient progress towards developing alternative, humane methods of trapping. The United Kingdom supported steps by the European Commission to identify which countries had made such progress through a questionnaire. However, the Commission subsequently proposed to the management committee of officials that a one-year suspension of the ban should be offered to all countries, irrespective of the progress they had made. The United Kingdom abstained on this proposal, with the support of one other country, and made it clear that we believed that a blanket exemption exceeded the power granted to the Commission and the committee of officials by regulation 3254/91. However, the Commission's proposal was adopted by qualified majority. The United Kingdom will continue to support the objectives of the regulation.

At a preliminary GATT hearing earlier this year, the European Commission made clear its view that regulation 3254/91 was required to implement the Community's obligations under the Berne convention on the conservation of European wildlife.

Global Warming

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make representations to the intergovernmental panel on climate change to ensure that cost benefit analyses applied to the issue of global warming do not value the lives of people in different parts of the world unequally.

Mr. Atkins: The intergovernmental panel on climate change is currently preparing a revised assessment of scientific, technical and socio-economic information relevant to understanding the risks of human induced climate change, which will cover inter alia an assessment of methods for determining the costs and benefits of action to mitigate climate change. Drafts of IPCC's assessments will be subject to detailed review by experts and governments, and in reviewing the material that IPCC produces in this area, the Government will give careful consideration to the different assumptions that have been made.

Single Regeneration Budget

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many single regeneration budget outline bids have been submitted to each regional Government office; and if he will list all the organisations, by region, which have submitted an outline bid.

Mr. Baldry: Several hundred approaches, varying considerably in type and in their state for preparation, have been made to Government offices for the regions. Each regional office will make available summary information about outline bids as soon as possible.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on existing Government policy for the disposal of radioactive waste; and if he will list the legal instruments and policy statements on which this is based;

(2) if he will make a statement on the existing Government policy for the interim storage of low-level, intermediate-level and high-level radioactive wastes; and if he will list the legal instruments and policy statements on which this is based;

(3) if his Department is considering shallow burial of radioactive waste as an option within the radioactive waste management review;

(4) when his Department has taken a decision to rule out shallow burial as an option for the disposal of low-level and short-lived intermediate level radioactive waste.

Mr. Atkins: The preliminary conclusions of the review of radioactive waste management policy will be published later in the summer as a basis for consultation. The consultation document will set out the issues covered by the review against the background of existing policies.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the sites of special scientific interest in England, showing who has ownership or responsibility for the management of those areas and what financial support for their upkeep was given by his Department in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: Information on individual SSSI management agreements is confidential. The number of SSSIs with management agreements and the total amounts of payments for England are detailed in the second annual report of English Nature. The total cost of these payments in 1993-94 was £7·2 million which came from the grant in aid provided to English Nature by my Department.

1-19 Victoria Street

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms of the lease on 1 to 19 Victoria Street.

Mr. Baldry: Following completion of the refurbishment by the Department of Trade and Industry, a new lease will be taken from Legal and General Assurance Society Ltd. for 25 years from February 1996. The agreed market rent is subject to open market reviews at the 10th, 15th and 20th years. The tenant is responsible for maintenance and insurance. The remaining terms reflect current market practice.

Lavatories

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what measures his Department is planning to take to ensure that lavatory cisterns in the United Kingdom continue to be fitted only with flushing apparatus which prevents the waste of water;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the increase in the amount of water wasted annually in the United Kingdom of lifting existing byelaw requirements for water waste prevention in lavatory cisterns; and what would be the effect of such an increase on the price of water to consumers.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are committed to promoting the efficient use of water. In preparing measures to replace the current water byelaws in England and Wales we will also need to have regard to the requirements of the European Union's single market legislation and to European product standards. My Department has recently invited tenders for a research project on water economy, which includes an evaluation of various flushing devices such as those commonly used in mainland Europe.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 560, if he will list the organisations or individuals from whom he has received representations on THORP, indicating in each case when he responded to the respective representations.

Mr. Atkins: Since the judgment on 4 March, the following organisations have sent letters about the environmental risks associated with the operation of THORP:

Kvennalistin Group and the Women's Alliance, reply sent on 23 March;

Trinity College Dublin Environmental Society, reply sent on 30 March;

Saffron Walden Group Against Nuclear Weapons, reply sent on 1 April;

Plutonium Action Hiroshima, reply sent on 5 April.

Greenpeace, reply sent on 29 June.

Water Charges

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the advantages of using council tax bands as a method of charging for water.

Mr. Atkins: I have considered the advantages and disadvantages of using council tax bands as a method of charging for water. I remain to be convinced that a method of charging which is not based on the amount of water used will necessarily be fairer than one based on rateable values. If, however, the industry can provide analysis that supports the view that council tax valuation bands provide a fair and reasonable basis for water charging, I would be prepared to consider that evidence.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of homes in England and Wales pay flat rate charges for water supply.

Mr. Atkins: Just under 1 per cent. of homes in England and Wales pay flat rate charges for water supply.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the regulations to implement the EU habitats directive will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Atkins: Draft regulations for approval under the affirmative resolution procedure were laid before the House on Monday 4 July.

Transport and Highways Authorities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received during the local goverment review on the responsibilities of the future unitary authorities for transport and highways, including planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have received over 10,000 letters about the review of local government in England since July 1992. Many refer to specific local authority functions. As we receive the Local Government Commission's final reports for individual review areas we are looking closely at its recommendations to ensure that they enable adequate provision to be made for all local government functions, including transport and transport planning. All representations will be considered before final decisions are made.

Business Rates, Harrogate

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many outstanding appeals there are against valuations for business rates administered by the valuation officer in the Harrogate area; and what is the average amount of time before appeals are settled for business rates.

Mr. Curry: As at 30 June there were 1,454 non-domestic rating appeals outstanding in the Harrogate district council area. The length of time taken to settle each appeal depends on the relative complexity of individual cases.

Housing Benefits

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table setting out for each year between 1988-89 and 1993-94 the amount spent by his Department on housing-related subsidies and grants (a) including all expenditures related to housing benefit and (b) excluding all expenditures related to housing benefit; if, following the Treasury's summer economic forecast 1994, he will publish projections for each of the years from 1994-95 to 1996-97; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Information on housing subsidies and grants for the years requested has been published in the housing chapters of the DOE reports for 1992, 1993 and 1994. Figures in the later reports supersede those for earlier years.

No revisions have been made to the estimates as a result of the publication of the Treasury's summer economic forecast. Revised estimates will be made in due course as part of the current public expenditure survey.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the measures currently in use for monitoring ground level carbon monoxide emissions and other motor vehicle pollutants.

Mr. Atkins: The Government fund a network of air quality monitoring stations which measure levels of motor vehicle pollutants. This includes 48 continuous automatic sites, two of which are operated in collaboration with local authorities, of which:

30 monitor ozone,
25 monitor nitrogen dioxide,
19 monitor carbon monoxide,
12 monitor fine particles (PM_{10}) and 8 monitor hydrocarbons including benzene, 1,3 butadiene and ozone precursors.

Nitrogen dioxide is also monitored at over 1,200 sites in the United Kingdom in collaboration with local authorities using non-automatic techniques.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to achieve a 20 per cent. reduction of carbon dioxide emissions by 2005.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), on 14 June 1994, Official Report, column 339.

New Forest

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding his future intentions for the New Forest and surrounding area.

Mr. Atkins: In September 1992, the Government published a consultation document on the future of the New Forest. The document proposed to give the wider New Forest area—the so-called New Forest heritage area —a statutory designation and to apply to it a planning regime similar to that which applies in the national parks. It also proposed to establish a statutory body, based on the existing New Forest committee, to co-ordinate the management of this wider area.

The consultation produced a very substantial response. Some 220 people and organisations gave their views to the Department, and I am today arranging for those responses and a summary of them to be made available in my Department's Library. I have continued to receive extensive representations about these matters, totalling to the present some 1,000 further letters.

The core of the forest is already well protected against inappropriate development through the New Forest Acts and the existence of that land owned by the Crown and administered by the Forestry Commission. The Government have recently reinforced this protection through the designation of the core forest area as a special protection area under the EC birds directive.

However, the New Forest lies between two of the most rapidly developing areas in the south of England. The Government therefore recognised the need to protect a wider area, where the development pressures are greatest, but which is essential if the traditional management of the forest is to be maintained.

These aspects of the Government's proposals received overwhelming support. We therefore intend to apply to the wider New Forest area, the same planning policies as would apply if that area were a national park. These policies are set out in my Department's planning policy guidance note 7 and elsewhere and I am today asking the relevant local planning authorities to ensure that in their development plans and planning decisions they apply those policies. I also intend to take early steps to amend the General Development Order to extend the scope of development control as applies in national parks to that wider area. The new planning regime will apply to the definition of the New Forest heritage area as it emerges from the current process of preparing and adopting local plans.

A number of representations have been made to include the Avon valley in the heritage area. I have therefore also today written to New Forest district council asking it to look closely at the merits of this and consider whether there is a case for incorporating the area concerned.

These measures will deliver the necessary planning protections to the wider area. They have also the advantage of being able to be implemented immediately without recourse to primary legislation for which there is little prospect of parliamentary time in the near future.

The consultation revealed far less agreement about the future of the New Forest Committee. Whilst there was acknowledgement of the need for co-ordinated management over the wider area, some considered that to turn the committee into a statutory body would merely add an unnecessary layer of bureaucracy to the administration of the forest. Some also feared that the committee would find itself in conflict with those already charged with the management of the forest and that it might ultimately seek to usurp their roles. However, the Government have always emphasised that its proposals did not envisage a new body taking over the existing powers and responsibilities of the local authorities, the Forestry Commission, the verderers or other agencies operating in the forest.

The New Forest committee emerged in 1990 following the New Forest review. The Government feel that, in the light of the reservations expressed about its role, it would be unwise to give it statutory status. They therefore do not intend to proceed with these aspects of their original proposals.

The New Forest is a unique area. Not only is it a valued part of our national heritage and an internationally important range of habitats but its character is the result of nine hundred years of distinctive management. The Government are firmly committed to the conservation of these habitats and that traditional character. I believe the steps we have taken today will greatly contribute to these objectives.

Canada Geese

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policies he has for controlling the Canada geese population by non-lethal means; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 July 1994]: My Department has set up a working group to develop a management strategy to reduce the scale of damage caused by Canada geese.

Later this month we intend to publish a leaflet prepared by the working group giving advice to estate managers, park authorities and landowners on legal techniques for controlling Canada geese. The techniques include a variety of non-lethal methods such as scaring, habitat management, adjustment of cropping patterns, alteration of feeding areas and fencing.

The group will continue to develop a long-term management strategy.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 131, what information he has on exactly which method or methods have been used to kill Canada geese in London parks this year.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 July 1994]: This year, action taken under licence to kill or control Canada geese has included shooting and egg pricking.

Air Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research will be undertaken to discover the proportion of the population which (a) was aware of his Department's smog alerts, (b) took action to avoid possible health effects and (c) took voluntary action based on his Department's advice to minimise air pollution during the pollution episode which started on 2 July.

Mr. Atkins: My Department issued a press notice on the afternoon of Friday 1 July, warning that poor air quality was forecast. The notice was distributed to 275 media outlets and individual reporters, and resulted in over 30 press articles from 2 to 6 July. The number of phone calls to the air quality bulletin freephone line increased substantially. I drew attention to the Government's advice in the course of radio and television interviews over this period.

My Department regularly commissions, and acts upon, research on the public's response to air quality bulletins, and has already commissioned a survey on public awareness and actions during the recent episode.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many air pollution measuring stations are in the Manchester area; where the stations are located; how the public are notified of the readings; and what measures are taken when dangerous limits are recorded.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The Department of the Environment monitors air pollutants in the Manchester area at one continuous automatic site, and, with the co-operation of local authorities, at 41 sites using non-automatic techniques. Details of site locations and pollutants measured are in the tables.

Information from all the Department's national automatic monitoring sites, including the site in Manchester, are used to provide air quality bulletins to the public, giving daily information on air pollution via a Freephone helpline, Ceefax and Teletext and a variety of other news media. The bulletin includes information on levels of pollutants together with a forecast and health advice on what to do should levels become high. In addition, information from the Department's non-automatic monitoring sites is published periodically.

Development Areas

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many permanent jobs have been created in each development area in each year since 1981 net of (A) losses and (b) relocations from the adjoining localities.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Reliable data on net employment in urban development areas are not available. Gross jobs created by each urban development corporation up to 31 March 1994 are as follows:

	Number
Birmingham Heartlands	611

NORTHERN IRELAND

Benefit Claimants

14. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of benefit claimants in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The latest available figures show that the number of successful benefit claims in Northern Ireland is 1,094,426. This figure will not equate to the number of individuals receiving benefit because there are claimants who receive more than one benefit.

Police

15. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next hopes to meet the new chairman of the Police Authority to discuss the grading and pay of police officers.

Sir John Wheeler: The new chairman of the Police Authority has not requested a meeting on this subject. Were he to do so, the Secretary of State would be delighted to meet him.

Cross-border Security

16. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with the Irish Government in regard to cross-border security co-operation.

17. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-border security co-operation between the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic.

Sir John Wheeler: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring).

18. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent the Anglo-Irish and the Downing street declaration have had a material impact on cross-border security co-operation and operations against terrorism in the Province.

Sir John Wheeler: The greatly enhanced co-operation in opposing terrorism, which is so apparent since 1985, in large part derives from the closer relations resulting from the agreement and the declaration.

Security

19. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

23. Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the right hon. Gentlemen to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) and for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Sweeney).

Cross-border Institutions

20. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has held on setting up cross-border institutions.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The British and Irish Governments have been discussing the possibility of producing a joint framework document to aid the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland in reaching a comprehensive political settlement. "Strand Two" matters have been among those discussed.

Downing Street Declaration

22. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had about progress to peace based on the Downing street declaration of December 1993.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Castle Point (Dr. Spink) and for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) and to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain).

One-parent Families

25. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many families with children, and what proportion of all such families, live in households headed by one parent; and what percentage of those receive income support.

Mr. Ancram: The 1991 census of population enumerated 38,060 households with dependent children headed by one parent in Northern Ireland. This represents 17·6 per cent. of all households with dependent children. The figure for the percentage of families headed by one parent in receipt of income support is not available but as at May 1992 regardless of status as head of a household or not, there were 35,380 one parent families in receipt of income support.

Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989

26. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current position with regard to the review of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989.

Mr. Ancram: The arrangements for the review are currently under consideration and an announcement will be made shortly.

Investment

21. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about future investment intentions in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's continued interest in these matters. I receive representations from many quarters and I am pleased to record that the Industrial Development Board has just completed its best-ever year of inward investment.

27. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the latest figures for business investment; and what were the figures in each of the past three years.

Mr. Tim Smith: Comprehensive information on investment in production industries for United Kingdom regions is available only from the annual census of production. The most recent figures from ACOP relate to 1991 and show that net capital expenditure by manufacturers in Northern Ireland amounted to £333·8 million. Corresponding figures for 1990 and 1989 were £330·7 million and £300·8 million respectively.

Parades

28. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding the conduct of the parades on the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne.

Sir John Wheeler: Parades marking the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne were held at 19 major venues throughout Northern Ireland on 12 July, and passed off without serious incident. Policing arrangements at parades are an operational matter for the RUC who, in fulfilling their responsibility to maintain public order and safety, consulted widely beforehand with both parade organisers and local communities.

Inter-party Talks

29. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the inter-party talks.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Members for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) and for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick).

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Dr. John Catford

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General what consultations he has had with the Crown Prosecution Service, Wales region, in relation to the decision not to proceed with charges against Dr. John Catford with respect to the allegations of expenses irregularities while chief executive of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

The Attorney-General: The decision to which the hon. Member refers was taken by the Crown Prosecution Service. The only involvement of my office in the case was to procure briefing for the purposes of replying to previous questions by the hon. Member.

Juvenile Criminals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to improve the operation of the Crown Prosecution Service in relation to juvenile criminals.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service continues to train lawyers as youth offender specialists with responsibility for reviewing files involving alleged offences committed by juveniles. The revised "Code for Crown Prosecutors" sets out the balance to be struck between the interests of young offenders and those of the community. Time limits in cases involving juveniles have been agreed with the police and courts to achieve swifter justice.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 15 July 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Royal Courts of Justice

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much has been spent on the new extension to the Royal Courts of Justice in the Strand; how much has been spent on facilities for (a) members of the public, (b) plaintiffs' prosecution witnesses, (c) defendants and defence witnesses, (d) solicitors and barristers, (e) judges and (f) administrative staff.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The works cost of this scheme amounted to £15·4 million including VAT. No elemental cost breakdown of the areas to which the hon. Gentleman refers can be produced without incurring disproportionate cost.

Civil Enforcement Agencies

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to announce the findings of his Department's 1992 review of the organisation and management of civil enforcement agencies.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 23 June, Official Report, column 247. The consultation exercise raised a wide range of difficult issues. The Lord Chancellor is continuing to give consideration to these, and is not in a position to say when an announcement will be made.

Small Claims Procedure

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce paper arbitrations into the small claims procedure.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are no plans at present to introduce paper arbitrations into the small claims procedure.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has in this Parliament to raise the small claim court limit from its current level of £1,000.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor will review the monetary limit for automatic reference into the county court arbitration procedure later in the year. No new figure has yet been decided and no date for implementation has yet been set.

EMPLOYMENT

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the consultants used by his Department on standard development work associated with NVQs in each of the years 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94, together with the specific subject areas on which they worked, the cost of each contract and whether these contracts were publicly advertised and tendered.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Travel-to-Interview Scheme

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to extend the eligibility for the travel-to-interview scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Mr. Andrew Smith, dated 15 July 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about extending the eligibility for the Travel to Interview Scheme (TIS). I am replying in the Chief Executive's absence.

We are presently considering a package of changes to improve the working of the Scheme within available resources. In doing so we are re-examining many of the rules which cause people most concern. These include rules about the salary level cut-off point, the duration of the job applied for and help where a second or third interview is necessary for the same job. In making such changes we have first to be sure that the Scheme remains an incentive for unemployed people to widen their job search and that it does not subsidise activity which would, in any case, take place.

If it is possible to redevelop the scheme in the way we wish, we would hope to be able to introduce the changes this year.

I hope this is helpful.

EDUCATION

Special Education, Manchester

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when his Department received the city of Manchester's proposals for reorganising special education in the city; when he will be responding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Manchester city council notified the Department on 20 July 1993 of its intention to reorganise special education in the city. Formal proposals were submitted to the Department on 1 October.

The council was notified on 31 March 1994 of the Secretary of State's decision to approve the reorganisation of the Ewing special school. On 11 July, the council was informed that the Secretary of State had given qualified approval, subject to the satisfactory completion of building work, to the reorganisation and closure of other special schools in the city.

Nursery Education

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many nursery units and nursery schools have been granted capital funding in each of the last five years; and what was the total amount of funds granted to nursery units and nursery schools in capital allocation in each of the last five years.

Mr. Robin Squire: Nursery education does not represent a separate category in the distribution of annual capital guidelines to local education authorities. Authorities' plans for spending on nursery classes and schools are taken into account in the formula calculation of the ACG category covering improvement and replacement work. Capital spending at all county and controlled schools is entirely the responsibility of LEAs.

For voluntary aided and special agreement schools the governors are responsible for building work and may claim grant of up to 85 per cent. on their expenditure. The table sets out the number of new nursery units approved for funding since 1989-90, together with projected allocations for total governors' expenditure:

Voluntary aided and special agreement schools

Year	Number of new units	Governors' Expenditure (£000)
[1]1989-90	5	898
[1]1990-91	5	913
1991-92	13	1,109
1992-93	13	1,089
1993-94	19	1,202
[2]1994-95	10	1,023

[1] Projects flowing from statutory proposals approved after the annual capital announcement were not recorded separately and may be omitted from the 1989-90 and 1990-91 statistics.
[2] To date.

Figures are not available for funding work within existing aided school nurseries.

The allocation of capital grants to grant-maintained schools is now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the Funding Agency to reply to the hon. Member.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gordon McNally

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 7 July, Official Report, column 274, (1) on what three dates he attended functions at which Mr. Gordon McNally was present; at what location he attended functions at which Mr. Gordon McNally was present; and for what purpose and in what circumstances the functions were held at which both he and Mr. Gordon McNally were present;

(2) in what official circumstances he has been photographed in a group with Mr. Gordon McNally.

The Prime Minister: The three large functions which I attended, at which Mr. McNally also attended, were on 29 September 1992, 13 November 1992 and 23 March 1993. Photographs are often taken at such events and may have been taken on each occasion.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has sought the views of the Data Protection Registrar in relation to the possible introduction of a national identity number; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to introduce a national identity number. The question of a national identity card scheme is kept under review. If we decided to introduce such a scheme there would be a full consultation exercise.

Ex-service People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 11 July, Official Report, column 377, if it is his intention at present or at any time in the future to implenent the resolution of the House of 1 July on welfare of ex-service people.

The Prime Minister: We have no such plans at present.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Bodies

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to hold further public consultation on the future of English Nature and the Countryside Commission for England.

Mr. Atkins: The public consultation which has already taken place produced well over 300 replies, which have been taken fully into account by the study group considering the possible merger of the Countryside Commission and English Nature. There are no plans at present for a further round of consultation.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the final report of the study group on the future of English Nature and the Countryside Commission for England will be published; and if he will also publish the evidence submitted.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will wish to consider the issue of the report further once he has made up his mind on the results of the study. Copies of responses to the consultation will be made available in the usual way when a decision is announced.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the study group on the future of English Nature and the Countryside Commission for England has completed its report; and when he expects to make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Yes. My right hon. Friend will make a statement when he has had an opportunity to draw his own conclusions from the study.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the London Ecology Committee in relation to the study group on the future of English Nature and the Countryside Commission for England, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The detailed submission from the London Ecology Committee was one of well over 300 responses received to the public consultation. All the views expressed have been taken fully into account by the study group.

Safer Cities

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to make an announcement about proposals for further safer cities projects.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce that, as part of our undertaking to meet existing commitments to programmes now coming within the single regeneration budget, we propose to set up another 20 safer cities projects in this financial year.

The areas invited to participate in the next wave are:

Bolton
Bournemouth
Brighton
Camden
Easington
Great Grimsby
Hackney
Kensington and Chelsea
Lincoln
Liverpool
Newham
Norwich
Oxford
Portsmouth
Sandwell
Scunthorpe
Southwark
Wansbeck
Westminster
York

Each of these areas has above average rates of recorded crime and significant evidence of deprivation.

Subject to confirmation of support for a project from each of the key local agencies—local authorities, police and probation service—we shall shortly seek tenders for their management from organisations with experience in crime prevention and project management.

In addition to the running costs being met by the Department of the Environment, each project will have access to grant funding of up to £100,000 a year, for three years, to support local crime prevention and community safety initiatives.

We expect the projects to be set up towards the end of 1994.

Funding for these projects represents an existing commitment under the SRB, and is additional to resources set aside for initiatives starting in 1995-96, approved in accordance with the bidding guidance issued on 14 April 1994, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Building Regulations

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he proposes to make to the Building Regulations 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is today laying before Parliament the Building (Amendment) Regulations 1994. The main purpose of these amendments is to strengthen the requirements of part L of the Building Regulations 1991 for the conservation of fuel and power; to improve part F on ventilation; and to simplify part A on structural stability. They also introduce a new regulation 13A to regularise unauthorised development.

In revising part L, the aim has been to reduce CO_2 emissions from buildings by incorporating cost-effective measures, but to do so in a way which does not introduce unacceptable technical risks and maintains some flexibility for designers. The Building Research Establishment estimates that the changes will improve the energy performance of space and water heating in houses by some 25 per cent. to 35 per cent. compared with current building regulations standards, with similar improvements in the non-domestic.

The revisions to part F have been introduced to improve and simplify the current provisions for ventilation in dwellings and to provide builders with a wider range of options on how this can be achieved. Requirements for non-domestic buildings are included in building regulations for the first time to reflect the relevant requirements of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 so that new building work should not require subsequent adaptation.

To provide sufficient time for the industry, including builders, designers and building control bodies, to assimilate the changes, parts L and F will come into force on 1 July 1995.

The revision to part A simplifes the requirement relating to disproportionate collapse of certain public buildings without detriment to safety. The new regulation 13A has been introduced to allow local authorities to certify building work which should have been subject to control but was previously unauthorised. The local authorities will be able to charge fees for carrying out this new task—fees which will be prescribed in new regulations to be laid before Parliament shortly. The revision to part A comes into force on 1 September 1994, and the new regulation 13A on 1 October 1994.

Copies of the new editions of approved documents F and L and the related cost compliance assessments have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Waste Shipments Regulation

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue guidance on the EC waste shipments regulation.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment has published a circular, DoE circular 13/94, giving guidance on the implementation of the EC waste shipments regulations and the associated Transfrontier Shipment of Waste Regulations 1994. The circular will assist waste regulation authorities and the waste disposal and recovery industries to follow the requirements of the new system.

The final text of the circular reflects the outcome of public consultation on a draft document issued in March, and incorporates various changes to meet the concerns and interests of industry, local authorities and the public. The circular explains the provisions and administrative procedures of the waste shipments regulations and United Kingdom regulations, describes the roles and responsibilities of the various parties involved in the shipments process, and offers guidance on issues such as the options available for the provision of financial guarantees, and local authorities' administrative charges.

A compliance cost assessment has been undertaken in relation to the Transfrontier Shipment of Waste Regulations 1994. Copies of both circular 13/94 and the compliance cost assessment have been placed in the Library.

The new system strengthens controls over transfrontier shipments of waste in the interests of protecting human health and the environment. We are confident that the guidance in this circular will help both industry and regulators to get to grips with the demands of the new regime.

Pennine Bridleway

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his decision on the proposed Pennine bridleway.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today signified that he is minded to approve the Countryside Commission's report in respect of the Pennine bridleway, with modifications to the route as submitted by the Commission.

Further consultation will now take place with the local authorities through whose areas the route passes to confirm their agreement to the modification put forward.

Coastal Zone Policies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent consultation exercise on coastal zone policies.

Mr. Atkins: In October 1993, the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office published two discussion papers on coastal issues: "Managing The Coast" and "Development Below Low Water Mark". Both papers were prepared with the full co-operation of all relevant Departments. They fulfilled the commitments made by the Government in their response, Cm 2011: July 1992, to the report from the Environment Select Committee, April 1992, on coastal zone protection and planning.

Extensive comments were received on the two papers and reflected a wide range of views. I am today arranging for those comments and a summary of them to be made available in my Department's Library.

The Government recognise the heightened importance attached to effective management of the coastal zone, and to ensuring that a balance is achieved between the commercial, environmental, leisure and other demands—for example, military needs—on such areas, in accordance with the principles of sustainable development.

Following full consideration, we remain confident that existing statutory systems—including the specialised sectoral controls which apply offshore—are the most effective means of regulating development in the coastal zone. Accordingly, in recognition of the distinct needs of land and marine environments, we believe that a case has not been made for any general extension below low water mark of the jurisdiction of town and country planning legislation. However, we shall keep under continuing review the scope for making appropriate improvements to present arrangements: for example, to ensure maximum transparency and liaison in the decision-making process. We shall also consider further the scope for addressing some more detailed points raised in responses to the recent consultation exercise.

However, we accept that there is concern in some quarters that new means of taking an overview of the impact and development of policies towards the coast are required, and that increased emphasis should be placed on the wider management of the coastal zone on the basis of defined goals and objectives.

We have already taken a number of initiatives to improve the planning and management of the coast: for example, publication of planning policy guidance note 20 on coastal planning; the launch last autumn of a strategy for flood and coastal defence in England and Wales, recent proposals for a revised regime for the dredging of marine aggregates, and more broadly, the continuing role of the interdepartmental group on coastal policy, which provides a vehicle for effective liaison on coastal zone matters within central Government.

We have also laid before Parliament regulations to implement the provisions of the EC habitats directive, which include a new approach to the conservation of certain internationally important marine areas, and have supported the work of the nature conservation agencies in promoting the drawing up of management plans in a number of important estuaries.

We now propose to take further measures to enhance the effective co-ordination of policies for the coastal zone in England. Responding to the call for clear and comprehensive objectives, we intend to publish within a year a statement of national policy guidelines for the coast. This will draw together in a convenient form policy guidance already provided on coastal issues. In turn, public and private bodies, agencies and organisations will be asked to have due regard to the principles set out in the proposed guidelines, when giving consideration to actions which may impinge directly, or indirectly, on the coastal zone.

Secondly, reflecting the priority which we attach to informed discussion on coastal issues, we intend to create by the end of this year a standing forum on coastal zone management. It will have a broad and balanced membership, including central and local government, and commercial, conservation and recreation interests. We will consult on its membership and terms of reference. Such a forum should be an effective vehicle for promoting understanding of the national guidelines and building on liaison arrangements at regional and local level already established. It will complement, but not overlap with, existing ministerial meetings dealing with specific issues such as flood and coastal defence.

Thirdly, in recognition of the growing role and coverage of coastal zone management plans, we believe there is a strong case for highlighting good practice and clarifying, where necessary, the interaction of the different elements of such management. The proposed forum will have an important role here in ensuring effective co-operation between the responsible bodies. We shall therefore set this work in hand, and, in addition, consider how best to monitor the management plans being developed locally.

Lastly, we shall proceed with the proposed review of byelaw powers relating to coastal management, and broaden its scope to look more widely at the general issue of implementing coastal zone management and the relationship between the voluntary principle and regulatory support. We shall therefore establish an interdepartmental working party to consider these matters, and in undertaking its task the group will consult widely with interested parties.

Colleagues in the Scottish Office are currently preparing a discussion paper on coastal policy which will reflect Scotland's distinctive circumstances. It is expected that this paper will be published in the autumn. Colleagues in Northern Ireland also hope to issue a consultation paper on coastal policy to interested parties later in the year, taking into account the different local government framework which exists. The Secretary of State for Wales will consider the position in Wales.

Linked with existing initiatives and measures, we believe that these proposals offer a sound basis for achieving increased responsiveness to the specific needs of the coastal zone, and will make a major contribution to helping reconcile conflicting pressures on this vital and potentially vulnerable resource.

Procurement and Contractural Arrangements

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received a copy of Sir Michael Latham's final report of the joint Government-industry review of procurement and contractual arrangements in the United Kingdom construction industry.

Mr. Baldry: Sir Michael Latham has now presented his final report, which was due this month, and I have received a copy. Sir Michael will publish his report on Monday 18 July and copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

Sir Michael's report contains recommendations to Government, the construction industry and its clients about practical reforms to reduce conflict and litigation, and to improve productivity and competitiveness. The Government are now considering the report and the recommendations contained in it.

A conference, organised by the industry groups involved in the review, is being held on 25 July. It will provide a platform for Government, the construction industry and its clients to give an initial response to the report's recommendations.

Water Charges

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of family expenditure in each quintile of income was taken up by water charges in 1987 and 1992.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

The amounts and proportions of weekly household expenditure on water and sewerage charges for each quintile of income are given in the table for the United Kingdom for 1987 and 1992. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10p.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposal on the costing of environmental protection arising from (a) the Marrakesh meeting on the implementation of the Uruguay round by GATT and (b) recent EU council decisions he intends to put to the forthcoming meeting of the G7 in Naples.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

At Marrakesh in April, Ministers decided that the World Trade Organisation should establish a committee on trade and environment. G7 leaders at the Naples summit welcomed the new World Trade Organisation's work on trade and the environment.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment reported the outcome of the last EU Environment Council meeting in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Sir K. Carlisle) on 17 June, Official Report, column 671. G7 leaders at the Naples summit said that they supported the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development in reviewing progress in the implementation of the Rio process.

They also welcomed the restructuring and the replenishment of the global environment facility and supported its choice as the permanent financial mechanism of the biological diversity and climate change conventions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive replies to his two letters of 7 June concerning constituents ref. 09/06/94 and 08/06/94.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I wrote to the hon. Member on 14 July and understand that the Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Fareham, also replied on that date.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement before the summer recess regarding his proposals on private wheel clamping.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans to do so.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's current practice in respect of immigration officials passing on details of the claims of persons seeking asylum to the embassies of countries from which asylum seekers have travelled.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not our practice to disclose any information about an individual asylum application to the diplomatic post of the asylum seeker's country of origin.

Immigration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the types of personal data held by his Department which relate to the administration of immigration procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce measures to give trading standards officers the power to control car boot sales.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

Trading standards officers already have extensive powers to enforce legislation intended to protect consumers. These powers can be exercised at car boot sales.

TRANSPORT

Steel Rolls (Lorry Transportation)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if steel rolls are required to be secured to a lorry cradle during transportation along minor roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Steel rolls and the cradles upon which they are carried are both required to be secured to a lorry when they are in transit on any road.

The safety of loads on vehicles used on roads is controlled by the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986. Regulation 100(2) requires that any load carried by a vehicle be secured, if necessary, by additional restraints so that it is not likely to cause danger or nuisance by moving, falling or blowing off the vehicle. This would apply to steel rolls.

Section 8 of the Department of Transport's publication "Code of Practice on the Safety of Loads on Vehicles" advises operators of the best way to secure metal rolls to their vehicles.

Air Services (Liberalisation)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on developments on the liberalisation of United Kingdom-United States air services.

Mr. MacGregor: I am writing today to the United States Transportation Secretary saying that I am prepared to give exceptional approval for airlines to bring in new services to replace certain transatlantic routes which have recently been or are about to be suspended. I am therefore offering United States airlines rights to serve Manchester-Los Angeles and Stansted-New York-Chicago.

I am making this offer in order to help to maintain services for consumers while we continue to seek to make progress in securing a wider liberalisation of United Kingdom-United States air services. I hope that the United States will soon be in a posiiton to return to the liberalisation negotiations. This offer is a further demonstration of my determination to secure liberal changes to the current air services agreement in the interests of consumers on both sides of the Atlantic.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the public service obligation grant awarded to Network SouthEast in each year since 1978, in both cash and 1993-94 prices.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows the level of public service obligation grant spent on Network SouthEast since 1985-86. Figures are not readily available to split PSO by sector before 1985-86. Up to 1986-87 figures are shown for London and the south-east region.

Year	£ million Cash	£ million 1993-94 Prices
1985-86	253	388

Road Schemes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what costs have been incurred by his Department in developing road schemes subsequently abandoned in respect of (a) Preston southern and western bypass, (b) Hereford bypass, (c) Durham western bypass, (d) the A40 north of Oxford and Headington bypasses and (e) the A40 Longford-Gorsley improvement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 23 June 1994]: As the information requested relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 12 July 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the costs incurred in developing road schemes subsequently abandoned in respect of (a) Preston Southern and Western Bypass, (b) Hereford Bypass, (c) Durham Western Bypass, (d) the A40 North of Oxford and Headington Bypasses and (e) the A40 Longford-Gorsley Improvement.

The information is as follows:

	£ million
a. Preston Southern and Western Bypass.	1·62
b. Hereford Bypass—this scheme has not been abandoned; it is a Priority 2 scheme in the revised Roads Programme.
c. Durham Western Bypass.	2·00
d. The A40 North of Oxford and Headington Bypasses.	2·196
e. The A40 Longford-Gorsley Improvement.	5·500

These costs include consultants' fees, preparation costs, surveys, advance land purchase and VAT.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Bilateral Aid Programme

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amount of the United Kingdom's bilateral aid programme was spent last year in (a) sub-Saharan Africa, (b) India and (c) South Asia; and how much the Oversease Development Administration plans to spend in each year to 1996-97 in these places in (a) cash prices, (b) real terms and (c) as a percentage of the relevant year's bilateral aid programme.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: Actual expenditure figures for the last financial year, 1993-94, are not yet available. United Kingdom bilateral aid expenditure figures in 1992-93, the latest year for which actual data are available, are:

	1992-93 Prices £ million	Percentage of Total Bilateral Aid
Sub-Saharan Africa	509	[1]37
of which: Country Programmes	285	21
Other Bilateral Aid[2]	224	16
India	115	[1]8
of which: Country Programmes	92	6
Other Bilateral Aid[2]	23	2
South Asia (excluding India)	145	[1]11
of which: Country Programmes	99	7
Other Bilateral Aid[2]	46	4
Other Regions	439	[1]32
of which: Country Programmes	174	13
Other Bilateral Aid[2]	265	19
World Unallocated[3]	166	12
of which: Other Bilateral Aid	166	12

[1] The corresponding figures as a percentage of bilateral aid allocable by region are higher.

[2] Other bilateral aid is made up of Aid and Trade Provision, Food Aid, Disaster Relief, Debt relief, Non-Project Technical Co-operation, Drugs Assistance and CDC Investments.

[3] "World Unallocated" comprises block grants to the British Council, Natural Resources Institute, VSO, NGOs, Research Institutions and Commonwealth Organisations based in the United Kingdom.

For 1993-94 and subsequent years, no breakdown is available for sub-Saharan Africa, India or South Asia. Figures are available for Africa, including North Africa and the middle east, and for the whole of Asia and the Pacific. The table shows planning figures for bilateral country programmes only for these two areas. These figures are not directly comparable with the figures for 1992-93.

	Country programmes only Cash prices	1992-93 prices	Percentage of total country programmes
Year	£ million	£ million
Africa (including North Africa and Middle East)
1993-94	330	320	47
1994-95	344	324	45
1995-96	315	286	45
1996-97	284	252	44
Asia/Pacific
1993-94	254	246	35
1994-95	248	233	33
1995-96	227	206	32
1996-97	217	192	33

These planning figures include an allowance, additional to the overall figure agreed in the public expenditure survey, to compensate for expected slippage of expenditure. For this reason, and because of the many detailed changes that take place over a period at country level in the rate of spending, actual spending will vary from the figures shown.

Aid Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government first received (a) a draft copy and (b) the final version of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development report on the United Kingdom's aid programme published on 5 July; and what plans there are to respond to the criticisms contained in the OECD report.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We received a copy of the draft version of the report on 24 February and the final version on 5 July. The intervening period was required for the OECD to circulate the draft to other members for comments, and to fit publication into its printing schedule. Overall the OECD report recognised the many strengths in the "highly concessional and business-like" United Kingdom aid programme. We are continually looking for ways to improve efficiency and in doing so we shall take into account the conclusions of the OECD review.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Japan (Technology Agreement)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) of 4 July, Official Report, column 80, what discussions took place on civil nuclear science and technology co-operation during his visit to Japan in June; and if he will place a copy of the United Kingdom-Japan science and technology agreement of 13 June in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: My visit in June was to attend the seventh Carnegie group meeting of Science Ministers and advisers of G7 countries. This informal biannual meeting has a wide-ranging agenda and useful discussions took place on strengthening international co-operation and on progress with major science projects, including some in the field of civil nuclear research. However, no bilateral discussions took place.

I have arranged for a copy of the United Kingdom-Japan science and technology agreement to be placed in the Library.

Disabled People

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to improve the opportunities for employment and career development of disabled people in the civil service.

Mr. David Davis: The civil service has had a code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities since 1985. The code has done much to improve the position of disabled people in the civil service, but we have recognised that still more needs to be done. For this reason, on 15 July the code will be replaced by a programme for action to achieve equality of opportunity in the civil service for disabled people.

The programme provides a framework which will help Departments and agencies recruit, retain and promote people on merit, regardless of disability. It also provides detailed action checklists to help Departments and agencies make the best possible use of their disabled employees. The programme for action is accompanied by a stand-alone support document, "Focus on Ability", which offers practical advice on how to implement the programme.

In addition, the approval of the Privy Council is currently being sought to an amendment to the civil service Order in Council, which will permit Departments and agencies to offer disabled applicants encouragement and assistance in the selection process, such as a guaranteed interview, and thus enable those Departments and agencies that wish to do so to sign up to the Employment Service's two-ticks symbol.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Planning (Ecclesiastical Exemption)

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the future of the ecclesiastical exemption from listed building and conservation area control.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today laid before Parliament an order under section 60(5) and 75(7) of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 defining the future scope of the exemption in England and Wales.

As foreshadowed in my reply to my right hon. Friend on 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 370-71, a measure of exemption will be retained only for those church buildings which are covered by denominations' own arrangements for the control of works, where those arrangements satisfy our code of practice. Statutory procedures already exist for the Church of England; other denominations which are in the process of setting up arrangements are the Church in Wales, the Roman Catholic Church, the Methodist Church, the Baptist Union of Great Britain, the Baptist Union of Wales and the United Reformed Church. Buildings of all other denominations and faiths will from 1 October 1994, when the order is due to come into force, be fully subject to normal listed building and conservation area control.

Where the exemption is retained, its scope will be reduced. Subject to what is said below, it will apply in future only to buildings whose primary use is as a place of worship, and to objects or structures attached to their exterior or within their curtilage to the extent that these are not listed in their own right. Where such objects or structures are listed in their own right, they will be fully subject to normal listed building control. My right hon. Friend and I came to the view that this was the most appropriate method of demarcation, taking into account the need to minimise duplication of control with the internal systems of the denominations concerned and, in relation to tombstones, the concerns expressed about possible inconvenience for the bereaved.

To ensure reasonable parity of treatment between exempted and non-exempted bodies, we propose directions to bring within conservation area control tombstones, memorials and monuments not covered by the ecclesiastical exemption but below the current control limit of 115 cu m. To minimise any practical inconvenience, this extension of control will relate only to tombstones and so on erected before 1 January 1925.

Special arrangements will apply to cathedrals of the Church of England. In this case, the exemption will cover the cathedral itself and buildings, objects or structures which are located within an area designated by me after consulting the Cathedrals Fabric Commission for England and which fall within a precinct indicated by the Commission under the Care of Cathedrals Measure 1990. It will also cover places of worship elsewhere within the precinct, and tombstones elsewhere within the precinct which are not listed in their own right.

The new arrangements will be summarised in planning policy guidance notes, to be issued in due course. Details of the exempted denominations' procedures will also be circulated to all local planning authorities. Plans showing the designated English cathedral areas have been sent to those local authorities concerned.

As mentioned in the previous statement, our intention is to monitor these arrangements and review them after two years.

The present exemption is also to be continued for the time being for certain categories of ecclesiastical buildings, mainly belonging to the denominations mentioned. My officials are writing to the bodies concerned to invite them to consider how works to such buildings should be controlled in future. These categories include buildings within Church of England peculiars, buildings of religious communities, school and other institutional chapels, and buildings of certain Scottish denominations within England and Wales.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 37, whether an immunodeficiency virus has ever been communicated from cattle to humans; why no tests are done on imported milk; what tests are done on United Kingdom produced non-pasteurised milk; whether bovine immunodeficiency virus has been found in non-pasteurised milk; and what assessment she has made of whether BIV is killed by (a) pasteurisation, (b) sterilisation and (c) ultra heat treatment.

Mr. Soames: There is no evidence that an immunodeficiency virus has been communicated from cattle to humans and there is no evidence that bovine immunodeficiency-like virus affects humans.

Experimental efforts to grow BIV in human cells have failed. Two United States laboratory personnel who accidentally had needle stick injuries with BIV infected cell material some five years ago have shown no signs of illness as a result. In the absence of any risk to human health from BIV, we do not consider it necessary to test milk for the virus. Raw cow's milk produced in the United Kingdom is subject to hygiene and quality checks for example for plate counts, antibiotic residues and added water. In addition, raw cow's milk sold for drinking in England and Wales is subject to strict microbiological standards, for plate count and coliforms, under the Milk (Special Designation) Regulations 1989. We are not aware that BIV has been isolated from unpasteurised milk either here or abroad. It is known that lentiviruses are susceptible to heat treatment. Studies have been commissioned at the Central Veterinary Laboratory on the inactivation of BIV in milk by pasteurisation.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 37, if she will now require testing of all milk imported from other EC countries to ensure that it complies with EC directive 92/46 on milk hygiene and that it is free of bovine immunodeficiency virus.

Mr. Soames: EC directive 92/46 allows milk to be traded within the EC if it meets requirements in the directive and bears the EC health mark. Under the EC veterinary checks regime, it is the responsibility of the exporting member state to ensure that only products meeting these requirements enter intra-Community trade. An importing member state can carry out non-discriminatory checks at destination unless there is suspicion of an infringement of requirements in the directive, in which case spot checks, including sampling, can be carried out at any stage. However, it would be a barrier to trade and contrary to EC law to check for bovine immunodeficiency-like virus, which is not referred to in the directive.

Intervention Board

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the Intervention Board performed against its targets for 1993-94; and what key performance targets Agriculture Ministers have set the agency for 1994-95.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Intervention Board's performance against its key targets in 1993-94 was as follows:

	1993-94
	Target (per cent.)	Performance (per cent.)
Percentage of claims processed within deadlines	98·0	99·9
Percentage of claims processed correctly	98·5	98·8
Running cost efficiency gains	2·5	4·5
Improvement in productivity	5·0	8·0
Ratio of disallowance to EAGGF funds handled	0·40	0·03
To main expenditure within vote provision, cash and running cost limits	—	Met
New value for money savings in procurement of goods and services	5·0	6·5

In agreement with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, I have set the following targets for 1994-95:

	Per cent.
Percentage of claims processed within deadlines	98·5
Percentage of claims processed correctly	98·5
Running cost efficiency gains	2·5
Improvement in productivity	6·0
Ratio of disallowance to EAGGF funds handled	0·40
To maintain expenditure within vote provision, cash and running cost limits	—
New value for money savings in procurement of goods and services	5·0

Veterinary Medicines Directorate

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the 1993-94 annual report and accounts for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate is due to be published.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: I am pleased to report that the Veterinary Medicines Directorate's annual report and accounts for 1993-94 was published today. Copies are available in the Library of the House

The report charts the continuing success of the directorate as a next steps agency, and I would like to congratulate the chief executive and his staff on their considerable achievements during the year.

Food Stockpile

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the destination of the donation of biscuits from the strategic food stockpile; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: During the past three years more than 30,000 tonnes of high-energy biscuits have been donated from the strategic food stockpile administered by my Department. The biscuits were subject to stringent quality testing prior to release for donation. They were donated to some 20 United Kingdom-based charities to help the starving and homeless victims of serious disasters in more than a dozen countries in Africa and eastern Europe, particularly to help relieve the plight of the civilian population in the former Yugoslavia.

The final 5,000 tonnes of biscuits will be donated to the United Nations World Food Programme through the Overseas Development Administration over the coming months. This is a step towards the liquidation of the strategic food stockpile by March 1996.

The biscuits would provide sufficient food for over 250,000 people for a year. To provide similar aid at today's prices would cost in excess of £20 million and represents a significant contribution to the United Kingdom's response to disaster relief.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Political Talks

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on which dates he met representatives of the Irish Government since 1 September 1993 to discuss political developments in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have held such discussions with the Irish Foreign Minister, Mr. Spring, at six meetings of the intergovernmental conference on 10 September and 3 November 1993, 28 January, 10 March, 25 April and 17 June 1994, during a visit to Dublin on 5 March and in the margins of the opening of the Shannon-Erne waterway on 23 May.

I was also present on 3 and 15 December 1993 and 19 February 1994, when these matters were discussed by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and Mr. Reynolds, the Irish Prime Minister.

Residential Homes

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are employed on (a) a full-time and (b) a part-time basis at the residential homes of the Southern area health board; how many in each category at each home are (a) Protestants, and (b) Roman Catholics; and what is the Roman Catholic/Protestant ratio in each of the employment catchment areas for the three homes.

Mr. Ancram: The table below gives a breakdown of staff by perceived religious affiliation in the three residential homes within the Armagh and Dungannon unit of management which is the only remaining directly managed unit within the Southern board's area.

Type of Employee	Perceived religious affiliation
	Roman Catholic	Protestant	Not known	Total

Information on the Roman Catholic : Protestant ratio in each of the employment catchment areas for the three homes is not readily available.

Benefits

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the resident population are in receipt of benefits other than retirement pension; and what were the numbers in (a) 1964, (b) 1971, (c) 1981 and (d) 1991.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is provided in the tables:

NHS Trust Hospitals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by wave (a) the number of non-executive directors of NHS trust hospitals and (b) the number of chairs of NHS trust hospitals, by salary band.

Mr. Ancram: Information on appointments to HSS trusts in Northern Ireland is set out in the table:

Birth Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sets of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets were born in Northern Ireland in each year from 1990 to 1993; what was the total number of maternities in Northern Ireland in each year; and how many multiple births of each type in each year were conceived as a result of (i) in-vitro fertilisation, (ii) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (iii) other forms of assisted conceptions.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

UN Agencies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the United Nations Secretary-General has made in respect of moving the UN Relief and Welfare Agency and other agencies; what sites he has suggested; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on this.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Secretary-General has proposed moving UNRWA's headquarters from Vienna to Gaza. We will discuss this proposal with other donors represented on UNRWA's advisory commission. We have seen no proposals to move other agencies.

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now make special representations to the Burmese Government for the release of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: With our European Union partners, we will underline our very serious concern about Daw Aung San Suu Kyi's continued detention on the occasion of the fifth anniversary of her house detention.

East Timor

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has received from the retired Australian diplomat James Dunn in relation to loss of life in East Timor; what reassessment he has made of the situation there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We can find no record of any communication from Mr. Dunn in the last three years. Research of earlier files would involve disproportionate cost.

Middle East

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on developments on the Jordanian track of the middle east peace process.

Mr. Hurd: We warmly welcome the recent decision by Jordan and Israel to initiate detailed discussions in the region on the elements of an eventual peace agreement. We similarly welcome King Hussein's decision, communicated to members of Jordan's Parliament on 9 July, that he and other Jordanian leaders should hold direct talks with Prime Minister Rabin and other Israeli leaders. I understand that discussions on border, security and water issues will begin on 18 July and that Foreign Minister Peres plans to meet the Jordanian Prime Minister and the United States Secretary of State, on the Jordanian side of the border on 20 July, to discuss economic issues.

Kuwait

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects an announcement to be made by the Kuwaiti Government in respect of orders for United Kingdom ships; and what size and type of vessel is involved.

Mr. Aitken I have been asked to reply.

The Kuwaiti Government is currently considering bids for eight 42m fast patrol boats from British, French and German shipyards. Vosper Thornycroft are a leading contender.

I am unwilling to speculate when an announcement is likely to be made as the Kuwaiti Minister of Defence has recently stated that the bids are still under consideration.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total value of claims and recoveries to the Export Credits Guarantee Department in each of the last five years; and how much of each of these was in relation to defence exports.

Mr. Needham: The total value of claims and recoveries to the Export Credits Guarantee Department in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Claims £ million	Recoveries £ million
1989-90	912·9	229·1
1990-91	967·5	224·9
1991-92	954·1	187·2
1992-93	734·3	157·1
[1]1993-94	517·5	177·0

[1] Provisional.

ECGD does not record claims and recoveries by industry sector. It is thus not possible to provide the breakdown which the hon. Gentleman has requested.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has held with representatives of regional breweries with regard to the tie system and public house management.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Neither my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade nor I have recently had discussions with the regional brewers about the tie or public house management. However, my officials are in regular contact with individual regional brewers and Independent Family Brewers of Britain, which represents many local brewers, on a number of issues of concern to the brewing industry.

I am aware that some brewers are concerned that the EC Commission may bring forward proposals to amend or rescind regulation 1984/83, which concerns beer supply agreements. The regulation is due to expire at the end of 1997 and the EC Commission has said that it will not begin to review it until 1996 at the earliest. The Government will, of course, take into account the views of all interested parties when considering any proposals that the Commission may bring forward during that review.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of a revision of the tie system on employment prospects in regional breweries.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Regional brewers have benefited greatly from the guest beer provision of the 1989 beer orders, which has enabled many to sell their cask-conditioned beer in tied pubs owned by the national brewers. They have also been able to acquire pubs sold by national brewers who were obliged to reduce the size of their tied estates to comply with the provisions of the beer orders.

Directors' Fees

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, further to his letter dated 11 July 1985, concerning pay of directors in answer to the written question from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, whether he will now publish his letter, dated 11 July 1985, with the two enclosures, concerning the emoluments of the chairmen and highest-paid directors of large industrial and commercial companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The letter was published on 25 July 1985, Official Report, columns 730-32.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, further to his letter dated 11 July 1985 about the pay of directors of plcs in answer to the written question from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (1) whether he will publish a table showing the same information for the most recent years for which corresponding figures are available;

(2) whether he will bring the two tables concerning the emoluments of chairmen and highest paid directors of plcs enclosed with his letter up to date with the full figures for 1983 as mentioned there together with those for subsequent years.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The information requested is not readily available. It ceased to be compiled from 1990, and obtaining information for 1983 to 1990 from archive data could be achieved only at disproportionate cost.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what direct benefits will accrue to the United Kingdom from the liberalisation of the electricity market in the European Union.

Mr. Eggar: Liberalisation of electricity markets will put downward pressure on electricity prices and will help to provide a level playing field in electricity supply in the European Union, particularly for energy-intensive industries. The opening of markets will create new investment opportunities for the United Kingdom electricity companies which do not exist at present.

Local Authorities (Contracting Out)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which local authorities have been approached by his Department for their views on the contracting out of trading standards departments and/or environmental health enforcement; what proposals were made by those authorities; and what position his Department took on such proposals.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 July 1994]: My officials approached the trading standards departments of the City of Westminster and the London boroughs of Wandsworth and Bromley. None of the authorities is proposing to contract out its trading standards function; however, the London borough of Bromley is considering contracting out some trading standards work. My Department has noted the position and continues to monitor developments.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the major reasons for the increase in the amounts recovered by the compensation recovery unit between 1990-91 and 1993-94;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of the main sources of income from the compensation recovery unit;

(3) from how many asbestosis victims the compensation recovery unit recovered money in 1993-94; and what were the amounts involved.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the compensation recovery scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 14 July 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking (a) the main sources of income for the Compensation Recovery Unit (b) from how many asbestosis victims the Compensation Recovery Unit recovered money in 1993-94 and (c) what are the major reasons for the increase in the amounts recovered by the Compensation Recovery Unit between 1990-91 and 1993-94.

During the financial year 1993-94, £81·9 million was recovered by the Compensation Recovery Unit (CRU). The main sources of this income were as follows:

£ millions

Benefit	Amount
Invalidity Benefit	35·2
Statutory Sick Pay	16·7
Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit	9·2
Income Support	5·8
Reduced Earnings Allowance	5·5
Sickness Benefit	3·5
Disability Living Allowance	2·8
Mobility Allowance	1·1

The remaining £2·1 million was made up of the following benefits:

Unemployment Benefit, Attendance Allowance, Constant Attendance Allowance, Retirement Allowance, Family Credit, Severe Disablement Allowance, Disability Working Allowance and Exceptionally Severe Disablement Allowance.

During the same period the number of asbestosis cases where recovery was made by the CRU was 157 and the total amount recovered in relation to these cases was £408,665.

There are two main reasons for the increase in the amounts recovered by the CRU between 1990-91 and 1993-94:

firstly, the number of claims notified to the CRU has increased significantly over the years by some 49 per cent. since 1991;

secondly, the Compensation Recovery legislation only relates to accidents or diseases which occurred on or after 1 January 1989. Settlements which occurred in 1990-91 resulted in recovery of benefits which had been paid for one or two years only. As the more protracted claims come to settlement, up to five years of benefits are now being recovered.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Formula

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to changing the child support formula so that children from the first and second families of the absent parent and any stepchildren for whom he or she may be caring are all treated equally when a maintenance assessment is carried out.

Mr. Burt: It is a basic principle of child support that, once his or her own personal living costs are met, the first duty of a parent is the support of his or her own children. Where an absent parent has stepchildren in his current family, the stepchildren's natural father has prime responsibility for their support.

However, although the main child support formula does not treat stepchildren as the absent parent's own by making allowance for their living costs, their needs are taken into account when the protected income calculation is made. This ensures that the absent parent and his family will remain significantly above income support levels after the payment of child support maintenance. The changes which we introduced in February increased this protection and will be particularly helpful to absent parents with step-families.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims of disablement benefit in respect of chronic bronchitis or emphysema have been made by persons currently on income support benefit since September 1993; how many of these claims have been successful; and in which circumstances it can be financially advantageous for those suffering from chronic bronchitis or emphysema to be successful in claiming disablement benefit.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Industrial injuries disablement benefit is payable in addition to other incapacity and disability benefits, but is taken into account in assessing entitlement to income-related benefits.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he will take to ensure that those in receipt of chronic bronchitis or emphysema disablement benefit receive this payment as compensation for a prescribed disease or illness which they have suffered.

Mr. Scott: The industrial injuries scheme provides non-contributory, non means-tested, tax-free benefits on a no-fault basis to workers disabled by industrial accidents or prescribed diseases. Industrial injuries disablement benefit in respect of chronic bronchitis and emphysema, as prescribed, is payable on this basis.

Housing Expenditure Cuts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish an estimate of the effect on social security expenditure and tax revenues of reductions in Department of the Environment housing expenditure between 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available. The link between reductions in Department of the Environment housing expenditure and social security expenditure and tax revenues is not direct and is affected by the complex interaction of a number of factors.

Rent Rebate and Rent Allowance

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table setting out for every year since 1988-89 how rents paid by claimants of (a) rent rebate and (b) rent allowance, divided between those claimants who are housing association tenants and those who are private sector tenants, have risen relative to the retail prices index; how much of the increase in spending on each of these benefits is accounted for by such increases above inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table[1].

Year	Rent Rebate		Rent Allowance				RPI
	Eligible Rent[2]	Percentage increase	All Tenants		Housing[3] Association	Other Private
	£		Eligible Rent[2] £	Percentage increase	£	£	Per cent.
May 1988	18·84	—	21·32	—	—	—	4·2
May 1989	20·57	9·2	24·29	13·9	—	—	8·3
May 1990	23·62	14·8	29·42	21·1	—	—	9·7
May 1991	27·29	15·5	35·75	21·5	—	—	5·8
May 1992	30·48	11·7	41·67	16·6	3[illegible]	48·57	4·3

Data Sources: The Housing Benefit Management Information System annual one percent sample of May in each year and the Employment Gazette, which provides figures based on the increase in the Retail Price Index from May of the previous year to May of the year shown.
[1] Figures on the extent to which increases in spending on rent rebate and rent allowance are due to increases in rents over inflation are not available.
[2] Data on rent paid is not available, therefore, the information relates to the amount of rent eligible for Housing Benefit.
[3] Discrete information for Housing Association tenants was not collected before 1992.

Family Credit

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish a table setting out the number of people who have taken up the disregard in family credit to meet part of the cost of child care, as announced in the Budget, divided between (a) male and female claimants and (b) those who were already in work before the introduction of this reform and those who have moved from unemployment into paid employment since its introduction; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the number of people who have taken up the disregard in family credit to meet part of the cost of child care, as announced in the Budget; what his estimate is of the average additional amount of family credit which they will each receive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We plan to introduce the child care disregard from 4 October 1994. Our best estimates are that about 150,000 families will benefit from it, of whom about 100,000 will already be in paid work and about 50,000 will move into work of 16 hours or more. The extent of additional help will depend in individual cases on earnings, on the cost of the child care and on whether family credit is received alone or in combination with housing benefit and council tax benefit.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table setting out his estimates of the cost in 1994-95 of the disregard in family credit to meet part of the cost of child care, as announced in the Budget, as it affects (a) expenditure on family credit, (b) total expenditure on social security, including any offsetting reductions in spending on other benefits and (c) the public sector borrowing requirement, including any offsetting reductions in spending in other areas and any increase in tax revenues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The full-year effects of the proposed child care disregard in family credit, housing benefit, council tax benefit and disability working allowance, to be introduced from October 1994, are expected in the longer term to be as follows:

	£ million pa
(1) Increase in Family Credit expenditure	+250
(2) Savings on other benefits, mostly Income Support	−190
(3) Net increase in Social Security expenditure	+60
(4) Offsetting increases in Tax and NI revenue	−30
(5) Net increase in Public Sector Borrowing Requirement	+30

Pensions

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how work will progress on his proposals for the new requisite benefits test for contracted-out salary related occupational pension schemes as set out in his White Paper "Security, Equality, Choice: The Future for Pensions" published on 23 June.

Mr. Hague: A technical consultation paper is being issued today. The paper seeks views on the detailed criteria of our proposals for the new requisite benefits test, including definitions of pensionable salary and the role of scheme actuaries. It is being issued to a number of interested parties and is available to others on request. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

TREASURY

Public Sector Assets

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Cunningham), of 30 June, Official Report, column 678, if he will allocate the public sector assets to broad areas of spend, distinguishing between the Government and non-governmental public sector in cash and real terms for the years specified.

Mr. Portillo: Table 8.2 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1992 Autumn Statement", Cm. 2219, provided a detailed breakdown of public sector asset creation by spending sector and function between 1987-88 and 1992-93. Table 1.8 of the "Statistical Supplement to the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95", Cm. 2519, provides a similar breakdown of public sector capital spending, on a national accounts definition, between 1988-89 and 1996-97. Annex A to chapter 5 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95" explains the relationship between asset creation and the national accounts definition of capital spending.

The table gives a breakdown of public sector capital spending, on a national accounts definition, in real terms between 1989-90 and 1996-97.

Pensioners (Income Tax)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has, for the latest tax year, of the number of people over retirement age (a) who pay no income tax at all, (b) who pay income tax only at the 20 per cent. rate, (c) who pay more than (i) £100, (ii) £500, (iii) £1,000 and (iv) £3,000 in income tax in the year.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisional estimates for 1994-95 are:

	Numbers (millions)
(a) Non-taxpayers aged 65 or over	6·2
(b) Taxpayers aged 65 or over liable only at 20 per cent.	1·1

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when he intends to restore the monthly return of trade statistics reporting British trade on a comprehensive basis;

(2) what are the reasons for the delay in the publication of United Kingdom trade figures with individual EU countries and with the EU as a whole; and when he hopes to be able to publish these figures on a monthly basis.

Mr. Nelson: The Central Statistical Office restarted publication of monthly estimates of the total value of the United Kingdom's visible trade with the world, including figures for trade with the European Community, on 11 October 1993. Since then, it has published aggregate details for trade with the European Community for every month, including details for trade with individual countries, 10 weeks after the end of the month. This information is available on the Central Statistical Office database, which can be accessed through the Library of the House. The full detailed statistics for every month are made available approximately 14 weeks after the end of the month through marketing agents appointed by Customs and Excise. It is planned to reduce this delay in publication to 10 or 11 weeks by the end of March 1995.

Comparable statistics for trade with countries outside the European Community are available six weeks after the end of a month. This difference in the availability of the two sets of statistics is due to differing systems of collection. The statistics on trade with European Community countries are not released until response from industry is such that the statistics are of an acceptable quality.

House Builders Federation

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the House Builders Federation; and when he next expects to meet it.

Mr. Portillo: The Chancellor last met the House Builders Federation on 22 September 1993. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present for further meetings with the Federation.

EU Contributions

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the United Kingdom's gross contributions to the European Union in 1995, after rebate; and what he expects will be the gross contribution in 1994.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The Government's latest estimate of the United Kingdom's gross contributions to EC institutions for the calendar year 1994 is set out in the "Statement on the 1994 Community Budget" Cm. 2486, which was published in March this year. The Government's estimate for the calendar year 1995 will be published in next year's statement.

"The Arts and Compulsory Competitive Tendering"

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to respond to the report "The Arts and Compulsory Competitive Tendering" commissioned from the consultants Positive Solutions Ltd.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 13 July 1994, c. 599]: I have been asked to reply.

Last year, I commissioned Positive Solutions to undertake a study of management practice in local authority arts facilities and ways in which it might be improved.

The consultants have produced a thorough report, reflecting extensive consultation with local authorities, arts organisations, the commercial sector and others: a copy is being placed in the Library. Taken with the recent Arts Council survey of local authority expenditure on the arts, it shows that local authorities are very significant supporters of all forms of arts provision, both through direct assistance of artists and entertainers and through the provision of facilities for arts events either in purpose-built venues or in other general purpose facilities. I am pleased to pay tribute to local authorities' work in ensuring a high quality and innovative arts sector, accessible to all.

The report shows that there have been significant improvements in local authorities' management of arts facilities. Since the Audit Commission's report on arts and entertainment in 1991, greater attention is now paid to such matters as the definition and communication of arts policies and the control of expenditure against agreed plans and targets.

Nevertheless, there is general agreement that performance varies greatly between authorities and that there remains considerable scope for management improvements. There is also further scope for authorities to encourage the growth of private sector competition in the longer term.

I therefore propose to review with local authorities a detailed programme of voluntary mechanisms for implementing management improvements where they have not already been adopted. Specific areas to cover include identification of a client-side function within authorities; development of performance indicators similar to those developed by the Audit Commission for other areas of local authority services; establishment of service level agreements; monitoring of performance against agreed performance targets; mechanisms for effective consumer feedback; and scrutiny of staff terms and conditions. In addition, as means of promoting competition I shall explore with local authorities mechanisms to encourage them to introduce efficiencies of scale through cluster management and to exercise customer choice within the internal market of their facilities.

I shall aim to conclude this review by the end of 1994-95, with a view to implementing its conclusions from the following year. I would propose to assess the progress which authorities have made on this voluntary basis in two years' time.

I am confident that the resulting changes will improve management standards in arts facilities and be to the benefit of users, artists, local authority staff and local taxpayer alike.

HEALTH

Police Surgeons

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the standard of treatment given by police surgeons to detainees compared with standard national health service treatment.

Mr. Sackville: Arrangements for the provision of services of police surgeons are a matter for individual police authorities. I understand that police surgeons are predominantly national health service general practitioners. There is no reason why the standard of treatment given by police surgeons to detainees should be any different from that given to NHS patients.

Trust Membership

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by wave (a) the number of non-executive directors of NHS trust hospitals and (b) the number of chairs of NHS trust hospitals by salary band.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the numbers of trust chairmen by salary band is not available centrally. The number of chairmen and non-executive directors of national health service trusts by wave is shown in the table.

	Chairmen	Non-executive directors
First Wave	49	246
Second Wave	91	458
Third Wave	136	668
Fourth Wave	143	707

Surgical Cases

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of patients admitted for day case surgery in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust between January and March for (i) inguinal hernia repair, (ii) arthroscopy of the knee, (iii) cataract extraction and (iv) laparoscopy with sterilisation had their condition successfully treated by that surgical intervention;

(2) what proportion of patients admitted for surgery in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust between January and March in (i) general surgery, (ii) urology, (iii) trauma and orthopaedics, (iv) ear, nose and throat, (v) ophthalmology, (vi) oral surgery, (vii) plastic surgery and (viii) gynaecology whose condition was successfully treated by that intervention.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally. General practitioners and local health authorities are encouraged to collect information on outcomes at local level to judge the quality of service provided. The Department has a range of initiatives aimed at developing and promoting methods to support this function. These are described in a leaflet on the work of the central health outcomes unit, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of patients admitted to hospital in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust between January and March for surgery subsequently died before discharge in (i) general surgery, (ii) urology, (iii) trauma and orthopaedics, (iv) ear, nose and throat, (v) ophthalmology, (vi) oral surgery, (vii) plastic surgery and (viii) gynaecology;

(2) what percentage of patients admitted to hospital in (i) England, (ii) each regional health authority and (iii) each hospital or trust between January and March for (a) acute myocardial infarction, (b) congestive heart failure, (c) pneumonia/influenza, (d) stroke, (e) sepsis, blood poisoning, (f) hip replacement/recontruction, (g) prostatectomy, (h) gall bladder removal, (i) initial pacemaker insertion, (j) maternity, (k) angioplasty, (l) coronary artery bypass graft and (m) all admissions, subsequently died before discharge;

(3) what percentage of patients were admitted to hospital in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust between January and March 1993 for surgery who lived for not less than (A) 90 days, (B) 180 days and (C) one year after their operation in (i) general surgery, (ii) urology, (iii) trauma and orthopaedics, (iv) ear, nose and throat, (v) ophthalmology, (vi) oral surgery, (vii) plastic surgery and (viii) gynaecology;

(4) what percentage of patients admitted to NHS hospitals between January and March subsequently died before discharge in hospitals with (a) 1 to 49, (b) 50 to 99, (c) 100 to 299, (d) 300 to 499, (e) 500 to 999 and (f) 1,000 plus beds.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested. Information by regional health authority in England on the percentage of patients in the acute sector who died in hospital was published in table 17 of the Department of Health statistical bulletin entitled "NHS Hospital Activity Statistics: England 1981 to 1991-92". A copy is available in the Library. Post-operative deaths which occur after patients have been discharged from hospital are not linked to the hospital records.

Consultants (Choice)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS patients referred to hospital between January and March were given a choice of consultant;

(2) what proportion of NHS patients (a) requested and (b) were granted a second medical opinion following a diagnosis by a consultant between January and March.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available. The patients charter includes the right for a patient, when his or her general practitioner thinks it necessary, to be referred to a consultant who is acceptable to the patient; and to be referred for a second opinion if the patient and the GP agree that this is desirable.

Out-patient Consultations

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of patients attending accident and emergency departments in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust between January and March were treated by an accident and emergency consultant;

(2) what proportion of patients attending out-patient clinics in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each hospital or trust between January and March were seen (i) by consultants and (ii) by other health staff.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally. It is for individual consultants to make professional judgments about how their case load is shared with other members of their team.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each hospital accident and emergency department which restricted access to patients at any time (a) in 1993-94 and (b) in the first three months of 1994-95; and if she will indicate the number of occasions on which access was restricted in each case.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the opening hours of individual accident and emergency departments is not available centrally. Every health authority is required to purchase accident and emergency services which meet the needs of all patients who need these services.

Angiontensin-converting Enzyme Inhibitors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the expenditure and expenditure per head of population on general practitioner prescribed angiontensin-converting enzyme inhibitors in each region and family health services authority area in 1992-93, (b) the number of prescriptions per head in such areas and (c) the cost per prescription of such inhibitors in such areas.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information will be placed in the Library.

Cold Surgery

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients admitted for cold surgery in (a) England, (b) each regional health authority and (c) each NHS hospital or trust between January and March were (i) NHS patients of fundholding GPs, (ii) NHS patients of non-fundholding GPs and (iii) private patients in (1) general surgery, (2) urology, (3) trauma and orthopaedics, (4) ear, nose and throat (5) ophthalmology, (6) oral surgery, (7) plastic surgery, (8) gynaecology and (9) all specialties.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested.

Patients Charter

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of producing each copy of the patients charter "Hospital and Ambulance Services Comparative Performance Guide"; how many were printed; and what was the total cost of distribution.

Dr. Mawhinney: Some 150,000 copies of the patients charter "Hospital and Ambulance Services Comparative Performance Guide" were produced, at a unit cost of £1·63. The total cost of distribution was £42,000.

Health Authority Mergers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on merging health authorities when there is not strong local support for mergers.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ministers take into account a wide range of local views and the best interests of patients before deciding upon any proposal to merge health authorities.

Children in Care

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children are being held in local authority care as of 8 July whose parents are foreign nationals serving a prison sentence or being held on remand in custody in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Bowis: No information is held by the Department concerning the nationality of parents of children looked after by local authorities. It is estimated that, at 31 March 1992, the latest year for which figures are available, a total of 240 children in England were looked after because one or both of their parents was in prison.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further steps she intends to improve standards in the personal social services.

Mr. Bowis: In accordance with plans previously announced, the Department is today issuing an invitation to tender for a project concerned with the definition of some possible standards of conduct and practice for those engaged in social services. We intend to use the outcome of this project to extend discussion of the social services issues raised in the final report of the General Social Services Council action group published by the National Institute for Social Work in 1994.

I am placing a copy of the tender invitation in the Library.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many sets of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets were born in England and Wales in each year from 1990 to 1993; what was the total number of maternities in England and Wales in each year; and how many multiple births of each type in each year were conceived as a result of (i) in-vitro fertilisation, (ii) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (iii) other forms of assisted conceptions.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available figures for England and Wales are:

Type of birth	1990	1991	1992
Twins	7,934	8,160	8,314
Triplets	201	208	202
Quadruplets	10	10	8
Quintuplets	—	2	1
Sextuplets	—	—	—
Total number of maternities with multiple births	8,145	8,380	8,525
Total maternities	701,030	693,857	683,854

Source: Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Information on multiple maternities is not yet available for 1993.

Information on the number of multiple births attributed to assist reproduction is not available. However, some information on multiple pregnancies for 1990 and 1991 is published in the first and second annual reports of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority and in earlier reports of the HFEA's predecessors, the interim licensing authority. Copies are available in the Library.

Information relating to 1992 will be published later this month in the next annual report of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority.

Birth Weights

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 3 December 1993, Official Report, columns 799-800, what further research her Department has funded in response to the proposals for collecting data about children who were very low birthweight babies in the Audit Commission's report, "Children First".

Mr. Sackville: Government-funded research into neonatal intensive care and issues surrounding low birth weight continues to be carried out by the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. In addition to the research work reported in my earlier reply to the hon. Member of 3 December, Official Report, columns 799-800, the national perinatal epidemiology unit is developing a full-scale project proposal on the detection of trends in morbidity and disability among seven-year-old children of different birth weights. The Department is also examining, through its public health information strategy a project to improve information on maternal and child health to support the Department's public health needs.

Research Units

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 674, what plans she has to evaluate the first pilot research centre announced on 21 February; and what criteria and methods will be used in the evaluation.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department's director of research and development will establish a steering group to oversee the work of the centre. Its terms of reference will include advising on the delivery of the research programme, its scientific quality and its continuing relevance to policy and practice, together with the effectiveness of the dissemination of research findings. In addition, the steering group will undertake formal reviews of the work of the centre based on the receipt of an independent peer review at particular points during the contract period and advise on action arising from the reviews.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 674, what plans she has to establish any further research centres.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall make an announcement in due course.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what autonomous powers NHS trusts have to determine geographical catchment areas within the district covered by a health authority which has a contract with the trust from which patients will be exclusively drawn; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest regulations or guidance which govern decisions as to the appropriateness of a person to serve as the chair or non-executive of an NHS trust.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to instruct national health service trusts to produce and publish separate audited accounts for their commercial activities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: All national health service trusts publish annual accounts, as far as possible, in line with best commercial practice and the Companies Acts. We have no plans to instruct them to produce and publish any additional and separate audited accounts.

Epsom District General Hospital

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with Epsom district general hospital over the treatment of patients with a history of mental illness.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Royal Free Hospital

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she or officials of her Department have had with (a) officials from the Royal Free hospital, London, (b) officials from Camden and Islington district health authority and (c) representatives of general practitioners in Camden and Islington regarding the decision of the Royal Free hospital to restrict routine admissions to patients of general practitioners practising within the area covered by the former Hampstead health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has started her review of the Medicines Control Agency.

Mr. Sackville: A review of the agency status of the Medicines Control Agency has now started. As a next steps agency, the performance of the MCA will be evaluated and MCA activities will be subjected to the normal prior option tests set out in the 1993 "Next Steps Review", Cm. 2430, copies of which are available in the Library. Comments and contributions from those with an interest in the MCA and its work would be welcome and should be sent by 23 September 1994 to Kate James, MCA Review Team, Room 360C, Skipton house, 80 London road, London SE1 6LW.

Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes she has authorised in the access arrangements to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' computers.

Mr. Sackville: The British Computer Society reviewed the confidentiality and computing arrangements for the 1991 census, and its report was published in a White Paper in 1991, Cm 1447, copies of which are available in the Library. The society's report commended the arrangements that had been made to secure the processing of the census, but also recognised that significant changes to computer access mechanisms and procedures would take place in the 1990s. The Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys also recognised that advances in information technology would provide opportunities to improve the availability of the wide range of statistical information which it holds. The society's report had recommended a further review after the main census processing was complete. In 1993, the Registrar-General commissioned such a review from Insight Consulting, who are independent security consultants. In the light of their report, I have agreed, in principle, that information which OPCS would normally provide to central Government agencies by other means —and only that information—may also be directly accessible to them on the OPCS mainframe computer. For other users, information may be directly accessible only from a separate computer not connected to the OPCS mainframe.

In addition, the Registrar-General has engaged Secure Information Systems Ltd. to advise on technical and management issues. With their help, arrangements are being put in place to guard against unauthorised access to personal information held on OPCS's computers.

I have also agreed that, if the results of market testing require this, and subject to the passage of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill, data managed by OPCS may be processed by contractors, either on OPCS's computers or elsewhere. Any such contractors will be subject to the same stringent confidentiality requirements as OPCS's own staff.

The Registrar-General and I are confident that the precautions taken will enable OPCS to provide a welcome increase in the availability of information while continuing to manage the data in its care in accordance with best practice, to maintain security and confidentiality of those data, to meet fully the provisions of data protection legislation, to honour the guarantees of confidentiality of personal information, and to comply with its published statement of policies on the security and confidentiality of personal information.

WALES

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much the Cardiff Bay development corporation spent on legal fees in each year in the period 1983 to 1993;

(2) how many legal actions were initiated by the Cardiff Bay development corporation which were (a) discontinued and (b) settled out of court for each year in the period 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Redwood: I will arrange for the chief executive of the corporation to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral statement of 7 July, Official Report, column 465, what consultations he has had with the relevant local authorities in relation to the winding up of the Cardiff Bay development corporation; and what proposals he has made for independent arbitration in relation to the value of the land and other assets to be transferred to the local authorities when no agreement can be reached between the local authorities and the corporation.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office will be consulting local authorities about this after the reorganisation of local government has been implemented.

Redundant Hospitals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what reasons the selling price of redundant national health service hospitals is not made publicly available after completion of the sale.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Details of individual land and property sales are commercially sensitive and may impact on future potential sales. In some instances, the purchaser and vendor may agree a confidentiality clause in the sale contract.

Agricultural Schemes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost in 1993 in Wales of payments under (a) the sheep annual premium, (b) the suckler cow premium, (c) the beef special premium, and (d) the hill livestock compensatory allowances; and what is his estimate of the cost in 1994.

Mr. Redwood: The information is as follows:

	1993 Estimated outturn £ million	1994 Provision £ million
(a) Sheep Annual Premium	125·7	121·7
(b) Suckler Cow Premium	17·1	21·5
(c) Beef Special Premium	16·0	20·82
(d) Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances	32·0	28·9
Total	190·8	192·92

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost in 1993 in Wales of payments under (a) the environmentally sensitive area scheme, (b) the nitrate sensitive area scheme, (c) the farm and conservation grant scheme, (d) the pilot beef and sheep extensification schemes, (e) the woodland grant scheme, (f) the farm woodland premium scheme, (g) the orchard grubbing scheme, (h) the optional five year set-aside scheme, (i) the habitat scheme, (j) the moorland scheme, (k) the countryside access scheme and (l) the organic aid scheme; and what is his estimate of the cost in 1994.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is in the table:

£ million

Scheme	Expenditure 1993-94	Expenditure forecast for 1994-95
(a) Environmentally Sensitive Area Scheme	1·541	6·399
(b) Nitrate Sensitive Area Scheme[1]	—	—
(c) Farm and Conservation Grant Scheme	6·200	6·900

Scheme	Expenditure 1993-94	Expenditure forecast for 1994-95
(d) Pilot Beef and Sheep Extensification Scheme	0·027	0·027
(e) Woodland Grant Scheme	1·200	1·300
(f) Farm Woodland Premium Scheme	0·057	0·204
(g) Orchard Grubbing Scheme	nil	nil
(h) Optional Five Year Set-Aside Scheme	0·349	0·405
(i) Habitat Scheme	nil	0·500
(j) Moorland Scheme	nil	nil
(k) Countryside Access Scheme	nil	nil
(l) Organic Aid Scheme	nil	0·170

[1] This scheme is not applicable to Wales.

Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to the publication of the district auditor's report of April 1994 into the allegations of travel expenses fraud and public and private work recompense procedures at the Health Promotion Authority for Wales; what proposals he has to respond to the district auditor's recommendations; and what response he has made to the district auditor's request for legal advice on the application of the guidelines on privately negotiated fees and contracts arising from work done in Health Promotion Authority time.

Mr. Redwood: The only representations that I have received concerning the publication of the district auditor's report have been from the hon. Gentleman. The district auditor made a number of recommendations to the authority. I understand that the authority has accepted all these recommendations and either has already implemented them or are in the process of doing so.

My Department provides legal advice to the Health Promotion Authority for Wales and as part of this function obtained counsel's opinion on the points raised by the district audit service. This was provided to the authority on 27 May 1994.

Management Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the final outturn for the management costs line in his departmental costs for the year 1993-94; and if he will list each of the management cost reduction initiatives he has undertaken in each quarter of that year and the savings estimates for the consequences of each of them (a) in 1993-94 and (b) in a full year.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office appropriation accounts for 1993-94, including details of administration costs, are due to be published by the National Audit Office in October. The Welsh Office is committed to improving its cost-effectiveness, and efficiency savings of at least £3·8 million—5·5 per cent. of running costs—were secured in 1993-94. A breakdown of these savings is not available in the form requested, but the main gains reflect the absorption of new work, improved purchasing procedures and the rationalisation of accommodation.

Tourism

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Wales tourist board in relation to the number of hotels and other tourist enterprises in receipt of loans from the board who requested suspension of repayments in each of the years from 1988 to 1993; and how many suspended repayments during that period before recommencement were for (a) one year or less, (b) one to two years, (c) two to three years and (d) more than three years.

Mr. Redwood: None on these specific matters. The information requested is as follows:

	Number
(i) Requests for suspension of loan repayment:
1988	Nil
1989	Nil
1990	Nil
1991	Nil
1992	4
1993	1
(ii) Length of time before recommencement
(a) 1 year or less	4
(b) 1-2 years	1
(c) 2-3 years	Nil
(d) More than 3 years	Nil

Mid-Wales Development Grant

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral statement of 7 July, Official Report, column 464, what consultations he has had with the Welsh local authority associations in relation to the transfer of the Mid-Wales development grant to the relevant local authorities.

Mr. Redwood: My officials will be contacting the local authority associations soon.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for strengthening the guidelines for the formation and conduct of joint venture boards established to further the urban regeneration aims and objectives of the Welsh Development Agency and other parties; and what representations he has had in relation to the confidentiality of information supplied by private companies to joint venture boards chaired by agency personnel.

Mr. Redwood: Operational guidelines for the Welsh Development Agency are kept under review and I have recently approved revised guidelines covering its urban development function. I have received representations about the agency's involvement with the Cynon Valley joint venture and the confidentiality of information supplied by private companies. These matters are being considered as part of the investigations put in hand by the agency.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning the use of letters of comfort or their telephoned equivalent by agency staff involved with joint venture boards to assist third parties in the acquisition of land for urban regeneration purposes.

Mr. Redwood: I have had none.

Local Government (Wales) Bill

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the date of the interim meeting with the Office of Parliamentary Counsel for the purpose of drafting amendments to clause 44 of the Local Government (Wales) Bill [Lords].

Mr. Redwood: I have nothing to add to my replies of 26 May, Official Report, column 235 and 28 June, Official Report, columns 516-11.

DEFENCE

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 4 July, Official Report, columns 82-83, which reactors were the source of the plutonium for the test.

Mr. Aitken: The military reactors at Calder Hall and Chapel Cross.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 4 July, Official Report, columns 83-84, regarding the use of plutonium from the United Kingdom in the United States of America, whether any undertaking was given by the United States Government in 1964 that plutonium produced in the United Kingdom from civil reactors would not be used in United States of America experimental nuclear explosive devices.

Mr. Aitken: The assurance was that plutonium from United Kingdom civil reactors would not be used for weapons purposes. We understand the term "weapons purposes" in this context to include experimental nuclear explosive devices.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions since 1964 his Department has requested British Nuclear Fuels, or its division within the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, to co-process weapons-grade plutonium from electricity board reactors along with that arising from the dedicated military reactors at Calder Hall or Chapel Cross.

Mr. Aitken: We have no record of ever having made such a request.

Helicopters

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many (a) RAF and (b) RN Sea King and Wessex search-and-rescue helicopters are expected to be available in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997;

(2) how many (a) RAF and (b) RN Sea King and Wessex search-and-rescue helicopters were available, serviceable or being serviced on 1 January 1994 and how many are expected to be available, serviceable or being serviced on 31 December 1994;

(3) how many (a) RAF and (b) RN Sea King and Wessex search-and-rescue helicopters were available, serviceable or being serviced in 1993.

Mr. Hanley: For the RAF the total number of SAR helicopters available, serviceable or being serviced, were as follows:

	1993	1 January 1994	31 December 1994
Sea King	17	17	17
Wessex	17	16	11

On current plans, the RAF will have the following numbers of SAR helicopters deployed in the United Kingdom:

	1 April 1995	1 April 1996	1 April 1997
Sea King	17	23	23
Wessex	9	6	Nil

A total of five Sea Kings are normally made available by the Royal Navy for the search and rescue task. As SAR is not a primary task of RN helicopters, however, future availability cannot be determined with any precision.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions or protocols govern RAF Wessex search-and-rescue helicopters missions at night or in bad weather; and how they differ from those in respect of the RAF Sea King search-and-rescue helicopters.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Redundant Military Sites

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what obligations his Department have to clean up redundant military sites before disposing of them.

Mr. Hanley: There is no statutory requirement fully to restore land offered for sale. It is my Department's policy, however, to seek to identify instances of contamination on sites allocated for disposal and this information is made available to prospective purchasers and will be taken into account in agreeing the sale price. Decontamination work is generally limited to the removal of ordnance and other contaminants such as explosives, radioactive and microbiological materials on which a civilian contractor could not be expected to have appropriate expertise.

Proof and Experimental Establishments

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations his Department has given to the environmental impact of siting an ammunition demilitarisation and disposal facility at the proof and experimental establishment, Shoeburyness.

Mr. Aitken: The facility has received accreditation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The local authority was also consulted and supplied with all relevant information including transport movements, noise data and meteorological analysis.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has done of the cost in terms of (a) infrastructure and (b) recruitment at transferring the NATO small arms regional test centre from proof and experimental establishment, Pendine.

Mr. Aitken: The European regional test centre uses facilities which are required for national purposes. There would be no separately identifiable costs were it to transfer with other small arms work. A decision on the location of the ERTC is for the NATO authorities.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total revenue and operating cost of proof and experimental establishment, Pendine, in the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Aitken: Gross operating costs at proof and experimental establishment, Pendine in financial year 1993-94 were £7·157 million. Receipts over the same period totalled £2·259 million.

Salisbury Plain and Otterburn

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which regiments that use multiple-launch rocket systems and AS90s are likely to train with them on (a) Salisbury plain and (b) Otterburn; where the regiments will be based; where their multiple-launch rocket systems and AS90s will be stored; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There is one AS90 regiment at Tidworth and one at Topcliffe. MLRS regiments are based at Catterick and Larkhill and it is intended that a further regiment will be based at Ouston from late 1995 when it returns from Germany. Equipment will be collocated with these regiments.

It is planned that they will conduct their AS90 and MLRS training at Salisbury plain, Otterburn and Catterick.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the remit for the environmental impact assessment for his Department's proposals for Otterburn; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements he is making for consultations with (a) statutory organisations, (b) voluntary organisations and (c) individuals concerning his Department's proposals for Otterburn; what are the stages of this consultation process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: It is our intention to appoint independent consultants in August to carry out a full environmental impact assessment in accordance with the provisions of Department of Environment circular 15/88, to consider the effects of our proposals for Otterburn. This is expected to take approximately four months to complete. As part of the EIA, the consultants will seek the views of the local planning authority, statutory bodies, and other interested parties. In addition, my officials will provide briefings to voluntary organisations. The formal consultation process is a matter for the local planning authority, after submission by my Department of a notice of proposed development.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to develop dry training at Otterburn in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: While the proposals which I announced on 23 June, Official Report, columns 250-51, will not involve an increase in dry training at Otterburn, the pattern of dry training carried out there is likely to change. In addition, we are currently considering our overall requirement for dry training in the United Kingdom.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to conduct a public inquiry into his Department's proposals for developments at Otterburn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department's proposals for the development of the Otterburn training area will be submitted to the local planning authority, for its consideration in accordance with the provisions of the Department of Environment circular 18/84. If the local planning authority raises objections to the proposed developments, the matter will be referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to determine whether a public inquiry should be held.

Military Training

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review has been conducted concerning the future military training requirements in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The structure and content of training for all three services is kept under constant review to ensure that it meets present and future operational requirements. For example, I announced on 7 July, Official Report, column 263, a wide review of how and where Army-sponsored training is conducted.

In addition, in accordance with recommendations contained in the 36th report of the Committee of Public Accounts dated 26 April 1993, my Department is carrying out a study to compare the requirement for Army training land with existing capacity. This study is due to be completed shortly.

Rocket Systems

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the regiments which use (a) AS90s and (b) multiple launch rocket systems; how many are attached to each regiment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The 1st Regiment Royal Horse Artillery and 3rd Regiment Royal Horse Artillery are equipped with AS90. Each regiment currently has 24 guns, which will rise to 32 guns in 1995. Only 24 guns will be manned during peace time for training.

The 5th Regiment Royal Artillery, 32nd Regiment Royal Artillery and 39th Regiment Royal Artillery are to be equipped with the multiple launch rocket system. Each regiment has 18 launchers.

McCarthy and Sons (Torquay)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if McCarthy and Sons (Torquay) Ltd. is eligible to participate in his Department's contracts.

Mr. Aitken: Provided that McCarthy and Sons, Torquay, meet the MOD's contract terms, including security requirements, there is no reason why the company should not be eligible to bid for MOD contracts.

F3 Tornados

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his letter of 22 June, when he expects to commence civil legal action against Brecom in relation to the Airwork damage to the F3 Tornados at RAF St. Athan.

Mr. Aitken: Work to investigate the damage caused by Airwork and to compile the technical and cost evidence necessary to support a claim is not yet completed. It will be some time therefore before the appropriate action to prosecute a claim for compensation can be commenced.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Sir John Blelloch's inquiry report was received by his Department.

Mr. Hanley: The report was received by officials on 1 July 1994.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when a copy of the report of Sir John Blelloch was sent to his Department's Police Federation for consultation purposes;

(2) if he will list those to whom the report of Sir John Blelloch has been circulated for consultation purposes since its receipt by his Department.

Mr. Hanley: Sir John Blelloch's report has been circulated widely both within my Department and within other interested Government Departments. Copies have also been sent to the Association of Chief Police Officers, to staff associations representing the MOD police including the Defence Police Federation and to trades unions representing the MOD guard service. These were provided on 14 July. Copies have also been placed in the Library of the House. Consultation on specific proposals will be undertaken in due course in the normal way.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if it is his intention in relation to the consultation timescale and procedure for the report and recommendations of Sir John Blelloch, to follow the practice of the Home Secretary in consulting on the report of Sir Patrick Sheehy in respect of allowing the Police Federation to be consulted fully prior to decisions being taken at ministerial level;

(2) if he will publish the report and recommendation of Sir John Blelloch into the future of his Department's police.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) on 14 July, Official Report, columns 760-61.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests have been received from his Department's Police Federation about advancing the consultative procedure in respect of the contents of the report and recommendations of Sir John Blelloch.

Mr. Hanley: The Defence Police Federation wrote to the Department on 4 July 1994 requesting an early copy of the report by Sir John Blelloch. It was provided with a copy of Sir John's report on 14 July 1994.

Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key performance targets have been set for the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Hanley: The Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency has been set the following key targets:

1. Review the assessment of Military Core Capability and Report by 1 July 1994.
2. Increase the Agency's efficiency by making 0·5 per cent. saving against 1993-94 outturn net operating costs.
3. Improve the percentage of mail moved by the MOD Mail Service that meets Quality of Service standards by 0·5 per cent. against target.
4. Complete Phase 2 of the DPCS Market Testing Plan.
5. Following the necessary consultations, implement the Mail 2000 recommendations, and report progress by 31 March 1995.

SCOTLAND

NHS Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest figures and list for each of the last four years by region the number of (a) doctors, (b) nurses, (c) midwives, (d) health visitors, (e) administration and clerical staff and (f) managers.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is shown in the tables. It should be noted that tables (c) and (d) are extracts from table (b).

Child Mortality Rates

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list child mortality rates for each assigned social class within each health board area.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: Mortality rates are not available. The table shows the number of children who died for each assigned social class within each health board area. Children whose parents' occupation is unknown are shown in the "not stated" column.

Redundant Hospitals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons the selling price of redundant national health service hospitals is not made publicly available after completion of the sale.

Mr. Stewart: In Scotland the selling price of NHS and other property is publicly available when the purchaser's title is recorded in the general register of sasines or the land register, as required by law. It is for the NHS body managing the transaction to decide, in the light of the circumstances, whether price details can be released at an earlier stage, bearing in mind the fact that information on property disposals may be commercially sensitive.

Police

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his intention to give evidence to the Home Office's review of police care and ancillary tasks; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Home Office review relates only to England and Wales. Further work will be undertaken by the Scottish Office, including consultation with interested parties in Scotland, once the Home Office review has been completed.

NHS Trust Hospitals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by wave (a) the number of non-executive directors of NHS trust hospitals and (b) the number of chairs of NHS trust hospitals, by salary band.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes were made to the allocations to any of the trusts, directly managed units or other areas in Lothian for capital building programmes or for revenue during the past eight months.

Mr. Lang: The information requested spans two financial years. Revenue allocations are subject to numerous revision by the management executive during the course of a financial year. The original 1993-94 revenue allocation to Lothian health board was £358·175 million. By November 1993 it had been adjusted to £401·554 million and by March 1994 stood at £406·533 million. The original 1994-95 allocation was £364·805 million and is currently £419·642 million.

Lothian health board's original 1993-94 capital allocation for its building programme, including provision for its directly managed units, was £24·429 million. Changes to the allocation by the management executive were limited to projects that had a total cost of more than £1 million. These accounted for £12·708 million of the 1993-94 capital allocation. By November 1993 and March 1994, that sub-allocation stood at £11·202 million and £10·002 million respectively.

The West Lothian NHS trust was the only trust in Lothian in 1993-94. Its opening capital was £3·080 million and its business plan income forecast was £63·639 million. At November 1993, there had been no change to the capital allocation and by 31 March 1994 the allocation was £2·896 million.

The 1994-95 allocations for all Lothian NHS trusts currently remain as notified to them on 8 February 1994.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes there were in the capital revenue allocations to the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh or to the priority services unit in Lothian in the past eight months.

Mr. Lang: The Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh and the Edinburgh priority services unit were directly managed units under Lothian health board until 1 April 1994. Lothian health board's initial 1993-94 capital allocation included specified project provision of £2·245 million for the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh and £4·065 million for the Edinburgh priority services unit. Lothian health board was responsible for the financial management of the specified projects, although allocation adjustments for underspends on projects with a total cost of more than £1 million were subject to Scottish Office approval. Details of the allocation changes for the Royal Infirmary and the priority services unit projects with a total cost of more than £1 million, as approved by the NHS executive, are set out in the table.

The 1994-95 capital allocations for both the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh NHS trust and Edinburgh Healthcare NHS trust currently remain at the levels notified to them by the Scottish Office on 8 February 1994.

Table to show changes to 1993-94 capital allocations for projects with a total cost of £1 million or more

Royal Edinburgh Ward Upgrade	0·765	1·235
Gogarburn Hospital	2·000	2·110
Royal Edinburgh Hospital	1·000	1·424

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the capital allocation for all trusts, directly managed units and other areas in Lothian for the financial years 1993-94 and 1994-95;

(2) when the capital building programme allocation to Lothian health board was determined for the financial years 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Lang: Lothian health board was notified of their capital building programme allocation for 1993-94 in a letter dated 20 December 1992, and a letter dated 17 December 1993 for 1994-95. The allocations for all other health boards were notified on the same dates.

The capital allocation letter for health boards covers their hospital building programme, equipment and information technology provision. The letters for NHS trusts, issued on 16 February 1993 and 8 February 1994 respectively, provided their overall external financing limit and included details of the capital provision used in calculating the limit.

The information requested on capital allocations is set out in the table.

1993-94 Allocations to:		Current 1994-95 Allocations
Lothian Health Board (Gross allocation)	24,429,000	4,969,000

East and Midlothian NHS Trust	—	1,368,000
Edinburgh Healthcare NHS Trust	—	5,416,000

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings took place between Geoffrey Scaife, chief executive of the health service in Scotland, and officials of Lothian health board this year; what were the dates and times of those meetings; if he will make available the minutes of those meetings; and what action was taken as a result of those meetings.

Mr. Lang: The chief executive of the NHS in Scotland meets regularly with representatives of all health boards, both individually and collectively in a variety of settings. Since the beginning of this year the chief executive has met Lothian health board representatives on six occasions to discuss a wide range of issues. Formal minutes of the meetings were not taken as a matter of course, any decision or action required being dealt with by subsequent correspondence.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the Treasury rules with regard to capital expenditure and revenue expenditure programmes in the health service in Scotland; and whether all expenditure by Lothian health board within the last eight months was within these rules.

Mr. Lang: The NHS in Scotland is subject, like other public sector bodies, to the relevant rules and guidance set out in "Government Accounting" a copy of which is in the Library. The expenditure of Lothian health board is subject to annual statutory audit which provides a check on its regularity and propriety. The board's annual accounts for 1993-94 have still to be audited.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish minutes of the meetings at which capital allocations to trusts, directly managed units and other areas were discussed between Lothian health board and the Scottish Office.

Mr. Lang: There were no formal meetings between the Scottish Office and Lothian health board to discuss the capital allocations to either the board and its directly managed units or the Lothian NHS trusts. Allocations are determined by the management executive on the basis of details submitted by the board and, in the case of NHS trusts, the capital proposals in their annual business plans. Account is taken of the relative service priorities for the NHS as a whole, individual health boards' purchasing intentions and agreed strategic objectives.

Shipping Services

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to (a) publish and (b) announce his response to the consultants' report on the future of shipping services to the northern and western isles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have recently received the report of KPMG Management Consulting on subsidies for shipping services in the highlands and islands and I am studying carefully its conclusions and recommendations. However, it is too early for me to say when I will be in a position to announce any decisions in response to the report. The report contains a considerable amount of commercially sensitive information which was made available to the consultants on a strictly confidential basis, and would not therefore be suitable for publication. I shall, however, give consideration as to whether it would be possible to publish the main findings and conclusions of the report without breaching commercial confidentiality.

Planning

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to publish his consultation paper on the review of the Scottish planning system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have today published a consultation paper on the review of the Scottish planning system. Copies will be placed in the House Libraries.

Under the banner of the citizens charter, my general aim is to stimulate discussion on ways in which the effectiveness, efficiency and responsiveness of the system can be improved. This is the first step in a wide-ranging review which will help to set the agenda for the development of the planning system in the years ahead.

The review will not address the underlying structure of the present system or the Government's proposals for local government reform in Scotland; its focus will be on matters of procedure and practice. In that context, my specific aim is to assess the adequacy of the decision-making process in terms of its openness, fairness, consistency, speed and accountability to all interests; the extent to which current procedures help or hinder that process; the degree to which development plans and development control promote development and conservation objectives and in so doing add to the quality of the natural and built environment; and the adequacy of the arrangements for monitoring the decision-making process and for measuring the achievement of objectives, targets and standards of service.

The consultation paper poses a number of questions to assist those who may wish to comment. However, there is no pre-determined agenda; the Government will welcome comments on any aspects of the system. Thereafter the outcome will be made public, and the Government will indicate how they propose to take matters forward.

I should make it clear that no significant changes will be introduced until after the reorganised authorities are firmly in place. However, the review is designed to pave the way for any longer-term changes that may be necessary to achieve the high standards now set by the citizens charter. That means a more responsive and efficient system to give the public, developers and Government alike confidence in the plan-making and decision-making process, in the quality of the outcomes, and in the standard of service that is being provided.

Mental Illness

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many former patients discharged from compulsory detention by way of (a) the Mental Welfare Commission exercising its powers under the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984, (b) appeals granted by a sheriff or (c) the Secretary of State accepting a recommendation by the Mental Welfare Commission, over the past seven years have been subsequently subjected to a compulsory detention order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 July 1994]: This information is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many cases during the past seven years of a patient having a restriction order placed upon his or her detention the Mental Welfare Commission has recommended to the Secretary of State that such an order be lifted; of these, how many were accepted by the Secretary of State; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 July 1994]: One. The Commission's recommendation was considered as part of the process which led to the patient's conditional discharge.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients have been discharged from compulsory detention by way of an appeal to a sheriff in each of the past seven years; in how many such hearings before a sheriff the patient was represented by a lawyer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 July 1994]: This information is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients have been discharged from compulsory detention by way of the Mental Welfare Commission exercising the appropriate power it has under the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984 in each of the past seven years; of such discharges, how many were brought about by a request from a patient to have his or her detention reviewed by the Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 July 1994]: The numbers of patients so discharged are as follows:

Year	Number
[1]1993-94	0
[1]1992-93	1
1991	2
1990	0
1989	5
1988	3
1987	5

[1] The Commission's annual report statistics are now produced on a financial year basis.

The Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland has no record of the number of these cases which were brought about by a request from a patient to have his or her detention reviewed.

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for which ailments electro-convulsive therapy is recommended; what guidelines are issued to hospitals and consultant psychiatrists concerning the use of electro-convulsive therapy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 July 1994]: Electro-convulsive therapy is most commonly used to treat severe intractable depressive illness. It is very occasionally used to treat acute schizophrenia.

ECT is covered by the consent to treatment provisions of the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984 and guidance on these requirements is contained in "Notes on the Act", in the "Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984 Code of Practice", which includes as an annexe guidance produced by the Mental Welfare Commission and in the NHS Executive's booklet "A Guide to Consent to Examination, Investigation, Treatment or Operation".

Guidelines on "The Practical Administration of ECT" were published by the Royal College of Psychiatrists in 1989. The observance of these guidelines is recommended in the training of all doctors administering this form of treatment.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what records are kept by the Scottish Office concerning the frequency of the employment of electro-convulsive therapy by hospitals and consultant psychiatrists in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 July 1994]: This information is not recorded centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice and guidance is normally given to a psychiatric patient or members or his or her family or others with an interest in his or her welfare concerning to the employment of electro-convulsive therapy and his or her right to refuse electro-convulsive therapy in favour of an alternative form of treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 July 1994]: The principles of the general law of consent to treatment for physical disorders apply to any proposed treatment for a voluntary patient's mental disorder, and the doctor is required to explain to the patient, before he signs a consent form, the nature, purpose and likely effects of the treatment, and why he should consent to it. In the case of electro-convulsive therapy, the explanation given should clearly indicate that the treatment can be refused and that the patient may withdraw his consent at any time, even before the first treatment is given. The doctor should also make himself available to answer any questions that the patient, or their carer, may have about the treatment. A leaflet produced by Royal College of Psychiatrists also provides answers to questions about ECT commonly asked by patients.

The position of detained patients is regulated by part X of the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984. In the case of ECT, the Act requires the consent of the patient and the certification by a medical practitioner—either the responsible medical officer or a practitioner appointed by the Mental Welfare Commission—that the patient is capable of understanding its nature, purpose and likely effects and has consented to it; or, alternatively, the certification by a medical practitioner appointed by the Mental Welfare Commission, other than the RMO, that the patient is not so capable but that, having regard to the likelihood of alleviating or preventing a deterioration in the patient's condition, the treatment should be given.

In certain circumstances ECT may be given without consent or a second opinion in cases of urgency, for example where it is immediately necessary to prevent a serious deterioration in the patient's condition, or to alleviate serious suffering or to prevent the patient from being a danger to himself or others.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that those psychiatric patients who have undergone electro-convulsive therapy over the past 20 years have suffered no long-term deleterious effects from such treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 July 1994]: Research by Weeks, Freeman and Kendell, 1980, found no long-term deleterious effects from electro-convulsive therapy.

Later research—Freeman and Cheshire, 1986; Benbow, 1988; Malcolm, 1989; and Cheshire, Freeman and Chiswick, 1991—indicated a high level of patient satisfaction with the results of treatment. The Royal College of Psychiatrists also reports that more than eight out of 10 patients respond well to ECT treatment, making it the most effective treatment for severe depression, and that most patients recover their ability to work and lead a productive life after their depression has been treated in this way.

A sub-group of the CRAG/SCOTMEG framework for action working group on mental illness is currently considering ECT and its report in the form of "good practice" guidelines is expected in the autumn.

Firearms (Deaths)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many murders were committed in Scotland in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and of these, how many persons were killed by (a) shotguns, (b) handguns and (c) other firearms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 July 1994]: The table details the number of recorded homicides in Scotland and shows the number of recorded homicides involving firearms, broken down by type of weapon use, 1990 to 1992.

	1990	1991	1992
Homicides	81	89	137
Homicides involving firearms of which:
(a) shotgun	0	3	5
(b) handgun	3	0	0
(c) other	0	4	1
Total	3	7	6

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people charged with causing the death of another person by the use of a firearm of any description in Scotland had authority to possess that firearm in each of the last three years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 July 1994]: Information on persons charged with causing the death of another person by the use of a firearm and the authority to possess a firearm is not collected centrally. However, information is available on homicides involving firearms recorded by the police and the authority of the accused to possess a firearm. The table details that information.

	1990	1991	1992
Homicides involving firearms	3	7	6
Cases where the accused held a valid firearm certificate	1	1	0

Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what occasions in the last 10 years he or a Minister in his Department has given a direction to civil servants to award a contract against the advice of the civil service; what was the subject matter of the contract and its value; and when it was awarded.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 July 1994]: Inquiries throughout my Departments have not identified any such occasion.

Health Service Properties

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of undertaking all the identified backlog in repairs and in maintenance of health service properties.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 July 1994]: The responsibility for management and maintenance of the health service estate in Scotland rests with provider units, and it is for them to make estimates of this kind. However, the latest annual survey estimate is that at 31 March 1993 the appropriate expenditure required to improve the physical condition of the essential estate was £270 million including backlog maintenance and other work.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 246

SESSION 1993–94

4th July—15th July 1994

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
